Between the dates of the general tariff act of March 2, 1861, and of the Revised Statutes, Congress had passed some sixty laws relating to duties on imports and their collection. Five of these, namely, two enacted in 1861, one in 1862, one in 1864, and another in 1872, may be classed as general tariff acts, because they covered a large class of articles. Neither of these in terms entirely repealed the previous ones, nor did Congress intend they should be altogether repealed. One overlapped the other or otherwise modified it, and so in 1872 reference was had to 1861 to decide what rates certain articles should pay. The system of continuous legislation was bad, but thus it was, and the necessity of going back to old laws was increased by the habit which had grown in Congress of generally imposing (at the end of certain enumerations) on all articles manufactured of specified material a prescribed rate of duty, unless the articles had been "otherwise provided for." This phrase made it necessary to ransack all previous laws to see if there was any such provision. With this explanation the comprehensive force of the following sentences in a circular of the Treasury Department to collectors of customs, dated August 21, 1874, (contained in his reply to the House,) interpreting the revision, becomes apparent. He says:

"Several clauses of the tariff acts of March 2, 1861, and July 14, 1862, which were at first supposed to be modified or repealed by the act of June 30, 1864, and subsequent acts, but which were revived at various times through decisions of the courts or of this Department, are decisively excluded from the present act, and therefore cease to have force after the date of its passage. Among these are, first, the rate of duty on certain descriptions of linens, namely, 'drills, coatings, brown holland, blay linens, damasks,' which, being names or descriptions mentioned in the acts of 1861 and 1862, were not repeated in the act of 1864; also a class of articles coming under the general designation of 'manufactures not otherwise provided for,' composed of mixed materials in part of cotton, silk, wool, or worsted, hemp, jute, or flax, the rate of duty imposed by these two acts being 35 per cent. ad valorem. Many fabrics have remained chargeable with duty under authority of this clause; but no such classification is contained in the act of June 22, 1874, all goods formerly so classed being now charged with duty according to their identity with, or assimilation to other defined classes."

If reference be now had to the report of Appraiser Darling, of New York, giving the classifications in his department before and after June 22, 1874, it will be seen that articles were thrown into new schedules, and rates of duty were enormously increased on manufactures of goat's hair, wool, cotton, silk, and mixed materials, by the exclusion from the revision of these laws of 1861 and 1862, universally held to be in force on December 1, 1873.

THE SIMILITUDE LAW OF 1842.

From such examination as I have given to the reports from the principal ports, it appears to me that, on a large portion of the articles, besides those generally designated as "textile fabrics," on which duties have been changed under the revision, the result has been chiefly accomplished by slight variations in the text of the law. Executive interpretation has no doubt overstrained these slight variations, but the foundation of the mischief is in the revision. This mischief might, nevertheless, have been remedied, if the Treasury had held fast in its execution of the new provisions to the general declaration of the revisers and of General BUTLER and Senator CONKLING, that no change of the old law was intended. But it did not, and one of the most potential instruments in working the confusion and injustice of which importers complain is the use which has been made of the twentieth section of the tariff law of August 30, 1842, which is contained in section 2499 of the revision.

During the twenty years before 1861 the three general tariff acts were those of 1842, 1846, and 1857. That of 1857 preserved substantially the system of schedules or enumerations in 1842, only reducing the rates of duty. These laws of 1842 and 1846 were, perhaps, the most comprehensive and best considered tariff enactments on the statute-books, in the sense of precise, commercial, and alphabetical designation of each article in separate schedules. To provide for any accidentally omitted article or any newly made fabric, the following section was inserted in the law of 1842:

"SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on each and every non-enumerated article which bears a similitude, either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied, to any enumerated article chargeable with duty the same rate of duty which is levied and charged on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before mentioned; and if any non-enumerated article equally resembles two or more enumerated articles, on which different rates of duty are chargeable, there shall be levied, collected and paid on such non-enumerated article the same rate of duty as is chargeable on the article which it resembles paying the highest duty; and on all articles manufactured from two or more materials the duty shall be assessed at the highest rates at which any of its component parts may be chargeable."

Under the laws of 1846 and 1857, which continued the system of 1842, the courts very properly held that this section was in force, not to impose a new rate of duty, but to give a rule for ascertaining the true rate on an article neither specially provided for by name in those laws nor falling within the clauses for non-enumerated articles, because so resembling an enumerated article as to be governed by the section. The single inquiry was whether an article was enumerated. But the tariff legislation during the rebellion was, much of it, necessarily hasty, and adopted to meet a pressing need for revenue. No one law repealed, like that of 1842, all previous laws, but as I have said before, the tariff acts for eleven years overlapped, and were interlaced one with another. This is obvious to any one who carefully studies the legislation of 1861, 1862, 1864, and 1872. Those laws attempted to classify articles in separate sections, according to the materials of their manufacture, whether of iron, steel, glass, cotton, wool, or silk. And after enumerating articles specially, to the extent which the power or convenience of Congress or antagonizing interests therein permitted, there would be a concluding clause at a different rate of duty for a general enumeration of articles of a specified material of manufacture "not otherwise provided for." To ascertain the intention of Congress under this system of legislation since 1861, the aid of the section referred to in the law of 1842 was rarely invoked, because there was rarely an article not either specifically or generally enumerated. And the injustice of invoking it can be made apparent by a reference to the law known as "the little tariff bill," which has just passed Congress, and which directs that manufactures not specially provided for shall pay 60 per cent. if containing not more than seventy-five parts in value of silk, but 50 per cent. if containing more than that of pure silk. Here is an enumeration of the two classes of manufacture. But the last clause of this law of 1842 and of section 2499 of the Revised Statutes says:

"And on all articles manufactured from two or more materials the duty shall be assessed at the highest rates at which any of its component parts may be chargeable." The rate for pure silk is 60 per cent., and under this clause "the little tariff bill," which only imposes 50 per cent. on certain proportions of cotton and silk, would be nullified.

If reference be had to the excellent and searching criticisms of the collector of the port of Baltimore on the practical confusion and injustice which the sudden application of this "similitude law" of 1842 has worked, further comments of mine will be unnecessary. They are on pages 48 and 49 of the report of the Treasury. The application of this "doctrine of assimilation," before permitting the positive clauses of the law to operate, the collector of Baltimore regards as nullifying the intentions of Congress, and as intrusting to customs examiners and appraisers a vague and arbitrary power, impolitic and never intended. It is this similitude test which has created a part of the confusion respecting Japanese silks and the different rates at the different ports on similar articles; and it is plain to see that it will be next to impossible for any Secretary of the Treasury to make rates of duty uniform from Maine to California on textile fabrics, where the inquiry is as to similitude either in material, quality, texture, or uses.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE CHANGES.

I am not unmindful of the great, the almost insurmountable, difficulties which any one would encounter who undertook to condense and reproduce last June the subsisting laws on the customs revenue. They were so numerous; they extended over so many years; the repealed and unrepealed were so interlaced and interlocked; and the true interpretation of many of them was so doubtful, that equally intelligent and upright men could not well fail to differ thereon, and it is perhaps surprising that no more dissatisfaction with the revision exists. And if the revision changed the language of the law, the executive could not well disobey the revision, although I think the Treasury would have been sustained if it had refused to vary the rates it imposed on the 1st day of December, 1873. Congress certainly cannot fairly be blamed, nor do I think that any member of the revising committee of the House was aware that the verbal changes made, or the dropping of certain statutes, would, in practical administration, produce the results we see. Whether any one else inspired changes with such an intent is not so certain. There is certainly much method in some of the alterations. Nor do I impute any blame to the present Secretary of the Treasury, although I am free to say that, in my view, the person who is referred to by Mr. POLAND (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 19, 1874, page 26) as assisting the committee in behalf of the Treasury should not have been afterward selected to put the law in operation and interpret the interpretation.

Having first entered the House of Representatives in May, 1841, as a member from New York City, I have seen and had experience enough since then in public affairs to make me tolerant in criticism of those charged with the responsibilities of government, who strive in good faith honestly to discharge their obligations. It is therefore with no possible purpose to express any censure of Secretary Bristow that I say, that in my opinion the system of administration of that part of the revenue department which decides what rates of duty Congress has imposed needs to be thoroughly changed. It is a tremendous prerogative of the Executive to say what rates our confused statutes levy and preserve uniformity at all the ports; and yet the Secretary cannot in person, under the present arrangements, decide each of the perplexing questions of statute construction. He delegates the power to a subordinate, and he generally a mere clerk, who decides without hearing argument on either side. For the Government it may be safe to inflict the highest rate in all cases of doubt, but that may be very unjust to the importer. And yet there must be in Washington a unit of responsibility and decision for the different ports. My own observation and impression are, that since I first entered Congress there has been too much drawing to Washington in this matter of labor and care from the several ports, which has dwarfed the collectors, who are under the law primarily responsible in this business to Congress and the country. The collector is by statute, and should be in fact, the chief customs officer of the port. The whole expensive machinery of his office is maintained only to levy and collect the duties on imports prescribed by Congress. Section 2521 of the Revised Statutes describes a part of his functions thus:

"To receive the entries of all ships or vessels, and of the goods, wares, or merchandise imported in them.

"To estimate * * * the amount of the duties payable thereupon, indorsing such amounts upon the respective entries.

"To receive all moneys paid for duties, and take all bonds for securing the payment thereof."

He (section 2501) designates the goods to be appraised; to him the appraiser reports; if he be dissatisfied, he can order another examination; and if the appraisers disagree, he decides between them. He is responsible, primarily, for all classifications for duty. Under sections 2931 and 3011 his decision, as to rate and amount, is final, unless there be an appeal to Washington or a suit in court. The correct interpretation of tariff laws is thus his first and one of his highest obligations. He is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate to do this work, and he should neither delegate it to deputies nor subordinates at his own port or allow it to pass out of his hands into those of clerks in Washington, unless in conflict with collectors at other ports, where the personal judgment of the Secretary should interpose. The collectors at the several ports are, as a rule, competent men; they are in daily contact with merchants, and clerks in Washington are not; and there should be no subordinates in these matters of statute construction between them and the Secretary.

OTHER REMEDIES AND REFORMS.

For any increased exactions above those levied in December, 1873, which are the result of erroneous executive interpretations of the revision, the courts are of course open; but for those made by Congress, even unintentionally, the courts can afford no relief. I introduced into the House at the beginning of this session a joint resolution, which is now before the Committee on Ways and Means, and which hereafter would confine the Executive to the rates the Treasury levied a year ago last December. It would bring order out of the existing confusion, and probably give satisfaction, but only temporarily; for the whole system needs immediate overhauling. There is now before the Ways and Means Committee a bill from the Senate which looks in that direction. The amount of money which the Government requires from customs the executive ought to be able to estimate with reasonable certainty, and then provision should be immediately made by law, on conference with the different chambers of commerce in the country, for a commission to take up the work of preparing a tariff levying that amount, and machinery for its prompt, economical, and satisfactory collection. In this commission there is needed the best facilities in the country for acquiring, testing, collating, and reproducing facts and statistics for the information of Congress. It should be a commission of a few among the best business men in Congress or out, whether merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, or officials; and, like important parliamentary commissions in England, should call before it and examine every one capable of affording assistance by his information and experience; and no element of partisan politics should be permitted to distort or thwart the single inquiry how the needed money can be best raised from imports. Facts and figures are what is first needed, and not arguments; and to obtain these facts and figures in the form of evidence the country should gladly make an adequate expenditure of time and money.

Very respectfully,

FERNANDO WOOD.

To the PRESIDENT CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
New York City.

NEW YORK, February 5, 1875.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 29th ultimo, as published in the New York papers and addressed to the president of the Chamber of Commerce, in reference to the construction and administration of the laws for the collection of the customs, was submitted for the action of the chamber at the meeting held yesterday, and referred to its special committee on "revenue reform" for consideration and report.

At the same meeting Mr. Jackson S. Shultz offered the following resolution, which, on being seconded by Mr. Elliot C. Cowdin, was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the thanks of this chamber are due, and are hereby tendered, to Hon. FERNANDO WOOD for his able and exhaustive statement of the unauthorized changes made in the tariff under the guise of codifying the laws pertaining to the collection of the revenue."

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

GEORGE WILSON,
Secretary.

Hon. FERNANDO WOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS obtained the floor, and yielded to Mr. DAWES, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, being House bill No. 4680, to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I ask consent to have printed an amendment I propose to offer to the bill now pending in Committee of the Whole. No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. GUNCKEL of Ohio, Mr. THORNBURGH of Tennessee, and Mr. HUNTON of Virginia, as the conferees of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 583, approving the action taken by the Secretary of War under the act approved July 15, 1867.

PAWNEE LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. AVERILL, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 4683) to provide for the sale of Pawnee Indian lands in the State of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

HOMESTEADS FOR INDIANS.

Mr. AVERILL also reported from same committee a bill (H. R. No. 4684) to enable Indians in certain cases to enter public lands under the homestead laws of the United States; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

OUTRAGE ON STEAMER PHILO PARSONS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to this House a copy of the report made to the Secretary of War by Major-General John A. Dix, concerning the outrages committed in Detroit River, on Lake Erie, on the steamer Philo Parsons or other vessels during the rebellion.

CHARLES H. SMITH.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 4478) to relieve Charles H. Smith, M. D., of Virginia, of all political disabilities be taken up and passed. The bill is accompanied by the usual petition.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BURROWS: The petition of citizens of Saint Joseph, Michigan, for an appropriation to extend the north pier at the harbor of Saint Joseph, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts: Memorial of David R. Dillon, of Savannah, Georgia, praying that the Secretary of the Treasury be made a party to a case now pending against him, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee: The petition of 350 citizens of East Tennessee, for an appropriation to remove obstructions from the Clinch River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: Memorial of J. H. Merrill, of Washington, District of Columbia, in relation to his design for a building for the Congressional Library, to the Committee on the Library.

Also, remonstrance of Washington B. Williams and others, of the District of Columbia, against a charter to the Corcoran Square Market Company, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DARRALL: The petitions of C. A. Frazee, François Simein, and Raymond Deshotels, of Opelousas, Saint Landry Parish, Louisiana, to file their cotton claims before the Court of Claims severally, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of citizens of Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and also for the passage of the currency bill submitted by Hon. W. D. KELLEY providing for the issue of 3.65 convertible bonds, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOFLAND: The petition of citizens of Wilmington, Delaware, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the same committee.

By Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina: Resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, asking an appropriation for a post-office, custom-house, and United States court-house building at New Bern, North Carolina, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. VANCE: A paper relating to the application of Wiley G. Woody, to be restored to the pension-rolls, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 12, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4681) in relation to a cemetery at York, Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 3782) for the relief of Sewall B. Corbett—to the Committee on Claims.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHOLERA EPIDEMIC IN 1873.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed ten thousand extra copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Army and the supervising surgeon of the marine-hospital service upon the cholera epidemic of 1873, five thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, two thousand copies for the use of the Senate, two thousand copies for the use of the Surgeon-General of the Army, and one thousand copies for the use of the supervising surgeon of the marine-hospital service.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, accompanying copies of papers relating to the military reservation at Point San José, California; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, transmitting in obedience to law a copy of the report of Major William E. Merrill, of the Engineer Corps, relative to the survey and estimate for the extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal from Cumberland, Maryland, to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the credentials of Hon. AMBROSE E. BURNSIDE, chosen by the Legislature of Rhode Island a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1875; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT. I present two petitions from citizens of Pennsylvania, who represent that they are largely interested as owners and agents in steam-vessel property; that the present steamboat law, approved February 28, 1871, is exacting and burdensome in many particulars, without providing the security for life and property claimed for it; and they therefore pray for its repeal or amendment. They state that as the bill now pending has been carefully prepared, with a view of affording protection to the public as well as relief to the owners, they ask for its passage. As that bill is before the committee, I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT also presented a petition of citizens of Logan, Mifflin County, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to extend aid for the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented memorials of citizens of Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, and Mifflin County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the memorial of T. C. Coleman, John Sullivan, and other citizens of Louisville, Kentucky, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented the memorial of Rev. Charles D. Andrews and J. Edwin Amos, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the abolition of the navy-yard at the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SPENCER presented a memorial of the Tuscaloosa Board of Industries of the State of Alabama, asking an appropriation of $151,000 for the improvement of the navigation of the Warrior River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SARGENT. I present the petition of Juan de Toro, who states that for two years past he has been engaged in compiling an index of the grants of Mexico made in California and in the Territories; that this index is very carefully made and is very useful, and he desires an appropriation that it may be printed and he be compensated for his labors in this behalf. I can see myself that an index which is well verified may be of great advantage to the Government in eliminating fraudulent claims from among those that may be offered, but I do not know the character of this work. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, presented the memorial of Joseph P. Parsons, and other residents of Seymour, Connecticut, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties upon foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the common council of the city of Hartford, Connecticut, in favor of an appropriation for continuing the improvement at the mouth of the Connecticut River in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Lemuel W. Serrell, Solicitor of Patents, asking for an addition to section 59 of the patent laws; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present a petition of a large number of citizens of Nebraska, which, after setting forth the evils of intemperance, asks an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of all intoxicating liquors, except for mechanical and medicinal purposes, to take effect on the 1st of January, 1876, or as soon thereafter as possible. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of citizens of Utica, Ohio, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee, the removal of internal taxes, and asking the repeal of the act of 1872 reducing the duties on certain imports 10 per cent.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented four petitions signed by citizens of the county of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, praying that aid may be extended to the Texas Pacific Railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented the memorial of John Roach, protesting against the cancellation of the contract for carrying the semi-monthly mail between San Francisco and China and Japan; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1093) for the relief of Reuben Goodrich, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 45) to grant the right of way through the public lands to the Canyonville and Galesville Road Company, in the State of Oregon, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 832) providing for the adjudication and issue of patents in mission-land cases in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommended the bill (H. R. No. 3713) granting a pension to Sarah S. Cooper, reported it without amendment and submitted a supplemental report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2170) for the relief of Timothy D. Crook, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a petition of brick-makers of the District of Columbia, praying to be paid for bricks furnished to the District, either in currency or bonds salable at par, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of clergymen of the District of Columbia, praying exemption of church property from taxation, reported a bill (S. No. 1291) to exempt certain property from taxation in the District of Columbia; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SPENCER. If there is no objection, I would like to have this bill acted upon this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. The highest charity in the world is for churches to pay taxes like other people.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would like to ask the Senator from Alabama whether the bill exempts the ground on which churches stand and all church property from taxation?

Mr. SPENCER. It only exempts the ground on which they stand. Mr. CLAYTON. Does it exempt all church property? I should like to know about that.

Mr. SPENCER. Only the church buildings and the ground on which they stand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 420) to amend the act entitled "An act for the restoration to homestead entry and to market of certain lands in Michigan," approved June 10, 1872, and for other purposes, to report the same back with a recommendation that the Senate concur in the House amendment, and also recommending a verbal alteration in the text of the bill, to which I presume there will be no objection, changing the number of a section of land. I will not ask the Senate to consider it now if there is any objection. Perhaps it had better go on the Calendar.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. INGALLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4478) to relieve Charles H. Smith, M. D., of Richmond, Virginia, of all political disabilities; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3780) to relieve the political disabilities of Robert Tansill, of Prince William County, and Marcellus P. Christian, of Lynchburg, Virginia.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. No. 588) approving the action taken by the Secretary of War under the act approved July 15, 1870, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEWIS B. GUNCKEL of Ohio, Mr. JACOB M. THORNBURG of Tennessee, and Mr. EPPA HUNTON of Virginia, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1292) to quiet titles to all lands entered under provisions of the homestead law entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, and laws amendatory thereto, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1293) to secure and promote justice in the Navy and amendatory to certain acts relating to the Navy, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, is there any further morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business seems to be concluded, and the Committee on Railroads is entitled to the residue of the morning hour.

Mr. CLAYTON. A few days ago the President's message on Arkansas affairs was called up, and during the pendency of the question it went over at the end of the morning hour. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that question.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, is the morning business through?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is through, and the Committee on Railroads is entitled to the residue of the morning hour according to the order of the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON. I want to raise the point of order that was raised yesterday morning. Yesterday morning on a similar occasion a motion was made to proceed to the consideration of some other business, and I think the Chair decided that the Senate could by a vote proceed to the consideration of other business than the business of the committee called under the rule. The Chair will recollect that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] raised that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To raise that question, the Senator from Arkansas moves to postpone the present and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the President's message in relation to Arkansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point that that is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont makes the point that the motion is not in order. The Chair will submit that question to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My point of order is that the order which we adopted respecting devoting the morning hour to the introduction of bills and resolutions to committees in order is one of the standing orders of the Senate, and no majority of the Senate or anything except unanimous consent can set it aside until it is repealed in the regular way. It is just as binding upon us as the order for reading the Journal or for the reception of reports and so on. It is a rule of the Senate, no matter by what name we call it. It is what the Senate has agreed upon as the method of conducting its business. If Senators do not like it, let them give a day's notice and set it aside if they can; but it is unjust to the committees, it is unjust to this little morning hour which we ought to have, to say that a majority of the Senate can set it aside and go to something else. After one o'clock it is perfectly in order to make such a motion, we all know; but until then I am sure it is not.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think under the ruling of the Chair yesterday this motion would be in order; but I do not want to antagonize this motion with the business of the Committee on Railroads. I therefore withdraw the motion for the present.

PORTLAND, DALLES AND SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Railroads has the remainder of the morning hour.

Mr. STEWART. I have not been here during the session attending the meetings of the committee. There are, however, some bills which a majority of the committee reported at the last session. The first one on the Calendar is Senate bill No. 331. That bill I am not in favor of, though it was reported by a majority of the committee. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] at that time was a member of the committee and reported in favor of it, and I suppose he will take charge of the bill.

Mr. KELLY. I ask that the bill be considered.

The bill (S. No. 331) providing for the construction of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad and Telegraph and for the performance of all Government service free of charge was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Chief Clerk commenced the reading of the amendment reported by the Committee on Railroads as a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me it is hardly worth while to read that bill. It is a subsidy bill guaranteeing construction bonds at the rate of 5 per cent. interest for so much per mile. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. MITCHELL. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio to not pre-judge the bill in advance before he has heard it read, before he knows what it is, before he has heard any explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw the motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the motion for the moment. I have read this bill; I have heard enough of it read already to know that the Senate of the United States will not pass the bill, and it is only wasting the morning hour. I appeal to the Senator himself. It is utterly idle for us to enter upon a guarantee of construction bonds at any rate per mile, whatever is mentioned. We know very well the Senate will not pass it. Why waste the morning hour when we have business pressing on us? Now, in order to test the sense of the Senate—

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will let the Senator explain his bill a moment, and then I will submit the motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not wish to explain it until it is read. I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading will be continued.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps it is just as well to spend the morning hour in this way as any other; but this is a kind of bill that there is no use in considering, for it cannot be passed.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to ask the Senator if this bill guarantees construction bonds at 5 per cent.?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move, then—

Mr. MITCHELL. Allow me to answer the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Government of the United States to-day and for a number of years past has been paying out of the Treasury of the United States in money every year, as shown by the records of the Departments, about $350,000 for the transportation of the mails and other Government transportation over this identical line. This bill simply provides that the sum of $280,000 of that amount, less than the whole amount now being paid by the Government for its transportation by some $70,000, shall be appropriated in aid of the construction of this road. That is all there is of this bill.

I will state further, if the Senator will allow me, that this bill has been thoroughly considered at the last session of the present Congress not only by the Committee on Railroads of the Senate but by the Committee on Railroads of the House; that it has been thoroughly examined, criticised, amended, and reported to the two Houses of Congress, and they do not regard it as a subsidy to a railroad. It is not, as a matter of fact, a subsidy to a railroad. I am willing here, Mr. President, to say that if the Senator from Ohio is the Senate of the United States, then this bill cannot pass at this session. But I think that common courtesy at least, if nothing else, from the honorable Senator from Ohio would prevent him from rising in his seat and interrupting the reading of a bill that has been reported by a committee of the Senate and reported favorably. I say, without any discourtesy to the honorable Senator from Ohio, that I think common courtesy to the representatives from Oregon here, common courtesy to this Senate, common courtesy to a people that to-day occupy a territory larger in extent than all of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Ohio combined; a people that to-day ship to the port of Liverpool more wheat per capita by five times than all the wheat-growing States of the Mississippi Valley—common courtesy would require that the bill at least should be allowed to be read. I think, sir, it comes in very bad taste, to say the least, to-day from the honorable Senator to interrupt the reading of the bill and undertake to speak for the Senate of the United States and say that they will not pass a bill of this kind, and this, too, before they know what it is.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask that the reading of this bill be continued; that at least that much courtesy be shown to the representatives upon this floor of a people who are to-day cut off from all railroad communication, and the only State in the United States to-day that has not railroad connection with the rest of the States. And the honorable Senator interrupts the reading of the bill before the Senate has time to know what the proposition is, and says it is a subsidy bill. I undertake to say to the honorable Senator and the Senate that it is not a subsidy bill, within the odious signification of that term—a term that has odium attached to it doubtless by reason of improvident legislation heretofore in the interest of grasping railroad corporations. This is not the character of the bill. Therefore I ask that at least common courtesy and decent respect be shown to the consideration of a bill that has received the respect and attention of an honorable committee of this Senate and that has been reported favorably by that committee.

Again, Mr. President, I cannot see why the honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands should interpose his objection and attempt to arrest the consideration of this bill at this particular time. I do not understand that precisely. Permit this bill to be considered, and then if it is a subsidy bill within the odious signification of that term as applied to legislation in the interest of railroads, vote it down, for God's sake; but do not attempt to arrest the consideration of a bill in advance and say that the Senate is not going to pass any such bill. I undertake to say that that is not the character of this bill. I undertake to say that this is a bill in the interest not only of national development but in the interest of economy, a bill in the interest of retrenchment, and a bill that the Senate of the United States ought to pass if they have any regard for the two great interests of national development and retrenchment in the disbursement of the Government funds.

Then I ask, Mr. President, and I hope the Senate will consent to give at least a reasonable time to-day to the consideration of this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the amendment will be continued.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I intended to move that the bill lie on the table; but it is not my desire to deprive the Senate of the eloquence undoubtedly in store on this measure, and therefore, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to allow the reading to be concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say a word only for the benefit of my friend from Oregon, who thinks I did him a discourtesy when I intended to do him a great kindness. I assure him that I did not desire to cut him off. Indeed, he spoke by my courtesy, and therefore he ought not to have arraigned me for a want of courtesy. I made a motion to lay this bill on the table in the ordinary way, and finding that the Senator desired to speak to it, I withdrew that motion to enable him to speak.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no desire to speak. I do not care to speak on this bill. I want it considered by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, having disclaimed any want of courtesy to my friend, I will state that I had read this bill before; it was up before the Senate on a former occasion, and I knew what it was and nearly every Senator here knew something about it. It provides for the construction of a line of narrow-gauge railroad, as it is called, seven hundred miles long, from some point on the Union Pacific to Portland, Oregon. The amount of guarantee is $8,000 a mile. The bonds that will be issued under this act, if it should be passed, will amount to $5,600,000. It provides for interest at the rate of 5 per cent. for ten years on the construction bonds of the company, so that the amount that will be paid by the Government of the United States to aid in the construction of this road will be $2,800,000. It is therefore purely a subsidy, and nothing more; a guarantee of bonds to the amount of $5,600,000, with interest on them for ten years, amounting to $2,800,000.

When I said that the Senate of the United States would not in the present condition of our finances enter into such a guarantee, I said what I believed was generally known; I said what I hoped had been tested by the sense of the Senate. All I did was in kindness to the committee that had this bill in charge, because it is perfectly manifest that the Senate cannot pass a subsidy bill involving the credit of the Government to the amount of $5,600,000 in one hour or anything like it. This rule was intended to enable committees having charge of bills an opportunity to present those that were not likely to lead to objection or discussion, so that we might clear the Calendar of what are called unobjectionable cases. But instead of that, when the Committee on Railroads are called, they bring before us a bill that is opposed by the chairman of the committee, who says he is against it, a bill that contains a subsidy of $5,600,000; and the Senator from Oregon seems to take it as an offense when I interrupt the reading of the bill, in order to invite the committee to go on and present other bills that they no doubt have in their charge which are not likely to lead to discussion. But as I find my friend from Oregon is very anxious for the consideration of this bill, I am perfectly willing that its consideration should go on.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understood the Senator from Oregon to state that this bill had been reported favorably from the Committee on Railroads at the present session.

Mr. MITCHELL. At the last session. "At the present Congress," I think I said. That is what I intended to say.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It was reported last May, I see. No such bill has been reported from that committee this session, though they have had a number before them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will close what I have to say by stating that if the Committee on Railroads think it best to spend this morning hour, the only one that will be given them for some time, in discussing this bill, I have no objection; but it seems to me it would be wiser and better to take a test vote at once on the bill and pass it from our consideration and then let them call up the other bills they have in charge; but I will not interfere with their management of their own bills.

Mr. KELLY. I do think the committee should have been permitted to go on and consume the morning hour, and if necessary any extension of time that they might desire to give this bill a fair consideration. The Senator from Ohio will bear witness that neither my colleague nor myself have obtruded much of our speaking upon the Senate during this session of Congress or the last. I would further say that scarcely any measure in which Oregon has a deep interest has been considered by the Senate. Now, is it asking too much if we simply desire this one bill to have a full and fair consideration before the Senate? We intend to be as brief as possible, not to consume any portion of the time of the Senate except what is absolutely necessary to present before this body a measure in which, as I said before, the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington and the Territory of Idaho have a deep interest. I think this ought to be accorded to us; and not only the rest of the morning hour but an extension of time ought to be allowed to give it consideration. When it is known how little Oregon has received heretofore, when it is known how little has been appropriated for public improvements, for the improvement of its harbors and its rivers and its fortifications, I think we ought to have something done now.

So far from this being a subsidy, I think it will appear when a proper investigation of the matter is had that every year we are paying more to carry the mails and transport military supplies and transport Indian supplies, than the annual payment to this railroad would be under the bill.

The Senator from Ohio mistakes another thing. The bill does not guarantee the payment of the bonds—

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say that. I said it guaranteed the payment of interest for ten years.

Mr. KELLY. It will be $280,000 a year, and in consideration of that guarantee of the payment of $280,000 this railroad company propose to carry the United States mails, not for ten years, but for all time, to do all the transportation of the Government free from all cost, free from all charge, and in perpetuity. So far from being a loser, the Government will be a great gainer.

But, as I said, I do not desire now to debate the provisions of the bill. I only say that we ought to have at least a fair consideration for this bill, and when it is properly before the Senate then I will explain its bearing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the amendment of the Committee on Railroads.

The Chief Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the bill reported by the committee, as follows:

That the Portland, Dalles and Salt-Lake Railroad, extending from a point on the Union Pacific or Central Pacific Railroad not farther east than Ogden nor farther west than Kelton, in the Territory of Utah, to Portland, in the State of Oregon, is hereby declared a military and post road; and the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, by its own cars, appropriate for the service and approved by the Postmaster-General, and with its own rolling-stock, equipment, and management, without fee or reward, except as hereinafter mentioned, shall forever transport the United States mail, Army and Indian supplies, troops and munitions of war of every kind; and shall transmit all dispatches upon its telegraph line for the United States Government free of charge.

SEC. 2. That the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all the necessary draws, culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, turn-outs, stations, and watering-places; and all other appurtenances, including furniture and rolling-stock, equal in all respects to railroads of the first class when prepared for business, with rails of the T or angle iron, and upon the narrow-gauge plan, three feet in width; with a telegraph line, constructed in a substantial manner, to be operated along the line of the said railroad. And the said company shall commence the work on such road within one year from the approval of this act, and complete the same within five years thereafter.

SEC. 3. That in consideration of the services herein agreed to be performed by the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, the United States guarantee, as hereinafter expressed, the payment of interest, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum in gold coin, payable half-yearly on the 1st days of January and July in each year, for the period of ten years, upon the construction bonds of said company, to the amount of $8,000 only, for each and every mile of the main line of the said railroad, not including side-tracks. And for that purpose, and as evidence thereof, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be indorsed said guarantee of interest on behalf of the United States upon the construction bonds of said corporation, to the extent mentioned in this section, for not exceeding in the whole seven hundred miles of single track from its terminal point, as the same shall be established upon the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, or the Central Pacific Railroad, as hereinafter stated, to the city of Portland, its western terminus.

SEC. 4. That whenever and as often as the said corporation shall have completed a section of its road of not less than twenty-five miles, it shall report such fact to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall thereupon cause an examination of the same to be made by three commissioners to be appointed by him, who shall be paid for their services at the expense of said corporation; and if it shall appear by the report of said commissioners that such section has been completed substantially in accordance with the requirements of this act, then the Secretary of the Interior shall report that fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon cause the said guarantee of interest to be indorsed on an amount of the above-described bonds of the said company equal to the said sum of $8,000 per mile on such completed section; and shall deliver the same to the lawful agent, attorney, or representative of said company. The said construction bonds shall be made payable by the said company in the city of New York at a specified time, not more than twenty years from the date thereof, with coupons attached for the half yearly interest, which shall also be made payable in the city of New York. All coupons attached to said bonds so indorsed and delivered, the time for the payment of which shall have elapsed before such delivery, shall be canceled and preserved, and the guarantee of interest on the part of the United States shall only commence with the half yearly payment next after the indorsement and delivery of the said bonds to the said corporation at the rate aforesaid. No indorsement or delivery of such bonds shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the last two sections of twenty-five miles each of the said main line of railroad until it shall appear from the report of said commissioners that the same shall be completed according to the requirements of this act; and that effectual railroad connection has been made by said company, as herein proposed, from the Union Pacific or the Central Pacific Railroad to the city of Portland: Provided, however, That if the said company shall first construct those portions of its railroad known as the Portage Links, around the Cascade Falls, and the Dalles of the Columbia, and complete the same before any other portion of the said road along the Columbia River, so as to facilitate navigation and lessen the expenses of transporting freight and passengers on said river, then and in that case it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, upon an application of the said company, to cause an examination of the same to be made by the commissioners, as herein provided; and if it shall appear by their report that either of those portions of said road has been completed as required by this act, then the Secretary of the Interior shall report that fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon cause the said guarantee of interest to be indorsed on an amount of the above-described bonds equal to the said sum of $8,000 per mile of completed road over either of said portages, although the portion so constructed may not be equal to a section of twenty-five miles.

SEC. 5. That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the said corporation from issuing and disposing of its bonds in accordance with the powers granted to it by the State of Oregon by an act dated October 15, 1872, or any act amendatory thereof; but all such bonds and the mortgages, trust deeds, or other securities given to secure the payment thereof, shall, in all cases, be subordinate to the rights and powers herein reserved to the United States. And the services to be rendered by the said railroad and telegraph line for the United States Government shall inhere in and become a part of the corporate existence of the said company, and shall be a lien upon and attach to the said railroad, its road-bed, rolling stock, and equipments, and to the said telegraph line. And such services shall be performed by the said corporation, its assigns and successors, whether such transfer or succession be made by voluntary act of said corporation, by act of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, by sale under process of any court of competent jurisdiction, or by any other form of legal adjudication whatsoever.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to see that the said bonds be not indorsed and delivered as hereinbefore provided until it shall be made to appear that there are no liens of any kind, by mortgage, trust deed, or otherwise, upon any section of completed road, excepting such as expressly recognize the priority of right in the United States to have the services performed as specified in this act; and the United States shall in no event be liable for any part of the principal of said bonds; and the performance by the corporation of the services stipulated in this act shall be deemed to be a full payment of all claims of the United States for reimbursement of any sums paid as interest as aforesaid; and in case of refusal or failure to perform such services by the said corporation for the period of six months, the said corporation, its successors or assigns, shall forthwith become liable to repay to the United States all sums of money paid by them, after deducting a reasonable compensation for any services actually performed; and the United States shall have power to bring actions or suits in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon against said corporation, its successors or assigns, to enforce such repayment by judgment or decree and execution thereon, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party; and the obligation to perform said services in the future shall, notwithstanding the said judgment, decree, and execution, remain in full force and effect against the said corporation, its successors and assigns.

SEC. 7. That if any officer, agent, or employee of the said corporation, its successors or assigns, shall willfully refuse to transport the United States mails, Army or Indian supplies, troops or munitions of war, over its railroad, or transmit any dispatches over its telegraph line, after the United States shall be entitled to have such services performed as specified in this act, such officer, agent, or employee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in any United States district court having jurisdiction of the offense, be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months.

SEC. 8. That the said company shall not unjustly discriminate in favor of or against any person or corporation in its charges for the transportation of persons or property over the said railroad, or dispatches over the said telegraph line; nor in favor of or against any particular town or place on the line of said railroad; nor make any excessive charges or other undue use of the powers and privileges hereby granted to the said company.

SEC. 9. That the said company shall annually report a condensed statement showing its net earnings, 25 per cent. of which, after the payment of interest due by the said corporation upon its bonds, shall be immediately invested in United States interest-bearing bonds, and the same shall constitute a sinking fund with which to redeem at maturity the principal of its first-mortgage bonds.

SEC. 10. That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad Company accept the same, upon the condition that if the said company make any breach in the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for one year, in such case the United States may at any time, by Congress, do any and all acts necessary to insure a speedy completion of said railroad.

SEC. 11. That the acceptance of the terms and conditions of this act by the said company shall be signified in writing under its corporate seal, duly executed pursuant to a vote of its stockholders first had and obtained; which acceptance shall be made within ninety days after the approval of this act, and shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 12. That in order to effectually enforce the rights and privileges specified herein, Congress may at any time add to, alter, or amend this act.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, the morning hour is so near its close that it will be impossible for me to present this bill as it ought to be and as it must be presented for the proper consideration of the Senate. I therefore ask the same privilege which has been accorded to other committees; that is, an extension of time. It is well known that this has been done for every committee that has asked it for several days past; and unless there be an extension of the time, it would be indeed folly for me to go on. It would be only consuming the time of the Senate for naught; and therefore before I begin I ask that the Committee on Railroads may have one hour and a half to consider this bill fully.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope my honorable friend will not make that motion. It is very important that the bill which was up yesterday should be considered and disposed of. It is the regular order.

Mr. SARGENT, (to Mr. KELLY.) Ask for the next morning hour.

Mr. KELLY. It will not be in order for me to take away the privileges of another committee to-morrow; and I think it is better that we should go on now that this bill is up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator asks that an hour and a half be given to the Committee on Railroads to-day.

Mr. KELLY. It may not consume anything like that, but I ask that length of time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill will take more time than that. For the purpose of hearing the remarks of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY,] I hope the time will be extended until he concludes; but it is impossible to dispose of this bill, with the important questions that are in it, in one hour and a half, I am quite sure, because it opens a very wide field.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. With every disposition to oblige the honorable Senator from Oregon, if it suits the convenience of the Senate, I will allow the regular order to be passed over informally till the Senator makes his remarks, subject to be called up at any time.

Mr. KELLY. I would decidedly prefer to dispose of the bill when we once commence it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Undoubtedly, but that is my case. Here is a bill that has been two days under discussion, and I hardly think my honorable friend will expect to displace the regular order and take up a new proposition, and one which he has noticed will lead to discussion and debate. Now, I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall have an opportunity to present his case to the consideration of the Senate, but I reserve the right to call for the regular order.

Mr. KELLY. I do not care to consume the time of the Senate in making an argument and then letting the bill pass over, for that would virtually amount to nothing. Every Senator here knows that when a bill is brought up for discussion and partly disposed of and laid aside, we have to commence anew when it is taken up again, because, in the multitude of business, all that has been said escapes from the attention of Senators. I would rather not go on at all, not say a word, than that this bill should not be disposed of, and I therefore ask the Senate for an extension of time; or if the Senate will agree to set this bill down for a specific day and make it a special order, I will yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves that the time of the Committee on Railroads be extended one hour and a half. The Chair will put the question on that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before that motion is put I wish to submit to the Chair that this requires unanimous consent. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business comes up and is before the Senate by the regular rules, saying nothing about this special rule that we have as to what is to be done in the morning hour. Then, when one o'clock comes, the unfinished business of yesterday is before us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That hour has now arrived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nothing then can be done except to move to lay the unfinished business on the table or dispose of it in some way, instead of laying it aside, which must be done by unanimous consent. I make no objection to the Senators from Oregon having as much time as the Senator from Maine is willing to give for the purpose of laying before the Senate their views on the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate according to the rules, being the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia; the pending question being on the amendment offered by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.]

Mr. KELLY. I move now to postpone the regular order of business for one hour and a half.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves to postpone the unfinished business of yesterday for one hour and a half.

Mr. MITCHELL. It has been the custom, I believe, ever since the special rule was adopted at the present session, to extend the time of committees beyond the close of the ordinary morning hour at one o'clock. I ask that the same courtesy be extended to this committee in order that this bill may be considered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think this is rather an extraordinary proposition, that in the midst of a bill having had two days' consideration an attempt should be made to put it aside and to enter upon the consideration of a new bill, which these gentlemen are advertised will be discussed at length. I have never known such a proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL. We do not wish to displace your bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It displaces it for an hour and a half.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. The motion of the Senator from Oregon was to extend the time for an hour and a half. I would suggest to him that if he will ask unanimous consent that the time be extended so that the Committee on Railroads may have one hour from the time they commenced, which is what has been accorded to other committees, the Senator from Maine will probably accord that to this committee, and then let the gentlemen in charge of the bill use that time to the best advantage they can. I suppose that will probably extend for about half an hour longer.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to that, if that is usual. I have no objection to there being unanimous consent to extend this committee's time as heretofore.

Mr. MITCHELL. Make it one hour.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. One hour from the time when proceedings commenced on this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. An hour from now. I appeal to the Senator from Maine to consent to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to that being done by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] accept the suggestion?

Mr. KELLY. I would prefer, as I said before, an hour and a half, because half an hour has been consumed and taken away from this committee. Mr. President, it is impossible in the space of one hour to present all the facts and circumstances of this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will allow the Chair to state the question to the Senate. It is proposed to extend the time of the Committee on Railroads one hour and a half from this time, if the Chair understands the motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not agree to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on that motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand the Senator to be satisfied to take an hour.

Mr. KELLY. No, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then I resist the whole thing. I think it is an unreasonable proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to extend the time of the Committee on Railroads an hour and a half.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 33, noes 13.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. No. 331) providing for the construction of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad and Telegraph, and for the performance of all Government service free of charge, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, I must be very brief. I know it will be very unsatisfactory to the Senate to present a case of this kind in an hour and a half; and my colleague, as well as myself, desires to be heard; and therefore I can only present the general features of the bill, and that in a very imperfect manner.

As was said by my colleague, the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington and Idaho embrace an extent of country that is greater than all the New England States, all the Middle States, and Ohio and Indiana, together. It is a country rich in natural wealth, containing gold and silver and copper mines of almost unlimited extent. It is capable of raising all the cereals that are common to the valley of the Mississippi in great profusion. And yet this country of such vast territorial extent has no connection whatever with the railroad system of the United States. The outlet to it is by the Pacific Ocean, and the way that persons going to that country from the Eastern States reach Oregon is by the circuitous route of taking the railroad to San Francisco and then an ocean steamer from there to Portland. The computed distance in that way, according to the computation made by the Quartermaster's Department to regulate the mileage of those who travel, is fifteen hundred and seventy-four miles from Kelton, in the valley of Salt Lake, to Portland. Kelton is expected to be the initial point of this road, and it is but seven hundred and thirty-six miles by the proposed railway, so that we travel eight hundred and thirty-eight miles out of the way to reach our destination and at the same time have to undergo the hardships of a sea-voyage.

Let me call attention to what we are paying at this time simply for the transportation of the mail. Before the 1st of July last we were paying $242,000 to transport this mail by stage-coaches. It has been recently reduced to $134,700 from Kelton to The Dalles, and from The Dalles to Portland $16,500, making for the simple transportation of the mails $151,200. Now what will the United States pay as interest on the bonds of this company under the bill? Two hundred and eighty thousand dollars a year. So that the actual difference over and above the cost of transportation of the mails now is $128,000; and for this sum of $128,000 we shall secure the transportation of all the military supplies, all the Indian supplies, and all the other transportation the Government may require. We guarantee the interest for ten years only, and the bill proposes to do all this Government service in perpetuity for all time to come. It will be seen that although in the first instance the Government may pay a small amount, yet in the end it will be a great gainer. It is a far greater boon to the Government than it is to the company. This bill guarantees the performance of this service, and in such a way that there can be no doubt that the United States will be perfectly secure in having this service performed. The provisions of the bill are such that the United States will have a lien upon this railroad, into whatsoever hands it may pass from this company in case it shall be sold. The lien will attach, whether the road be transferred by the company directly or whether it be sold on execution and transferred in that way. The purchaser takes it incumbered with all the rights that the Government has for the performance of the service of which I have spoken. Not only that, but in case there should be a failure to perform this service the agents of the company are held answerable; they can be prosecuted in a criminal court for refusing or neglecting to transport the mail or do any other service required by the law. And further, the Government is not required to guarantee the interest or do anything until this road is completed by sections of twenty-five miles.

By an examination of this bill every Senator can satisfy himself that the Government will be perfectly secure in what it may advance as interest.

As I said, it is impossible for me to present this case as it ought to be presented in the limited space of time that is accorded to me, and therefore I will yield for the present to hear what may be said by those who oppose the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the committee. In section 2, line 7, after the letter "T" strike out the words "or angle;" so as to read:

Equal in all respects to railroads of the first class when prepared for business, with rails of the T iron, and upon the narrow-gauge plan, &c.

I simply desire to state that the bill, as reported by the committee, provided that this road should be constructed of the T or angle iron. I propose to strike out the words "or angle," as it has been found upon examination that it is not proper iron for roads.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment, which simply enables the committee to build a broad-gauge road. After the word "upon," in line 8 of section 2, I move to insert the words "the standard gauge of four feet eight and a half inches in width or;" so that it will read:

With rails of good quality of the T iron, and upon the standard gauge of four feet eight and a half inches in width, or the narrow-gauge plan, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I regret very much to detain the Senate at this time, but a sense of duty compels me, if I can get the attention of the Senate for a very brief time, to state what I understand to be the provisions of this bill. Objection has been made in the inception of its consideration that it is a subsidy bill; that it is a bill belonging to that class of legislation known as being in the interest of railroad corporations and opposed to the true interests of the Government and of the people. I think not. It has seemed to me from the beginning, it seems to me now, that aside from every other consideration of national importance involved in the bill under consideration, that relating to the questions of economy, of retrenchment in the disbursement of the Government moneys for the performance of the Government service, ought to be sufficient, to disarm all opposition to this bill and to secure for it the unanimous support of the Senate; nor will I yet believe, notwithstanding the objections made this morning by the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] that there is any very great number of Senators on this floor who if they but take the pains to investigate this bill, to examine its provisions in the light thrown around it by the records of the Departments of Government, and consider its effect upon the question of national development (and I leave that out of question now in my argument and refer more particularly to the other question of economy in the disbursement of the public moneys) but will at once yield to this bill their hearty support. As I said some time ago in answer to the honorable Senator from Ohio, I do hope and trust that the odium which has gathered around the term "railroad subsidy," which has been the result unquestionably of legislation heretofore had in the interest of railroad corporations, legislation that has been opposed to the best interests of the Government, legislation that I will oppose upon this floor to-day—I say I trust and hope that that odium will not so operate upon the feelings of Senators or so warp their judgments as to cause them to classify this measure with that legislation known as being in the interest of railroad corporations and opposed to the true interests of the people and of the Treasury of the United States.

It might, I think, be a sufficient answer to any suggestion that might be made to the effect that this bill belongs to that class of legislation to refer the Senate, if it were proper to do so, and I think it is, to the records of the two railroad committees of the last session of the present Congress, who examined this bill thoroughly, carefully, criticised it, amended it, and finally reported it to both Houses of the present Congress with a recommendation that it do pass. Mr. President, so earnest, so united, so reasonable, so just are the demands of the people whom I represent in part here, for railroad connection with the great internal arteries of commerce of this country, that they, through their representatives on this floor, humiliating though it is, have presented to the consideration of Congress this proposition. I call the attention of the honorable Senator from Ohio and of every other honorable Senator on this floor to the proposition, that we may know just precisely what it is and what its effect will be if adopted. "Aid us," say they, "to the extent of $280,000 per annum for the short term of ten years;" while to-day, yesterday, last year, for a number of years past, the Government of the United States is and has been paying, as shown by the records of the Department, out of its Treasury in money the sum of about $350,000, to come down to the exact figures $341,714, as shown by the records of the Department, for the transportation of the United States mails and other Government transportation, and over this identical route. By the adoption of this bill there would be a saving of nearly $70,000 per annum to the Treasury of the United States, a saving which in twenty years would amount to millions of dollars.

I appeal to the honorable Senator from Ohio, I appeal to every Senator on this floor who day after day in integrity of purpose are striving with all the zeal and energy that they can command to stay the golden flow from the national Treasury, to listen for once in the history of legislation in this Chamber to the appeals of the people of the North Pacific coast as they are echoed in thunder tones through the provisions of this bill, not only in the interest of national development, but in the interest of economy, in the interest of retrenchment. Talk about subsidy! The legislation proposed by this bill bears no resemblance to any legislation heretofore had at any time in the history of this country in the interest of railroad corporations. No tie of consanguinity or affinity can be traced between the two. It bears no relationship to any of these. It is not a proposition coming from a grasping railroad corporation seeking influence and wealth and power. It is not a proposition coming from men who hope as the result of the legislation proposed to realize personal and political fortunes. It is not a proposition coming from this political party or that political party—not at all; but it is a proposition coming from the whole people of the North Pacific coast without regard to political party; a proposition coming from a people who braved all the dangers and trials of frontier life, who at an early day took their stand upon that western coast and aided this Senate, the Congress, and this Government in wresting from the paws of the British lion that which properly and rightfully belonged to this Government. That is what this proposition is, and these are the people that present it.

Now, Mr. President, as there is nothing in or about this bill that I desire to conceal, but only wishing, only hoping, only praying, only desiring, as I do, that its provisions may be understood in all their bearings, in all their effects upon the two questions to which I have referred, national development, national progress, and public economy and retrenchment, I desire to call attention briefly, because I do not wish to take up a great deal of time, to the report in this case submitted by the Senate Committee on Railroads. I shall read briefly from that report for the purpose of showing what this proposition is; and I hope I shall have the attention of the Senate to the reading of this report. I desire the attention of every Senator for a very few minutes that we may see what this proposition is.

The United States are now paying—

I read from the report—

$224,000 per annum for carrying a daily United States mail, in four-horse coaches each way, between Kelton, in Salt Lake Valley, and The Dalles, in Oregon, a distance of about six hundred miles; and $18,000 for carrying it by steamboat (and over a short portage by railroad) six times a week, each way, between The Dalles and Portland, a distance of about one hundred miles; thus making the sum of $242,000 which the Government is annually paying simply for the transportation of the mails between Kelton and Portland. The schedule time for performing this duty between those points is seven days in summer and nine in winter. If, therefore, by changing an appropriation of money for the performance of an inferior and inefficient service to a vastly superior one, without greatly increasing the cost to the Government, the closest stickler for retrenchment and reform could but regard the measure as a wise one.

I call the attention of the honorable Senator from Ohio to this declaration from the Senate Committee on Railroads, in which they say that "the closest stickler for retrenchment and reform could but regard the measure as a wise one." I again read from the report:

That is the object sought to be accomplished by the bill reported by the committee, and if, by its passage, it can be shown that even in the period of twenty years the Government will save from one to four million dollars, it may with reason be expected that the most rigid economist will yield it his hearty support.

I call the attention of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Railroads to this point—"the most rigid economist will yield it his hearty support."

And when, in addition to this economical expenditure of the public money and wise arrangement of the public service, it is made to appear that a series of benefits will be conferred, not only upon the people of that vast extent of country through which the road passes, but upon the whole Union, there ought to be no hesitation in adopting the measure proposed.

These are the general features of the bill. Whenever the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad Company shall complete a section of its road of twenty-five miles in length, the United States will guarantee and pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum for ten years on $3,000 of the construction bonds of the company, for every mile of completed road, not however exceeding in the whole seven hundred miles between Ogden or Kelton and Portland, whatever the actual distance between those points may be. In consideration of their payment of interest—the railroad company obligates itself, its successors and assigns, to carry the United States mails, Army and Indian supplies, troops, and munitions of war of every kind, and transmit all telegraph messages for the Government free of charge forever.

What company, what man, ever before made to the Government such a proposition as this? Here is a clear statement of what is demanded by this company of the Government and what the company is to render to the Government in consideration of what it is to receive, $280,000 for the short period of ten years; and in consideration thereof what is the company to do? It is to construct a great national highway nearly one-third of the distance across the American continent and to place that highway at the disposal of the Government for all Government purposes for all coming time.

Reference has been made to Government contractors, and I desire now to refer to Government contractors. It may be said that the Government to-day is paying more than it ought to pay for the transportation of the mails over this route and for the performance of Government service. That I have no doubt is true, but it is unavoidable at the same time, and it will be unavoidable as long as this Government stands. Congress and all the Departments of the Government through the persistent, plausible, and urgent appeals of these Government contractors that swarm in the land like the locusts of Egypt have unconsciously and unwillingly become their emissaries, and the result is the Government and the people suffer and the contractors alone are benefited. Here is a proposition, then, that proposes to remedy this evil, which proposes to a certain extent to stanch this flow from the Treasury as it rushes down from the capitol of the nation to gladden the hearts and fill the pockets of Government contractors. What does it propose to do? It proposes to divert from the pockets of individual contractors the amount absolutely necessary for the performance of the Government service, and instead of paying it to these individual contractors it proposes to give it in aid of a great national highway, a highway that must in the very nature of things, in the short space of a very few years, by the increase of the revenue of the Government refund to the Government thrice the amount, yes, ten times the amount, that is now demanded by the provisions of this bill. How? By bringing the public domain into settlement, by developing its mines, by vitalizing its industries, by infusing a new life and a new hope into the people of the great North Pacific coast, the men, as I said before, who went on to that coast and braved all the dangers of pioneer life, the most terrible that ever beset any nation or any people in their march of progress.

Mr. President, as I said before, there is nothing in the bill that I desire to conceal, and I desire to talk especially with reference to the provisions of the bill. I will call special attention to its different features; and the Senate will bear in mind that one great object of this bill is to secure railroad connection between tide-water on the Pacific coast, on the waters of the Columbia at Portland, Oregon, and the great central railroad of the country.

The first section provides as follows:

That the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad, extending from a point on the Union Pacific or Central Pacific Railroad not farther east than Ogden nor farther west than Kelton, in the Territory of Utah, to Portland, in the State of Oregon, is hereby declared a military and post-road; and the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad Company, by its own cars, appropriate for the service and approved by the Postmaster-General, and with its own rolling-stock, equipment, and management, without fee or reward, except as hereinafter mentioned, shall forever transport the United States mail, Army and Indian supplies, troops and munitions of war of every kind; and shall transmit all dispatches upon its telegraph line for the United States Government free of charge.

I call attention to this provision. In the first place, it fixes the termini of the road, the western terminus absolutely at the head of tide-water on the waters of the Columbia River, and the other terminus on the line of the great overland road not farther west than Kelton nor farther east than Ogden. Then it describes the character of the road; that is, it is to be a military and post-road. In the third place, it prescribes the duty of the company to the Government, which is simply this: that it shall forever—not for four years merely, the time for which mail contracts are usually made with Government contractors, not merely for ten years, the time for which interest is to be paid upon these bonds, not merely for twenty or thirty or fifty years—but forever do the Government transportation free. That is the proposition.

What is the objection to it? Can any Senator upon this floor, however close a stickler for economy, for retrenchment, face this proposition, and face the country upon it and show that it is something that is wrong; that is opposed to the best interests of the Government; that is opposed to the best interests of the Treasury or of the people? If there is one I should like to hear him. This is the proposition that the people of the North Pacific coast, humiliating though it is, through their representatives in Congress, to-day submit to the consideration of the Senate; and will the Senate of the United States sit idly by in the face of such a proposition and refuse to act? Can the Congress of the Government afford to permit an opportunity to pass of making a contract so exceptionally liberal in its terms for the performance of so large a portion of the Government service; a contract that under the provisions of this bill is to run, in so far as its duration is concerned, parallel with the existence of this Government; a contract that will stand while political parties may rise and fall, while administrations may come and go; a contract which, if adopted by the Senate, by the Congress, by the Government, must stand, in my judgment, as a lasting and enduring monument to the wisdom of the men and the Government that made it.

Then I ask, after the people of Oregon and of Washington and Idaho Territories, after the people occupying the north Pacific coast have so humiliated themselves as to present a proposition to the Senate so liberal in its terms to the Government, will the Senate of the United States further humiliate them by the rejection of the proposition? Will the Senate say to them, "Yes, we know you are a deserving and enterprising people; we know you occupy a country that is in itself a very empire; we know the value of your undeveloped resources are beyond the power of estimate; we know that your mines of silver and gold and iron and cinnabar and coal and other minerals are more than sufficient, if developed into life by the energizing touch of labor and capital, to supply the wants of the world; we know that your forests of cedar and pine and fir are not only the finest but the grandest in extent and value of any upon which God's sun ever rested; we know that your fertile valleys are the finest wheat-producing fields on the continent; we know also that you are separated from the rest of mankind by rugged mountain ranges and barren burning plains; we know furthermore that for lack of railroad communication your natural resources lie dormant and undeveloped, that your energies are paralyzed, that your industries lie prostrate, that your ambition is darkened, that your hopes are deadened; yes, we know all this, and we furthermore are compelled to admit, in our own judgments and our own consciences, that the proposition you submit to the Senate is one that is right, is one that is in the interest of the Government, in the interest of economy, in the interest of retrenchment, but yet we will refuse to act." And why? Simply because it may be said by somebody or by some newspaper or by something else that this in some sense is a Government subsidy to a railroad, and therefore we will not act. Will you say to the representatives on this floor from that country that they shall be humiliated by going back to their people and saying to them, "Yes, we submitted your proposition, your one-sided proposition in the interest of the Government to the Senate of the United States, and yet the Senate of the United States refused to act because forsooth of this cry against Government subsidy, this confounding of the proposition proposed by this bill with what might be proposed under another and a different bill—a Government subsidy—and this stood like a specter in our path, and we dared not act?" That the spirit of political ostracism, the spirit of denunciation from political papers or from some political party or portion of a party, stood before us like a specter, and we refused to do that which our better judgments and our own consciences must tell us is for the best interest of the Government. I trust not, Mr. President. I have more faith in this honorable body. I know there has been a disposition here to get rid of this bill, to shove it out of the way, to not have it considered, simply because somebody might say, "It is a Government subsidy to a railroad;" when in truth and in fact it is no such thing.

I do not wish to take up more time, for my colleague is anxious for a vote and he is no more anxious than I am; but I do not want to have a vote until this thing is understood. It has not been. It may perhaps properly be inquired what security has the Government for the performance of this service. I answer the inquiry, because it is a pertinent one. In the first place, so far as the first ten years are concerned, the Government has the whole thing in its own hands under the provisions of this bill, because any failure on the part of the company to perform the service required by the first section of the bill would be a sufficient reason, in the absence of any other securities, for withholding the payment of the interest. But there are other securities, full, complete securities to the Government, as I will show in a few words. Section 6 provides:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to see that the said bonds be not indorsed and delivered as heretofore provided until it shall be made to appear that there are no liens of any kind, by mortgage, trust deeds, or otherwise, upon any section of completed road, excepting such as expressly recognize the priority of right in the United States to have the services performed as specified in this act.

By virtue of this provision, then, the right to the performance of this service inheres in and becomes a part of the corporate existence of the company itself. It is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to see that there are no other liens. All rights of every character are postponed and made subject to the rights of the Government in this respect. It is further provided in section 6:

And in case of refusal or failure to perform such services by the said corporation for the period of six months, the said corporation, its successors or assigns, shall forthwith become liable to repay to the United States all sums of money paid by them, after deducting a reasonable compensation for any services actually performed; and the United States shall have power to bring actions or suits in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon against said corporation, its successors or assigns, to enforce such repayment by judgment or decree and execution thereon, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party; and the obligation to perform said services in the future shall, notwithstanding the said judgment, decree, and execution, remain in full force and effect against the said corporation, its successors and assigns.

There is the civil arm of the Government invoked; and not only that, but the criminal arm of the Government is invoked by the provisions of this bill in order to compel on the part of the company the services demanded of it by the first section.

Section 7 provides—

That if any officer, agent, or employé of said corporation, its successors or assigns, shall willfully refuse to transport the United States mails, Army or Indian supplies, troops or munitions of war, over its railroad, or transmit any dispatches over its telegraph lines after the United States shall be entitled to have such services performed as specified in this act, such officer, agent, or employé shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in any United States district court having jurisdiction of the offense, be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months.

The interests of the Government, I will say in a word, then, are guarded at every point and in every particular.

Mr. President, what is the country which is by this road to be connected with the Union Pacific Railroad? Permit me hastily to attract the attention of the Senate to a few comparisons.

In the ten States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, the whole product of wheat crop in 1872 was 155,228,000 bushels. The whole population in those ten States is 13,000,000; consequently they raised about 12 bushels per capita. Oregon's product of wheat the past year exceeded 6,000,000 bushels, with a population of about 125,000, or 48 bushels per capita, or four times as much as all these great wheat-growing States in proportion to its population.

These ten States consumed, according to the estimate of the Agricultural Department, 5 bushels per capita, or 65,000,000 bushels. They used for seed 20,000,000 bushels, making a total of 85,000,000 retained for home consumption, and shipped about 71,000,000 bushels, or 5½ bushels per capita; while Oregon retained for home consumption less than 1,000,000 bushels and shipped 5,000,000, or 40 bushels per capita.

The whole annual product of all kinds of grain produced in these ten States to which I have referred, including their 700,000,000 bushels of corn, is 1,028,937,000 bushels. Of this amount 815,955,574 bushels are consumed within their own limits, while they ship 213,021,426 bushels, or about 16½ bushels per capita; while Oregon ships wheat alone to the amount of over 40 bushels per capita.

The Pacific coast exported in 1873 35 per cent. of all the wheat exported by the United States into foreign countries, and the State of Oregon and Washington Territory furnished over one-tenth of this amount; and the past year a much greater percentage of our wheat exports must be credited to the Pacific coast, and to Oregon and the Territory of Washington.

The cost of transporting a bushel of wheat from the Mississippi River to Chicago—an average distance of about 200 miles—is 17 cents per bushel, or 8½ cents per bushel per each 100 miles; and yet we hear great complaints from the Mississippi Valley. Wheat from Chicago to New York, 1,500 miles, costs 32.7 cents per bushel, by all rail, or 2.2 cents per bushel for each 100 miles. From Chicago to Liverpool, via New York, by sail, the average cost of transportation per bushel of 60 pounds, including transportation charges and marine insurance, is 51.7 cents per bushel; while from Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory to San Francisco the cost is 85 cents per bushel. The cost from Walla Walla and Eastern Oregon—LeGrande—the great center of the wheat-growing country of Eastern Oregon, to Portland, down the Columbia River, including reshipments, is from $15 to $20 per ton, counting from different points.

The average charge per ton per mile for shipping wheat from Chicago to New York, water-route, is 9.6 mills, or 93 cents per ton for each 100 miles; from Chicago to New York, all rail, 12.1 mills, or $1.21 per ton for each 100 miles. Compare with this the present charges for transporting freight along the line of this proposed road, and what do we find. From Kelton, on the Central Pacific, to Boise City, Idaho Territory, the distance is 250 miles. The charges for freight per ton are $100 the whole distance, or $40 per ton for each 100 miles, or 40 cents per ton per mile, or over 40 times the amount per mile charged for taking wheat from Chicago to New York. Again, the distance from the Columbia River to Boise City is 275 miles. The charges for freight per ton, whole distance, are $110, or $40 per ton for each 100 miles, or 40 cents per ton per mile; while from Portland, Oregon, the head of ship navigation, to Umatilla, the probable point of departure on the Columbia River for Boise City, the distance being about 200 miles, the cost of transporting a ton of freight by steamboat or railway around the portages of Cascades and Dalles is $25 per ton, or 12½ cents per ton per mile in gold coin.

I call the attention of honorable Senators from the Mississippi Valley who to-day are complaining because they have to pay 17 cents per bushel from the Mississippi River to Chicago. I call their attention to the evils under which the people of the North Pacific coast are suffering to-day by reason of charges that are double and treble and quadruple the amount which they are suffering to-day.

While this is true of freight charges, passenger rates stand in the same exorbitant proportion.

Passenger fare on stage-coach from the Columbia River to Boise City, 275 miles, is $44; or 16 cents, coin, per mile. From Boise City to the Central Pacific road at Kelton, 250 miles, the fare is $50; or 20 cents, coin, per mile.

The distance from Salt Lake to the city of Portland will be about 700 miles, connecting at 500 miles with the navigable waters of the Columbia River. The route of the proposed road lies centrally through the Pacific Northwest, and its practicability is beyond question. It was the early Indian trail, followed by trappers and missionaries, and broadly marked by pioneer settlers and immigrations. It was first suggested by Whitney for the Pacific Railroad, and its practicability demonstrated by engineers, General Lander, Colonel Hudnutt, and Captain Blair. For a distance of 375 miles, except the crossing of Snake River, Mr. Hudnutt reports the want of but two bridges, one of 200 feet and the other of 100 feet in length. Engineer Dodge in his report says:

The grades are easy, the alignments good, and material for construction abundant.

From Portland, Oregon, to Sacramento it is 650 miles; from Sacramento to Ogden, 743; making a total of 1,393 miles. From Ogden to Portland, Oregon, via Sacramento, it is 700 miles farther than by this route.

Mr. President, I have done; not by any means that I have exhausted the subject, but my time is up. I have endeavored as briefly as I could to submit what I understand this bill is to the consideration of the Senate, and I leave it with the Senate to decide on the merits of the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must again express my surprise that the Senator from Oregon should desire to open up the question raised in this bill at this period of the session. It is a Senate bill which has not passed the House, and its passage here will be utterly idle except to establish a policy. I supposed if anything was settled by the current feeling of the times, it was that the general sentiment of the people of the United States, especially of the older States, was against Government subsidies or aids to railroad corporations to build new railroads. We have had a great deal of experience with various forms of subsidies to railroads. A number of years ago, under the lead of Mr. Douglas, of Illinois, the first land grant of any importance was given to the Illinois Central Railroad, and we have had a great number of land-grant railroads since that time. It is now the settled conviction in nearly all the land-grant States that these grants have been injurious to the people even of the States where the railroads have been built. Where we grant large bodies of land to railroads, to be mortgaged and held by them for rise in price, and in most cases free from taxation—for they generally contrive that they will not take patents or pay taxes on the land for many years—the actual injury to the people of the land-grant States by the withdrawing of large bodies of land from settlement is more injurious to them than they receive benefit from the railroads. There came to us from all parts of these States objections to further land grants, and opposition to them, and a general statement that the whole policy of land grants to railroads has been injurious to the very States and Territories that eagerly sought them.

But, sir, passing that out of view, we have many land grants covering perhaps not this particular line but covering this whole section of country out in the Western States and Territories. I am told that railroads are now in process of construction more or less advanced from the line of the Union Pacific Railroad to reach the very region proposed to be reached by this bill under the most liberal possible land grants. But, sir, during the war we were involved in peculiar difficulties; we were in danger of a contest with foreign powers, with no line of communication between the Atlantic States and the Pacific. We were then induced under the strong pressure of necessity, under circumstances that I hope will never again arise in this country, to grant to the Union Pacific and Central Pacific and co-ordinate lines certain subsidies in money. Now, what has been the result? In the first place the railroad has been built. It has been of great benefit to the people of the United States. We have derived, no doubt, vast benefit from the construction of that road; but the corporations to whom these subsidies have been granted have in no case whatever complied with the terms and stipulations of the grant. In consequence mainly of the failure of these companies to comply with the stipulations of the law there has been raised against them a well-founded prejudice, strong and overwhelming, among the people at least of the older States.

My honorable friend from Oregon points to the stipulations contained in this bill to secure to the Government of the United States certain advantages. They are not worth the paper upon which they are written. Look at the subsidy bill for the Union and Central Pacific Railroads. There are reservations of various kinds. There are stipulations among others that each of these companies should pay to the United States 5 per cent. of the net earnings, and yet from the day of their completion to this hour not one dollar has been paid over in pursuance of this stipulation. Besides that, our guarantee to the Pacific railroads was simply an accommodation to the railroads to enable them to borrow money at a lower rate of interest. The bonds issued by the United States were practically the bonds of the railroads, and they were to pay not only the interest but the principal of the bonds; and yet now they refuse to pay either the interest or principal. The Government of the United States is compelled to pay nearly $4,000,000 interest on bonds issued for the benefit of railroads that are earning large sums of money, and some of them at least are profitable speculative stocks. No faith is observed by these railroads with the Government, and we now have an offer from one of the companies, made with evident seriousness, that it will pay an annuity of $500,000 in satisfaction of bonds for $25,000,000 upon which we are paying an interest of $1,500,000.

Besides that, the disposition of the money and bonds given by the people of the United States to aid in this railroad has led to scandals that I need not refer to.

At any rate, by reason of the failure of these companies to comply with the stipulations contained in the law and by a general discontent that the people of the United States should be called upon to pay $4,000,000 in interest on account of this subsidy to railroads, some of which are now able to pay this interest, there has been created a strong popular feeling against any other subsidies; and it is right. In my judgment, no further subsidies ought to be granted in land grants or money subsidies; but railroads ought to be left like all other investments, like all other enterprises, to depend upon local interests and the hope of profit of those who build them. Real growth and development depend upon private enterprise and interest and not upon Government subsidies.

But it is said that the Government ought to aid because it will derive a benefit from the building of this railroad. There is a fallacy in this reasoning which if extended to other enterprises would bankrupt the Treasury.

It would be easy to show that the Treasury of the United States would derive a great deal of benefit from building manufacturing establishments. I have no doubt that any Senator could prove that the establishment of a cotton factory or any other kind of improvement in his neighborhood would be of benefit, not only to the locality, but to the people of the United States. For instance, the establishment of a distillery, the poorest kind of an improvement, yields to the Government of the United States a large revenue; and therefore we get some benefit from the establishment of a distillery; so of a tobacco warehouse, so of a manufacturing establishment, and so of a railroad. But why should we discount and pay to the railroad company the benefit that we are to derive from the establishment of the railroad any more than we should pay to a manufacturing company the benefit that we may hope to derive from the establishment of a factory? The principle is wrong. The general rule is best, that every enterprise and every interest ought to develop itself through the personal or private interests of individuals with the hope of profit. The general principle of subsidy which has induced the granting of hundreds of millions of acres of public lands, and which has induced the grant of sixty-odd million dollars of the public money or public bonds, it seems to me, is unwise in itself.

I voted for these land grants with others, because at the time it was believed to be the best policy to develop the Western States and Territories. I voted for the subsidy granted to the Union Pacific Railroad; and yet that subsidy could only be justified by the circumstances under which we were then placed, the state of war, when, if we had been involved in foreign complications, a portion of our country might have been separated by a long line of wilderness from the body of the country. But, sir, I believe that the Pacific Railroad could have been built nearly as soon without the subsidy as with it. Private capital induced by private interest, the hope of gain, will build these improvements as rapidly as the country needs them; and they ought not to be built sooner.

In regard to this particular bill, in my judgment this, instead of being the strongest case that could be presented to us, is the weakest. I know the feeling of the Senators from Oregon to press forward an enterprise in which they are interested. Their people are interested in it. I commend their spirit. I commend them for the performance of what they regard as an important duty. We, however, must look at it in another light. How does it affect the people of the United States? What motive could actuate us to develop this particular line of railroad at the expense of the Treasury of the United States? Were the railroads in Ohio built by the people of the United States? Were the railroads in Pennsylvania built by the people of the United States? Were the railroads in Indiana built by the people of the United States? Each community has been compelled from time to time as it grew in development to build its own lines of railroads; and, sir, this narrow-gauge railroad, as it is called, will undoubtedly be built by the developing interests growing up in the western country. The time will come when this railroad will be built, by private capital and private means from the hope of gain, and the Government of the United States will then treat it as it does all other railroads; it will pay it for any service it may render to the Post-Office Department, pay it for any transportation it may carry for the Army. It will give it the right of way and any facilities that it gives to any other line of railroad.

But why single out this particular line of railroad for a subsidy? A subsidy has never been granted to any railroad except the Union Pacific, and that was only for reasons growing out of the war. But this is a new form of subsidy, a still more dangerous form than the other. Here the Secretary of the Treasury is called upon to guarantee the payment of interest for ten years on construction bonds. By whom are they issued? By a corporation of the State of Oregon. He is compelled to guarantee their bonds on certain terms for ten years, and thus we throw into the market at this time, likely to be disturbed, when the credit of the United States is liable to be impaired by our want of revenue and by the necessity of new taxes—we throw into the money market of the world a new form of guarantee by the United States.

It is only $5,000,000 it is said, or $5,600,000. It only involves the payment of $2,800,000. That is a pretty large sum. But, sir, if you establish this precedent, where is it to end? If we are to guarantee the interest on construction bonds for this company, where will it end? How can you deny it to a dozen other railroads that I might mention? How can you deny it to the Northern Pacific, the Southern Pacific, the Texas Pacific, and various other lines? If it is right to build a railroad from a point on the Union Pacific to Portland, why is it not right to build it to Montana? Why is it not proper to extend these branches out in every direction? And thus the Government of the United States would be compelled to adopt a policy which would require them to guarantee the interest on the payment of a multitude of bonds. Why, sir, it is a dangerous form of security that ought not to be issued at all. If the Government of the United States is determined to assist this railroad company, let it give them money and let that be the end of it.

But the honorable Senator from Oregon says—and it is his chief argument—it now costs along the line proposed for this railroad three or four hundred thousand dollars a year to carry the mails; and he thinks on the whole that is an improvident contract. That contract will expire before this road can be built twenty-five miles, and then we can make a new contract. If the contract now existing for the transportation of the mail over that line is excessive, as it appears to be from his own statement, that contract must only run for four years and has probably partly run out now and will soon expire.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not say the transportation of the mail cost that amount; but the cost of mail service together with all the Government transportation over that route, according to the record, is $341,700.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the transportation of the mail and Government property over that route costs three or four hundred thousand dollars, it shows that there is a line of business over that route, and when this railroad company builds the line it will get the benefit of carrying the mail, it will get the benefit of carrying the Government property. There will not be any less mail or any less property carried along the line of the road after the railroad is built than now, and this railroad will get the benefit of what business can be furnished by the Government of the United States. But because now we have to pay three or four hundred thousand dollars for transporting the mails and public property in a stage-coach, are not the people of the United States to have the benefit of these improvements by having the savings caused by the building of these improvements? The whole theory is wrong. If you adopt this principle, to pay a railroad company for ten years ahead the rates of transportation you now pay a stage-coach company, you will bankrupt the Government of the United States in ten years. I have made some computation. The amount that we should pay for ten years for carrying the mail and carrying such supplies as we may desire to transport on this road is $280,000 a year for seven hundred miles. We have in this country seventy thousand miles. If we paid at this same rate of transportation on other railroads in the United States, it would make the railroad service alone worth from thirty-eight to fifty million dollars for carrying the postal matter. It is a wrong principle.

If this railroad can be built by private enterprise, aided in such way as the Government can properly aid it, it will be a good road; but it is not the interest of the people of the United States to force investments into unproductive railroads until the time comes when the locality, the neighborhood—when the people of the neighborhood will give it sufficient employment to pay a reasonable interest on the cost of the investment. Sir, it is bad public policy to force the development of distant and remote regions until by local settlements, by gradual accretion, by the growth of towns and villages, by the increase of business, they can build their own railroads and do like all the old States have done.

Mr. President, I have said enough. I did not desire to oppose this bill particularly. I had no desire of participating in the argument, and I am perfectly willing, for one, to take it as a test question whether the Government of the United States are now at this period of the session, in our present financial condition, willing to embark in this kind of a subsidy, this kind of a policy, which is entirely new, which has never before been proposed, of indorsing the construction bonds of any railroad company at a certain rate per mile established on this line. It is the establishment of a new policy. I may say that our western country, Oregon and California, have been dealt with most liberally, far more liberally than the older States were dealt with. They have had larger grants of land; they have had aid in money; their harbors have been improved, and their rivers have been improved. They have been most generously dealt with by the people of the United States. Now, sir, for us to go further and continue and enlarge upon the plan of subsidy that has heretofore been extended to them alone, to railroads extending to the Pacific, is asking too much; and especially now, when our credit is endangered, when our finances are disturbed, when our expenses are more than our receipts, is a most dangerous and fatal time to enter upon this policy. Let us have a little time; let us grow a little; let us pay the debts we have already contracted; let us overcome the difficulties that now surround us, and the time will not be far distant when the gradual growth of the country will demand the construction of this road and any aid that may be properly rendered by the Government of the United States in pursuance of the policy that may then exist. Nothing could be more futile, nothing could be more indefensible than now for us to make new obligations. We are scarcely able to pay those we have already contracted, and now we are about to levy a tax of $35,000,000 on the people of the United States in order to enable us to meet the current appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Ohio referred to the liberality of the Government toward Oregon. I do not suppose it makes much difference, so far as this question is concerned, whether it has been liberal or not; but I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he knows about how much the Government gives annually to Oregon for the improvement of her harbors and rivers?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know. I presume we treat that State fairly with the others.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think she gets about $100,000 a year.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I wish simply to say that the Committee on Railroads have at this session had before them some six or seven bills providing for subsidies; that they have carefully considered the subject, have had repeated meetings, have heard arguments, and that they will not report any such bill favorably to the Senate. I wish further to say that those bills which have been thus treated have infinitely more merit than the bill before the Senate. They are in relation to roads that have already land grants of great value which they offer to surrender, to give back to the Government, if the Government will guarantee their bonds. They are roads which are in a good measure constructed and have large property. They offer, in addition to surrendering the land grant, to mortgage that property to secure the guarantee which they ask of the Government. And yet that committee, in view of all the circumstances of the country, have determined not to recommend one of those grants.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to test the sense of the Senate, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Oregon—if it is not I will not do it—I move to lay the bill on the table. If the Senator prefers a direct vote on the passage of the bill, I will not make the motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. I prefer a vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The original bill was a land grant but the amendment is a subsidy.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It increases very much the subsidy in the original bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it is understood by the Senate that this is to be a test-vote, because the amendment itself is the whole bill. The original bill being a land grant, as I understand, the amendment proposes a subsidy in lieu of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the original bill is not a land grant, but is a lesser subsidy than that provided in the amendment. In the original bill it was $10,000 per mile that the United States was to guarantee the interest upon. In the substitute they are to guarantee interest to the extent of $3,000 a mile.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Boreman, Cameron, Clayton, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, Merrimon, Mitchell, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, West, and Windom—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Thurman, Washburn, and Wright—39.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Conover, Cooper, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Scott, Spencer, Stockton, Tipton, and Wallleigh—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is now on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that we take the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is the third reading of the bill, which is practically the same thing.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 2, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron and Flanagan—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Ingalls, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Thurman, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—46.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boreman, Brownlow, Carpenter, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Dorsey, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Scott, Spencer, Stockton, and Tipton—24.

So the bill was rejected.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. COOPER it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Thomas Hord be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 4478) to relieve Charles H. Smith, M. D., of Richmond, Virginia, of all political disabilities; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3780) to relieve the political disabilities of Robert Tansill, of Prince William County, and Marcellus P. Christian, of Lynchburg, Virginia.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 764) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia.

FEES OF MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave at this time to present the report of a committee of conference.

The report was read, as follows:

The conferees appointed by the Senate and House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House bill No. 3623 entitled "An act to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved February 26, 1853," report:

That having met after full and free conference they have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the thirteenth amendment of the Senate to said bill, and agree to the same modified as follows: After the word "four," in line 10 of said amendment, insert the words "and prior to the 1st day of January, 1875." And in lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 strike out all after the word "passed," in line 13, and insert the following words: "and from and after the 1st day of January, 1875, no such officer or person shall become entitled to any allowance for mileage or travel not actually and necessarily performed under the provisions of existing law;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

And that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the fourteenth amendment of the Senate to said bill, and agree to the same.

GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
A. G. THURMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES B. SENEK,
G. G. HOSKINS,
R. M. SPEER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Public Lands. I am directed by that committee to report back the bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri without amendment. As this is a local bill, I ask consent to have it considered now.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. Mr. CONKLING. I am instructed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States to report back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States. To-morrow morning, that committee being next in order, I hope every Senator will be ready to take up these bills and consider them.

SALARIES OF NEW YORK DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. CONKLING. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill which I send to the Chair; and if there be no objection to it—I think there is none, it being the unanimous report of the committee—I should be glad to have it acted on at the present time.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 1294) to fix the salaries of the district judges of the northern and southern districts of New York was read three times, and passed. It provides that from and after the 1st day of April, 1875, the salaries of the district judges of the northern and southern districts of New York shall be $3,000 each.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. DORSEY, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 1201) to establish certain telegraphic lines in the several States and Territories as post-roads, and to regulate the transmission of commercial and other intelligence by telegraph, be recommended to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1295) to fix the title of certain officers in the Navy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SARGENT.

Mr. SARGENT. I desire to make a verbal change in the amendment. In line 9, after the word "years," I move to strike out "from the first day of the then next December" and insert "in the ensuing Congress."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made.

Mr. SARGENT. Let the amendment be read as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment, as modified, reads:

SEC. 67. That there shall be elected, by written or printed ballots, in said District, by the duly registered and qualified voters thereof, on the first Tuesday following the first Monday in June, 1875, and on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1876, and on every such Tuesday in November, in each alternate year thereafter, one person to be a Delegate to represent said District in Congress, for the term of two years in the ensuing Congress. Each legal voter may cast for said Delegate one ballot, on which there shall be but one name once written or printed, and the person having the largest number of ballots shall be, and be declared, elected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from California who proposes this amendment how much the expense has been of registration and election under the previous laws in this District at any election that has been held?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator might ask me a great many questions that I could not answer off-hand. I can only form a judgment of the matter as he can himself. If the question goes as to the policy of registration, I must express my own opinion that registration laws tend toward a pure ballot. That is my opinion; but I do not know just what they cost here, and I cannot approximate the cost.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly we ought to find out how much this mere ornamental contrivance is to cost; and if it does not do some essential good to the people of the District, we ought not to tax them for doing it; and if, as I am informed to-day by a responsible and respectable citizen of this District that from his knowledge and experience in assisting at some of the previous elections here where there were both registration and voting, this is to tax the people of the District of Columbia for every one of these elections anywhere from $50,000 to $75,000, then it seems to me that that amount of money could be devoted to some better object. Even if my information is incorrect, before the Senate saddle upon this overtaxed and absolutely bankrupt people, if you are to force them to meet their engagements, anything that is not a prime necessity of government or of life, we ought to understand how much it is going to cost.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. I would suggest to the Senator that all the machinery of registration and election is provided for in this bill in another part for the purpose of electing three members of a board of education to consist of seven—to elect a minority of that board.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So I understand, Mr. President; but when we are in substance proceeding to govern this District by the sheer legislative power of Congress, by agencies that it chooses to select, and do not intend to allow the people of this District to govern themselves, as you would allow a village in Vermont or Indiana or California to do, then I say you ought not to do this thing unless there are paramount considerations of public necessity which will justify imposing upon the tax-payers of this District the burden which is necessarily to follow; and I submit that with a good deal of confidence to my friend from California, whose judgment and whose consideration in those regards I have a very high respect for.

If I am correctly informed that this ceremony of election costs, every time it is enacted and performed, anywhere from $40,000 to $80,000, then it does seem to me that we ought not to impose upon the people here this burden of spending $40,000 to $80,000 of their money to elect a Delegate to Congress who has no other earthly power than that of speaking to the House of Representatives upon topics which every member and every Senator is bound to consider for the good of this District, and as to which every one of all of us most cheerfully at all times listens to the appeals and statements of citizens who come to us privately. I submit that to my friend from California. Taxed as this District is, swamped indeed as it is, is it right to put this additional straw—and it is a good deal more than a straw, if it amounts to what I am told it does—upon them when there is no necessary and decisive benefit to be derived from it? I suggest that to my friend from California in the best possible good faith.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that I am very particularly in favor of a system of registration for this District. On the general principle I am in favor of registration—

Mr. EDMUNDS. So am I.

Mr. SARGENT. Because I think it tends to purity of the ballot.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not quarreling with that; I am quarreling with the necessary steps; and that is one—

Mr. SARGENT. I understand the Senator. In this District there is said to be a large floating population, men who are here for a week or two, the very material who corrupt elections; that is to say, transient persons. If registration is necessary in my own State, in the State of Vermont, where the people are very much more settled, where every man knows his neighbors, where a floating population does not exist in near so large a degree, then it is necessary as a safeguard here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think that the amount which the Senator states can be correct, because it seems so extraordinary. At any rate it ought not to require so large a sum to register the number of voters in this District. Still I do not know that even the whole amount would be too great a premium, if we are to have elections at all, to have pure elections, because there is nothing that goes so far to sap the very foundations of society and destroy public morality and put bad men in office, and bring a train of consequences of the very worst character, as illegal voting, stuffing the ballot-box, and crimes of that character. I therefore think that it may be worth while to consider, even if we are to elect only a single Delegate, whether for the sake of public morality it may not be proper to expend a reasonable amount to see that the election shall be fair.

The proposition has been made, and voted down by an even vote, to elect the commissioners who are named in the bill. I understand that amendment will be renewed in another form, perhaps to elect one of them or to elect two of them. If either of these propositions should carry, the necessity for registration would be very largely increased because it would not then be a question merely of electing a Delegate to Congress but of men who are to collect and handle the resources of the District, to collect taxes and pay bills and involve the District in further debt. It might be well perhaps to let this amendment, if it can be adopted at all, go in the form it now is. The bill in the Senate will be capable of amendment; and if we find in the result that we have only a Delegate left to be elected, then what my friend from Vermont says would have very great weight, certainly with me, whether for the election merely of a Delegate we may not dispense with the system of registration. But there is one thing in favor of this system of registration. The petitions which the chairman yesterday held up to the view of the Senate here signed by the largest property-holders in this District—the men who take the most interest and I believe the most disinterested interest in the conduct of its affairs. They ask for a bill which contains this provision, and I take it therefore as an indorsement of theirs in favor of the proposition. But really the point of the amendment is giving the people of the District a Delegate. As to the registration, that can be attended to afterward if it be found in the outcome that we have only a Delegate to elect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from California (which is very rare with him) has a little misapprehended the point that I suggested, which was not in respect of the necessity of registration if there is to be an election, for I agree with him that in any city of any considerable number of inhabitants it is one of the essential and necessary safeguards to the expression of the true will of the people who are to be governed. I agree to that entirely. That is not my point. If the District is to elect a Delegate, in my opinion it is essential that there should be registration. If the people are to elect anybody, I think there ought to be registration in a city of 100,000 or 125,000 inhabitants or whatever it may be here. The question is whether, taking it for granted that registration is necessary, there is to be gain enough to the interests of the people of this District in having a Delegate to warrant the expense necessary to the election of the Delegate. That is the point.

Now, if the whole expense, including registration, which is necessary to the security and purity and the guarding of the ballot and the taking of the votes, which of course is indispensable, is so great, we are to consider whether the merely complimentary—because that is what it amounts to in my mind—or the merely advisory advantage to be obtained by these people having a Delegate in Congress is sufficient to warrant the expenditure of from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars every two years. If not, we ought not to do it. The Senator says "let us do this now, but if it turns out that we are to elect nobody else, then let us drop this." It has already turned out in committee that we are not to elect anybody else practically; and so, if we are not to elect anybody else, do not let us impose upon this overburdened people the expense of paying $50,000 or more every two years for electing a Delegate. If, when this bill comes into the Senate, the Senate should determine that there shall be an election which is a real election of persons to exercise authority over the District and to regulate its municipal affairs, then if my honorable friend proposes a Delegate my argument against a Delegate will lose so much of its force as it respects the expense, because we must go to the expense in any case. But, so long as the Senate decides that it will not allow the people of this District to choose their municipal rulers, I say it is unjust to impose upon them the enormous burden, in addition to their present burdens, of choosing a merely ornamental agent who is to speak for them in the House of Representatives and to call attention to things that the city needs, when, as I said yesterday, we all know that the citizens of this District can call attention and do call attention to whatever the city and the District needs in ways which are just as effectual.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It does not strike me that the argument of the Senator from Vermont is a good one. Instead of dispensing with the Delegate because the expense of registration and election is in the neighborhood of $70,000, it is better to make the expense of registration less. We all know perfectly well that there is no necessity that there should be any such expense. They have registration in Vermont, they have registration in New Jersey, and the people of neither State would permit any such expenditure in the registration of about 30,000 votes. There is no propriety in it, and if any such expense has been incurred, it has been improperly incurred, and this new government must correct it.

I was in favor, and am in favor, and shall continue to vote in favor, of the people of the District having their own Legislature, having suffrage; but I am in favor, if they cannot get that, of their having this Delegate. It has been said here that we all represent the District. No; what is everybody's business is nobody's business, and we want some one here to inform us what the necessities of this community are, some one whom the people of the District can approach. There is just as much propriety in that as there is in having a Delegate from any of the Territories. I hope that this provision will prevail, and then I hope somebody who has had the matter under consideration will move that one or more of these commissioners shall be elected by the people. Then there will be some members of the school board, a Delegate, and one or more of the commissioners to be elected, all coming under one expense of registration, and that expense need not be any more oppressive in this city than it is in the city of Burlington, in Vermont.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, as I said last night, I am willing to give the people of this District a Delegate, for I can see that he may be of use to them although he has got no power whatever; but when the proposition is offered as a substitute and as a toy thrown to them in lieu of absolute power, when the whole power is taken away from them and this is given to them as an apology, as something to amuse them, to satisfy them with, I am opposed to it on that ground. That I understand to be the purpose of this proposition mainly. I am willing to vote for it in connection with other things, but as a substitute and as a compensation for taking from these people all local self-government, to tax them without representation for years to come, I will not vote for it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harvey, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, and Washburn—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Davis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ransom, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Thurman, Tipton, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morton, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Stockton, and Windom—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORTON. I offer a substitute for the third section of the bill, which I ask may be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out the third section of the bill and in lieu of it to insert:

SEC. 3. There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and two to be elected by the qualified voters of the District, to be known as the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the members first to be appointed and elected respectively shall be so for the terms following, in the order of their appointment, namely: first, one for six years, to be elected; secondly, one for four years, to be appointed; and, thirdly, one for two years, to be elected; and each member thereafter appointed or elected shall hold for the term of six years, except that all vacancies are to be filled for the residue only of an unexpired term. But in case of a vacancy in the appointment made by the President occurring during the recess of the Senate, the President may fill the same by appointing a member, who shall hold his place only until the end of the next session of the Senate. No member appointed for the full term of six years shall be eligible for reappointment or election. The member first confirmed for six years shall during his term be president of said board; and the succeeding president, from time to time, shall be that one of the other two members first appointed or elected whose term is nearest expired, or, after such terms have expired, shall be that member appointed or elected for six years whose term is nearest expired; but in case of there being no president under this rule, or of the inability or neglect of any president to act, said board of commissioners may elect one of their own number president pro tempore. The president of said board shall preside and preserve order at its meetings, and the salary of each said member shall be at the rate of $4,500 per year. Each member of said board shall, before he enters upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath, before one of the justices of the supreme court of said District, to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him by law.

Mr. MORTON. All the change that that makes in the existing section is that it provides that two of the three commissioners shall be elected instead of appointed. In every other respect the language is just as it stands in the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to amend the amendment so that it will read "two to be appointed and one to be elected." I propose this as a test; and if it is carried, of course it will require some subsequent amendments to perfect the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SARGENT. I have an observation to make on the amendment that I propose. The Government of the United States is indorser, or guarantor of the bonds of the District to the amount of some $10,000,000. By the policy of the legislation of the last session it in effect has become the guarantor to the amount of $18,000,000, or whatever the whole debt may be. Furthermore, the Government of the United States is responsible, directly responsible, for the indebtedness of this District. I think for these strong reasons it should have a controlling voice in the management of the affairs of the District. The principle of election certainly is conceded when a single person is to be elected to the board by the people. If it were possible to divide the thing evenly, I would be in favor of an even division, and would be very glad to vote for it. The people of this District will be called upon to pay 2 per cent. tax upon their property. That will not raise enough revenue, although the tax will be very onerous, to carry on the affairs of this District. It will take from one million to one million three hundred thousand dollars more in annual appropriations by Congress to administer the affairs of this District. That was about the amount we appropriated in the special bill that passed toward the close of the last session. That has been about the amount we have appropriated for a number of years past; indeed, we have rather exceeded that amount than fallen below it. I will not stop to discuss the justice of these appropriations by the Government. I will make a single observation merely on that point. We have a capital laid out here upon grand dimensions. No men who were sane would ever for building purposes or for the purpose of residence have laid out a capital on a scale like that of the city of Washington, with these immense avenues that will take side by side three Broadways of New York, if I am not mistaken in my impressions, traversing the city, in all directions, the ordinary streets wide as Michigan avenue, in the city of Chicago. The ordinary streets here are wider than those in almost any other city, and I believe I can say that they are wider than the avenues in any other city in the United States. Everything is laid out on an immense scale. We have parks and reservations. We have, by the very necessity of these wide spaces, long distances to carry gas-pipes and to carry water-pipes. On account of the scale of the city extraordinary expenses are imposed upon the people in every direction.

This being so, and the Government of the United States in addition owning one-half the property, both real and personal, in the District, by any fair valuation which can be made, it is only just and legitimate that the Government should pay one-half of the expenses toward running it. That I think has always been the sense of Congress. It has been so expressed on the statute-books for several years past and especially in the act which we passed toward the close of the last session. This being so, the Government being guarantor for ten millions of bonds, it being responsible really for further indebtedness, the Government also being compelled by the very condition of things, being its capital, and by its sovereignty here to make the appropriation of a million or more annually for running the affairs of this District, it should have a controlling voice in the disposal of that money and in the administration of affairs here. If not a controlling voice, at any rate it should have an even voice. An even voice is impossible unless you have a board that might come to a dead-lock so that there could not be any business done before it. Consequently, where there are three, as one must be on one side, I wish to test the sense of the Senate whether it is not prudent in us to see that the Government has the control.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I do not regard this as raising properly the question of suffrage in the District. The present government, unless we exchange it for some other, has no suffrage whatever. This is a mere proposition to amend the existing laws for the time being, or until they can be tested by proper application and experience.

It has been suggested on some sides that we ought to give these people an opportunity to disburse their own money. That, however, is not the question. It is whether you will give them an opportunity to disburse already the funds of the United States. This city is bankrupt—no money in its treasury—and cannot pay its debt or even the interest thereon without the assistance of the Government of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, under these circumstances it seems to me extremely proper that we shall do something as a foundation for the government of the city hereafter; and it is not more required on the part of the colored people than it is on the part of the whites. We gave them a government, and what did they do? They did not pay any attention to the limits of law, but expended millions upon millions beyond the limits prescribed by Congress. They made great improvements, but did not obey the law. While this community is in a state of bankruptcy, I say that we ought to administer upon the finances of the District until they can rescue themselves by a season of economy somewhat from their present financial embarrassment; and it is, it seems to me, farcical to talk about its being an infringement upon the rights of suffrage here to say that we will substitute this bill as proposed for the existing form of government.

Then, when we come to look upon the broader ground whether the United States may institute such a government as this, it is to be observed that in the early history of the country we had nothing but governors and commissioners, territorial governments over much larger territories than this fractional part of the old ten miles square. It seems to me that the present bill is not in antagonism to the idea of suffrage at all. Then again, Mr. President, the people here, as has been said, are a floating population. There is as much responsibility for the past conduct of affairs to be placed upon the whites as upon the colored people. I think, therefore, that we ought to adopt in main the bill that has been reported. Anybody who will examine the bill will see that it has been prepared with great care. Perhaps it extends too far into minutiae, into details, but it will not hinder the practical operation of the bill; it will greatly facilitate the execution of the law.

It has been argued here that we should not even allow a Delegate in the other House. It has already been voted down. We all know that, so far as we have seen the practical operation of having a Delegate here, it has been eminently to the advantage of the District. The gentleman who has been selected has been abundantly qualified for his position. He has shown himself to be a man of integrity and intelligence, and yet the very parties who argue against the expense of having a Delegate here ask to have the whole machinery and paraphernalia of a municipal government at an expense of ten times the amount that it would cost for a Delegate.

But, Mr. President, I have already said more than I intended. I merely desire to enter my protest against the idea that we are infringing in the slightest degree upon suffrage in offering a substitute for the existing law which offers no suffrage whatever in the District.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I would like to ask the Senator from Vermont, who has just taken his seat, what guarantee we have under this bill, if it becomes a law, of a better government than we had under the former law? That was an appointed government. It was appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and kept in existence here for years. The Senator has just stated that they paid no attention to laws whatever; that they ran over all law, and squandered the money of the people most shamefully. I say so too; and for my part I would rather trust the people of the District to administer their own affairs than trust any appointed power whatever.

Mr. President, I listened to the debate yesterday in regard to the question of suffrage, and I feel some interest in that too. I say this bill strikes down the suffrage, and I think it is because the colored people predominate in this District. That is my conviction; but I may be wrong about that. For one I conceive that no population in this Union is fit to administer a municipal government, from New York City down to the smallest village in the country. The affairs of a municipality may be compared properly, I think, to those of a railroad company, a steamship line, a banking institution, or any other concern in which individuals own stock. Nobody ever heard of the stockholders of a company inviting outsiders to come in and vote to regulate their affairs, and no corporation that did such a thing could exist for any length of time; it would soon become bankrupt.

My friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] yesterday said that the people outside of the District had interfered in the elections here, had carried the elections, and had forced a Legislature upon the Territory which was irresponsible, or words to that effect. If that is true, it is an argument directly against the late government, and it is an argument against the proposed government, because I think this is a perpetuation of the late government. I see that there is very little change in the subordinate offices in the District now from what they were two or three years ago. They are substantially the same. The same spirit that governed this District for the last three years is governing it to-day.

I unite with the Senator from Vermont, who has just taken his seat, in saying that the Delegate sent from this District to the other House on the organization of the territorial government is an able man. He is faithful to those whom he represents. He has started an idea here that never had any footing in this Hall or in the other end of the Capitol before, so far as I know, and it has been worked up diligently on all sides until in all the debate that has occurred here on this question I have not heard one solitary word said against the proposition to saddle one-half of this improvident debt on the Government of the United States and one-half of the expenses of the government for the future. What does that mean? I undertake to say from the advance that has been made on that question in the last eighteen months that eighteen months more will not expire before you will saddle the whole of the expense of the District on the Government of the United States, provided the United States Government will submit to it. Upon what basis has this proposition been made to the United States? Mr. CHIPMAN says that the Government of the United States owns as much property in the city of Washington as all the rest of the people put together—about $300,000,000 in value.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend allow me to read him an extract from a report on that very point?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. I read from the report of the board of public works, published by authority:

In this connection it may be proper to submit a general statement as to the relations of the United States Government toward the District of Columbia, touching the improvements of streets, roads, and avenues. The total value of public and private property in the District of Columbia is about $150,000,000.

Turning over to another part of the report, we find—

Value of the ground of Government reservations, estimated by a commission in 1870.....	$16, 186, 334 99
Cost of the public buildings erected on the above grounds, obtained from the appropriations made for the purpose, to date.....	30, 548, 426 12

Making $46,734,761.11; less than one-third of the aggregate amount.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me a moment? Does that say anything about reservations or lands belonging to the Government on which there are no buildings?

Mr. MORTON. It says:

Value of the ground of Government reservations.

Mr. SARGENT. I think there are no public buildings included.

Mr. MORTON. It says "value of the ground of Government reservations;" and then comes the "cost of the public buildings."

Mr. SARGENT. Thereon?

Mr. MORTON. "Erected on the above grounds."

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator please tell me what the value of Franklin Square is?

Mr. MORTON. There is no other property outside of that.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I did not expect this debate to be so prolonged. I confess great surprise at finding a seeming universal acquiescence in the proposition to quarter upon the Government of the United States one-half of the expenses of this District in the future. I do not say this bill provides exactly that, but I understand from the bill that it hints at it pretty strongly. The substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] proposed in exact terms one-half, as I understand his bill; that is a tax of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the property of the people of the District and an appropriation out of the public Treasury equivalent to $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon an equal value of property. I see in a morning paper a statement that the Committee on the Library, I believe, or the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—I do not recollect which—have instructed their chairman to make a report, which they will do, to buy certain squares in the city of Washington for the purpose of putting up a building for the Library, and I do not know what else, but three or four other establishments of one kind or another, which will probably cost \$150,000,000 before they are finished, or to extend the Capitol. For one, if the property owned by the Government of the United States in the city of Washington is to be made a basis of taxation on the Government of the United States, I shall never feel it my duty to vote again for the expenditure of one solitary dollar for any public building. Look at the States. There is hardly a State in the Union but what has more than one public building of the United States within its limits—a court-house, custom-house, or post-offices. Your table groans at every session of Congress with applications to the Government of the United States to build these public buildings for the convenience of the officers of the Government. We always provide in advance that the jurisdiction shall be surrendered to the United States and that the State shall guarantee that it shall never tax the property. Why not? Is not every court-house, every custom-house, and everything else that belongs to the United States—arsenals, dock-yards, and everything else just as liable to taxation as the Capitol of the United States here, as the State Department, as the Post-Office Department, the Patent Office, and the Treasury building? It is proposed that the Government shall levy a tax upon the parks and circles and squares that have been embellished by the United States for the gratification of the people of Washington just as public buildings have been built for the gratification of the people mainly of the city of Washington. It is true that persons coming here from a distance enjoy somewhat of these things, but mainly they are built for the gratification of citizens of Washington, and here is a cool, deliberate proposition to tax the people of the United States for their benefit.

I can see but one solitary argument in favor of saddling this debt upon the United States. You have sat here blindly, with your eyes shut, for three years, and suffered the people of this District to be robbed of their money and of their property and loaded down with taxation. The city is bankrupt, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] says. Where has the money gone? It has gone into the pockets of men; and notwithstanding that they have walked right square over the law to the knowledge of everybody, they came in great confidence to your door and asked for an appropriation to reimburse them for the money that they had expended, and you passed the appropriation without any hesitation.

Mr. President, for one I protest against any more hasty legislation in this regard. The bill that went through here last June went through at railroad speed. Nobody had time to look into it; nobody understood it. I thought, inasmuch as the District treasury was empty, that it was a mere proposition to borrow money from the United States to pay the interest on its bonds and to pay some contracts that had been executed where the laborers were without money, and that that money was to be refunded by the District to the Government of the United States. A few days ago a proposition came in here and was pushed through with great pertinacity; it was said it ought to be done at once; that the credit of the Government was at stake; that the interest on these bonds had not been paid; that there was not one single cent in the treasury to pay it; and the Government of the United States was called upon to pay the interest. I undertake to say that the Government will be called upon until those bonds are matured and made to pay every farthing of interest, not one sixpence of which ever will be reimbursed to the Government of the United States. That is my opinion. I shall not be surprised if it goes further than that. If you get another Delegate as efficient as the late Delegate in the House of Representatives to manage affairs, they may pile the balance of this debt on the people of the United States.

Look at it, Mr. President. Only four or five years ago a whole district of this city was a swamp; it was not worth twenty-five cents a square foot. It was bought up mainly by speculators and it has been made worth from $1.50 to $2 a foot. When you destroyed the territorial government last summer the persons who had been speculating in this real estate were embarrassed. So it was understood on the street. If the Congress of the United States had not come to their aid by taking up the worthless scrip, and a great deal of it was said to be in their hands—I do not know how much, but at any rate if you could have closed the doors of the Treasury it would have brought it out before this time. They had exhausted the property of the District; they had exhausted their credit; they could not go any further; improvement had to stop, and the only remedy was to audit and fund the debt in United States 3.65 bonds, to the extent, I see by the report here, of not less than $10,000,000. The Government appropriated since 1870 about $5,000,000, in round numbers, toward the payment of work done on the line of property said to be owned by the United States. That makes $15,000,000 that has been saddled on this Government in the last three years. At that rate I want to know how much longer it will be before the Government will be called upon to expend $5,000,000 a year for the city of Washington. And for whose benefit will it be?

I recollect last year there was something said about the width of the avenues here; that it was impossible for the people to pave and take care of the avenues because they were so wide, and inasmuch as the Government had laid off the avenues the Government should be properly charged with the cost of their improvement. Now, sir, this is downright sophistry; it is not anything else. The avenues do not differ in any respect from streets. They are called by a different name, that is all, and they were laid off before anybody lived on them, were they not? Were they not laid off and paved before anybody lived on them?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend of course desires to be accurate. Does he understand that there is no difference between avenues and streets in width?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I mean to say there is no difference in principle between an avenue and a street.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In principle?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I mean that when the Government or when individuals lay off a town or city and people go upon those streets and buy property and settle there, they do it with their eyes open; they can see whether they are on an avenue or a street.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As an abstract proposition, they are both streets, being walked on, of course. Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I do mean that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then I do not think I will combat the Senator's argument.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Then what becomes of the argument that the Government is bound to improve those avenues? Within my recollection, within the last five years, property on Massachusetts avenue was not worth half what it was worth on Seventh street, not half what it was worth on F street, and very many streets in the city. Now it is the highest property in the city almost, with the exception of that on Pennsylvania avenue. It is a very desirable section of the city. It has been made so entirely by the Government of the United States, by the payment of money out of the Treasury. Look at the circles. Those circles have been embellished and improved, and not one solitary dollar has been charged to the city. A public park is being laid out and embellished by the Government of the United States near the capital. The city is paying nothing on that. I do not think there is a parallel anywhere in the Union or in Europe. Every capital nearly raises the money out of the property of the people in order to embellish their city. Of course, the people of Washington will not do it if the Congress of the United States will furnish the money to do it. They were in terrible distress, terribly oppressed with debt and taxation, and looking in every possible direction for relief they turned their eyes upon Congress. That is not to be wondered at; but I do wonder that Congress listened to them. I confess I wonder at that. This is a far more important matter to my mind than the suffrage question, and I think that is important too.

Before I conclude I want to say that I would vote for a proposition to restrict the suffrage, white and black, to persons who own property in this city. I will not mention the sum, but it ought to be something; it ought to be from $250 to $500. I do not think a man who runs loose in the street, as the Senator from Nevada said the other day, ought to vote to raise money by taxation on the property of a town, either here or elsewhere. I know that was the universal custom all through the Southern States ever since my recollection. In all the towns and cities of the South, so far as I can remember, there was a qualification on suffrage. In voting for members of the Legislature, members of Congress, governors, and officers of that sort, suffrage was universal; everybody voted, except perhaps in Virginia, Missouri, and North Carolina; I do not recollect about those States distinctly. In most of the States the suffrage was universal; yet in municipal governments the suffrage was restricted to property-owners. A person who owned no property was not allowed to vote for municipal officers. I shall not make the proposition to do that here, because it is not necessary if the Senate declines to give the right of suffrage at all.

Yesterday the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON,] speaking in regard to the admission of a Delegate, said it would only cost $5,000, and he thought the bill was worth a great deal more than that. Now I confess to my ignorance about a great deal of this bill. I have not read it, and I undertake to say not one-half the Senators on this floor have read it. It is impossible for ordinary men to master the details of such a thing—a book of two hundred or three hundred pages—in any reasonable time. I have looked at enough of it to try to ascertain what principles are involved; and I see that one principle is to carry on the government against the wishes of the people, without their assent, without their co-operation, without their votes. That is one principle. And another principle in the bill is to saddle, as I stated, one-half at least of the debt of this District on the Government of the United States, and one-half the expense of its government in the future. Against these two principles I wish to protest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON].

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I intend to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California. I believe that if this bill is to pass, it ought to pass with a majority of these commissioners under the control and direction of the Government of the United States because this bill does contemplate beyond question that the expenditure of money and the raising of money shall be under our control. Now, to provide by appropriations and by taxation for the expenditure of money through Congress, and then to provide by popular election for the men who shall administer the affairs, it seems to me is a mistake.

My friend from Texas is alarmed at the proposition made by my colleague from Iowa by which one-half of the expenditures of this District are to be paid by the General Government. That is not a very extraordinary proposition, nor is it a new proposition. If you look to the legislation of Congress for many years past, you will find that we have constantly and always made large appropriations for the people of this District. This very Metropolitan police that now costs nearly $300,000 was wholly paid for by the Government of the United States for more than four years; and the District only came to be taxed to pay a portion of that expense because there was an increase of the salaries of the members of the Metropolitan police force. So of the water supply of this city; the Government of the United States owns the water-works and the Government of the United States has made vast expenditures out of the Treasury for the purpose of supplying these people with water, and the people are required now to pay only a mere pittance for this purpose. So of the gas supply and other things having reference to the local affairs of this city, including schools.

My friend from Texas says, repeating what was said by the Senator from California the other day, that a bill was passed through without consideration at the last session reorganizing the government of the District of Columbia and saddling the Government of the United States with a debt of $10,000,000. I protest against that statement. It was the board of public works that created this debt; a board created by our laws, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and we simply provided for its adjustment into 3.65 bonds to the extent as the Senator has truly said of $10,000,000. It was as a limitation of the power of the people of this District to create an illimitable debt, that the law of last session was passed.

I do not believe it is safe to intrust the administration of all these vast interests to the hands of a majority of a board to be elected by the people of this District. If we provide for the election of a majority of this board, let us provide that the board shall also levy taxes and provide that the people shall supply the remainder of the funds necessary to carry on the affairs of this District. The temporary board of commissioners now managing its affairs have made a report showing us that it will cost $3,300,000 to maintain this District government for the ensuing year. They show that at a tax levy of 2 per cent. on the taxable property of this District there will only be raised $1,600,000; so that whatever we do, if this District government is to be maintained as it is now being maintained at the capital of the nation, we are obliged to appropriate at least a million and a half dollars per annum. If we do that, then let us retain control over the appropriations and their expenditure. If we are not to do that and this District is to relapse into the condition it was in eight or ten years ago, then let us organize a mere municipal government here and let the people of the District take care of themselves and repair their streets and pave their streets and attend to all their municipal affairs without governmental interference. If this system of appropriations is to go on, it seems to me that we ought to provide in some way, as by the appointment of these commissioners, for the expenditure of the money under our own control. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, so that the people of this District may also have a representation upon this board. We are bound to tax them. We do tax them under this bill and under any bill that we may pass. We are bound to tax them. Therefore they ought to have some representation in the method and manner of the expenditures which we are to make here under this system of taxation and appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, there are some desires in this world that grow on what they feed. My honorable friend sitting near me [Mr. MORTON] yesterday was extremely desirous that we should be careful not to violate the principle of suffrage in this District. That has grown to a desire now to control the executive part of the government here. I can add nothing to the impropriety of that after what has been so well said by my honorable friend from Iowa. It only needs a glance at the condition of things to see the absurdity of that proposition, in my judgment. What is our situation here to-day in this District as a Congress of the United States? We have by our legislation, forced upon us by the action of the people of this District governing in their own affairs—to use language quite common on this floor—been put in the position of indorsing bonds to the amount of $10,000,000. How did that come? By allowing the people of the District to govern themselves. That is the way that was done; and we are to-day liable, as a Congress having the exclusive jurisdiction here, for between eighteen and twenty-one million dollars. That is the debt of this District. I will not go into the question of how that has been appropriated. It has been said that a good deal of it has been stolen. I do not sympathize with that idea at all. I think it has been expended in an extravagant way, but a great thing has been achieved by it after all. But the question is can we afford to repeat it? Will you add other tens and eighteens of millions? That is the question. Have we not had enough of that local administration? Have we not gone far enough in allowing the people of this District to manage their own affairs, as the phrase is? Why, Mr. President, what have we been doing with these people all the time? Does my honorable friend who sits near me, and who is the earnest advocate of this proposition, know how many millions we have expended here for the water-works, entirely independent of this District and of these people? Does he know that to-day we pay all the expenditures for the administration of justice in this District—every dollar of them? Does he know that we originated and pay two-thirds of the expense of the Metropolitan police and of the fire department, and that we support in this District the benevolent institutions? And yet the argument is, "The people ought to govern themselves; we should not crucify these people; we must make this government and then turn it over into the hands of these people to administer, we paying the bills!" That may be a very nice way to do, but it does not occur to me that it is so.

This bill goes on the ground that we have seen enough of that. This bill goes on the ground that there shall be no extravagant expenditures, and no appropriations and no improvements except what are authorized by Congress. No board of public works is to exist; no such powers are to be conferred upon anybody. The Government, standing responsible for whatever is done here and responsible for this large debt, undertakes to administer its affairs independent of the power of the people to incur any further liabilities. And now my honorable friend, instead of being content with the idea that we will not crucify—if I may be allowed that term—the principle of suffrage, insists upon it that this government shall be put into the hands of the people here to govern practically the Government of the United States, it paying the bills, for that is precisely what it comes to.

If it is the pleasure of the Senate to save the question of suffrage by the election of one member of this board, I can understand how that can be done consistent with the duties and responsibilities that the Government of the United States will take upon itself under this bill; but that we should stand behind all the liabilities that have been incurred under these circumstances, that we should take the future direction of appropriations and be responsible for them, and then allow the people here to elect persons to administer all this, the Congress of the United States paying the bills, is a thing that I cannot conceive that the Senate of the United States will be likely to do; and that you will do if you vote for the proposition of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, this is a bill of surprises, or rather the support of it. I heard the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] make a statement a few minutes ago—and I know that he is well informed, because he was on the committee of investigation, and he has paid great attention to the affairs of this District—I heard him say that the bill which was passed last June did not saddle the United States with $10,000,000, but that that had been done by the board of public works. We all understand, I think, that the bulk of this debt was created either by or under the auspices of the board of public works, an appointed government. That is the understanding of the Senator from Iowa; it is my understanding; but we are now told by the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] that it has been done by the people of this District through the elective franchise, and that we propose now to put the government back into their hands. The Senator from Maine says it has been done by an elective government. Which is right? The Senator from Iowa is right; and my friend from Maine, I submit, is mistaken upon that point.

Mr. President, we have had a new principle of government advocated here this morning by my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] It is that because the United States own some property here which the board of public works says is less than one-third of the whole amount—property alone shall be represented—that this one-third of the amount of property here shall take to itself the entire government of this District, governing the other two-thirds and governing one hundred and fifty thousand people besides. That is a new principle in democratic government.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Indiana does not wish to misrepresent me, I am sure.

Mr. MORTON. Certainly not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. He will find no such words in any remarks that I made. I merely stated that the present government was in a state of bankruptcy, and that I did not conceive that there was anything wrong in substituting this new form of government for the one that had done this, and that it did not disturb any suffrage the people here now have.

Mr. MORTON. If this District is in a state of bankruptcy, how did it become so? The Senator from Iowa has told us. I am not here for the purpose of bringing charges against the board of public works or making recrimination. No such thing. But upon the broad situation who is responsible for the creation of this debt? We have heard from the Senator from Iowa, and we knew it before; and yet it is proposed to again create an irresponsible government, with power to tax these people, to tax them heavily, and they have no voice, no power to resist it. My friend from Maine would consent if he could not help it, but he would not consent any other way, to give them one of these commissioners and place them in the minority; let them have representation and put the power elsewhere—place an appointed government here that is able to tax them 3 per cent., and they have one man to represent their wishes, and he is powerless!

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Why does the Senator say that this is to put them into the hands of a government who have a power to tax them 3 per cent.?

Mr. MORTON. Well, I will not specify the amount, and perhaps there may be a limit upon taxation; but what I mean to say is that if you give them one commissioner and allow the President to appoint two, they are in the minority. They may vote against it, but they are powerless, and fifty millions of property is to govern one hundred millions and one hundred and fifty thousand people besides. If that is democracy or republicanism, I do not understand it. I agree with my friend from Texas in one thing: I would rather trust a government elected by the people and responsible to the people every year or every two years than any appointed government that can be created—a government not responsible to the people, but simply responsible, if responsible at all, to somebody else that has no particular interest in it. That is what we are doing. That is what we did do; and we are told that that appointed government—it is said—and I believe it is not denied—that that appointed government did disregard the law, ran right over it; and we are now told that there is a debt here of eighteen or twenty-one millions that we are to pay. That is the logic of this bill, that we are to pay every dollar of it. Not only so, but that we are to continue to pay the expenses of this District. When you have taken from this people the power, when you have made them as powerless as subjects are in Russia or in any other government in Europe, the logic is that you shall pay the expenses, and that is what is meant by it; that is what it will come to. It is that we are to pay the whole twenty-one millions; and we are to pay the debts hereafter to be created.

Why, Mr. President, see what this bill contemplates. Look at it:

SEC. 4. That any member of said board may be removed by the President for cause, to be stated in the written order of removal; but no member shall be removed by reason of his opinions, nor until after he shall have been allowed a reasonable opportunity of being summarily heard upon any charge made against him,

The President of the United States has the power to remove at any time for cause. Of course he is to be the judge of the cause. He may exercise that power most honestly and sincerely; but does not everybody see that it makes the President the absolute ruler of this District? He can remove these trustees or commissioners any day if the policy they pursue does not suit him in regard to a tax, in regard to streets, in regard to anything which he may consider to be cause; and if in the course of time it should so happen, if such a great misfortune should come upon the country that we should have a democratic President elected in 1876, it would not take him fifteen minutes after he was inaugurated to turn out these commissioners and put good, reliable democrats in their place and take charge of the entire government of this District. I think my friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] has not lost sight of this in his cordial support of this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. "A consummation most devoutly to be wished."

Mr. MORTON. Yes, my friend says it would be "a consummation most devoutly to be wished" to turn these commissioners out and put democrats in. I have no doubt he is entirely sincere in that remark.

The republican party is expected to do this thing, to strike suffrage down, to take a step backward. We are told by our democratic friends that the republican party has to go over a precipice, and is already on the verge. Well, if we go over, we will back over. That is the way just as it is proposed to do now—back over. We will never go over if we go straight ahead, as we ought to do, and stand fast by our principles.

Sir, I believe that the path of duty is the path of safety, and that is to organize this Government in accordance with the fundamental principles of republican government so far as we can do it; and I believe the path of safety consists in giving to the people of this District the control in their local and domestic affairs. So far as the property of the United States is concerned, the Government of the United States now controls it. It has its Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds; and so far as that property is concerned, it is not now and will not be under the control of the District. But the people here are to be taxed. They have $100,000,000 of property now, we are told. The city has been increasing, and will grow again unless you place it under a despotic government, and their wishes are not to be consulted, but their property is to be taxed at the will of men who are to be appointed, in whose selection they have no choice, over whom they have no control, and who are in nowise responsible to them.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the Senate will bear me witness that I have referred to no party politics in the consideration of this bill. They will also bear me witness that in the report of the investigating committee on the affairs of the District of Columbia at the last session I manifested no spirit of a partisan whatever, and sought no political or party advantage from the action of that committee. But the Senator from Indiana seems to be under the delusion that it is impossible for a Senator on this floor to be actuated by any other consideration than party motives. I beg leave to assure him that he is entirely mistaken; that, however rare it may be, there is such a thing on all sides of this Chamber as considering a measure with sole reference to the public good; and surely, if any measure ought to be and can be considered with sole reference to the public welfare or to the welfare of those interested in it, it is the District bill which is now before the Senate. There is no occasion whatsoever for party politics to be introduced into the discussion; and on this side of the Chamber there has been no such attempt. Although the opportunity was inviting enough to speak of the kind of government this District had for about two years, what was the result of that government, how that government originated, by whom it was appointed, and who was responsible for the personnel of the government and for the discharge of their duties, yet we have refrained from saying anything of the kind, while the Senator from Indiana, day in and day out, more suo, has been charging everybody here who favors such a government as the majority of the people of this District wish, as a majority of this Senate believe to be best, with being enemies of free institutions, enemies of popular suffrage, enemies of democratic principles, and the like!

Why, Mr. President, when I recollect what measures the Senator from Indiana has promoted in this Senate since I have had the honor to have a seat here, he must permit me to say that I cannot accept him as an expounder of democratic principles, nor follow his lead when he assumes to be the leader in support of free institutions.

The Senator asks if the late District government proved to be a failure, if it ran the people of this District greatly in debt, what branch of it was it that thus ran them in debt, the appointed branch, the board of public works, or the popular branch, the elected Legislature of the District; and he seems to think that there is an irreconcilable antagonism between what was said by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Maine on the subject of the indebtedness of this District and by whom it was created. Let me tell my friend from Indiana that there is no mystery about this thing at all. Every department of that government was responsible, the appointed and the elected. The appointed part of that government, its board of public works, was responsible; and the elected department, what was called the Legislative Assembly of the District, were but the base, subservient tools of the board of public works, and they could not be otherwise in the mode in which they were elected and chosen. That is the truth of this business. So far from that elected branch of the District government having stainless and pure hands, so far from their being free from any responsibility for the burdens under which these people now groan and which we are called upon to lift from their shoulders, if that legislative branch of the government had performed but half its duty, the board of public works never could have oppressed this District as it is now oppressed; and therefore my friend from Indiana will find poor consolation in the elected branch of the late government to support his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair is informed that a call was made for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment and they have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment to the amendment be again reported so that we may understand precisely what the question is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The part of the amendment which it is proposed to amend reads:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and two to be elected by the qualified voters of the District.

It is proposed to amend that clause so as to read:

That there shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, two of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and one to be elected by the qualified voters of the District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the point of this amendment to the amendment, if I understand it, is that it is proposed that the people of the District shall not have a majority representation in the administration of their municipal affairs; and if I am against their having majority representation, then of course I am in favor of this amendment. If I am in favor of their having majority representation, then of course I am opposed to this amendment. As I have said, I think the people of this city certainly ought to have a chance of selecting a majority of their rulers, if they cannot have them all, which they ought to have. So I shall vote against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To state the converse of that proposition, and which is the true position, as the Government of the United States pays the bills, they dance and we pay the fiddler, we think on the whole that we ought to have a majority of the control; and those who are in favor of that will vote for the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. CRAGIN. It has been stated by several Senators on this floor that this District is bankrupt and it is only through the Government of the United States that it can pay its debts. The question now is whether they shall select a majority of the assignees or whether the creditors or the party that is to pay the debt shall have a majority of the assignees. That is the whole substance of the question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the question.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Ramsey, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Stevenson, Stewart, and Thurman—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Boreman, Cameron, Clayton, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Pease, Robertson, Sherman, Sprague, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Wright—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boggy, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Oglesby, Pratt, Spencer, Stockton, and Windom—25.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] I do not know how he would vote if he were present, but I should vote "yea."

The Chief Clerk proceeded and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. SARGENT, (having first voted in the affirmative.) I have no desire to be more extreme than my friend from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] On this proposition I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Cameron, Cragin, Dorsey, Fenton, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamlin, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, and Washburn—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Boreman, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Stewart, Thurman, Tipton, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Boggy, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Ferry of Connecticut, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Robertson, Spencer, Sprague, Stockton, and Windom—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment to be inserted at the end of the ninety-fourth section:

Provided, That claims presented and allowed under the sixth section of an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, shall be presented for exchange, as provided by the seventh section of said act, within ninety days from the passage of this act, and if not so presented the privilege of thus exchanging shall not be exercised by any holder of any such claim; and the sinking-fund commissioners of the District of Columbia are prohibited from issuing any bond, as provided in the seventh section of the act hereinbefore referred to, after the expiration of ninety days from the passage of this act: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to in any manner pledge the faith of the United States to the payment of any debt or obligation of the District of Columbia, or of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, other than the fifty-year bonds provided for by the seventh section of the act hereinbefore referred to.

Senators will recollect that by the sixth section of the act passed in June last a board of audit was created to audit the unadjusted claims on the District, and by the seventh section the sinking-fund commissioners of the District of Columbia were authorized to fund the debt so audited into 3.65 bonds. The board of audit have audited, in round numbers, about $8,000,000 of this debt; but the persons owning these claims refuse or rather omit to convert their claims into these 3.65 bonds; and it is supposed by some that they are holding these claims until this bill is enacted into a law, and that then they will claim that the Government of the United States has assumed the debt of the District of Columbia and that we shall be bound in some other way for its payment. The object of this amendment is to require the persons who hold these claims to present them to the funding commissioners of the District of Columbia within ninety days; and if they fail to do so, their rights will be cut off. I think it is an amendment that ought to be adopted in order to adjust the debts of this District.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment? I suggest to him that he make the time six months. I think three months is too short a time.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not particular about the time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Three months is long enough; the whole thing has already been pending so long.

Mr. ALLISON. These claims have all been filed long since. I should think ninety days would be sufficient. Senators around me say "ninety days." I am willing to compromise on four months, and I will so change the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. CAMERON. I doubt very much the propriety of such an amendment as this. What right have we to say to the creditors of this District that they shall come in and accept the terms we offer, or else lose their debt?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, we do not say they shall lose their debt; but we leave them just where they are.

Mr. CAMERON. It amounts to that. It is said that these men charged too much as compensation for their work. Probably they did, but they were contractors and workmen offering to do a certain amount of work for a certain price. The legal authorities of this District agreed to pay them that price. They expected when they made the contracts to receive the amount for which they contracted at early periods and in good, honest, legal money. They were kept out of their money for months, some of them for years, because the corporation with whom they contracted, under the belief that they were the agents of the Government of the United States, were unable to pay them. Many of these contractors pledged the anticipated receipts under their contracts, for the purpose of raising money, at great loss to themselves. Few of them, after the struggle they have had here, have much pay for their work; and it would be wrong, it would be shameful as I think, for the Government now to put its heavy hand on these poor people, for they are all poor now.

It has become a habit to abuse and speak slightly of everybody who has had anything to do with the District government for the last three or four years. I would like Senators to turn their attention to what this District was, what this city was fifteen years ago and then contrast the condition of affairs now. Then the much-abused people of this city had here a parcel of straggling villages, every one of which was unfit to represent any part of the great capital of this country; and now they have made it one of the most beautiful cities in the world. If this great work has cost a little too much money, it has added to the wealth of every man and woman who had a foot of ground in the city. The price for which the property in this city would sell now is far ahead, some millions ahead of what it would have brought before these much-abused people took charge of the city. I have no interest in them; I hardly know anybody belonging to them; but I think it is my duty when I see men become as it were the victims of common scolds, to stand up and defend them as well as I can. Thirty years hence, some of these men, and among them the much-abused Governor Shepherd, will be almost canonized in this city. He is yet a young man, and he will probably live to overcome all this; and I have no doubt he will in after years be pointed at as the master spirit who had courage, intelligence, and vigor enough to combine the intellect of this town in favor of its prosperity. I have no patience with people who have got rich here through the intelligence and the vigor of the men who took charge of this work, and who now grumble about taxation. Men and women who talk about taxation and who are opposed to it are the last who ought to do so. You never hear of the poor talking against taxation. It is the rich that always quibble about taxes. I remember once a long while ago a very rich man was talking to me against the taxes of the borough in which I lived. I said to him, "Mr. Hummel, I wish to God I was taxed five times as much as you are, because I am sure it would represent something which I ought to pay." We all ought to have a pride in this city, and especially I as an old man who have been here off and on for more than fifty years am entitled to feel some pride in it; and if there have been some wrongs here, I would overlook them in consideration of the great good that has been done.

I shall vote against any proposition that cuts down the price of the laborer's toil.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I am quite sure that my friend from Pennsylvania has never read the testimony taken before your committee of last year, or he would not have made the speech we have just listened to. He says that these contractors expected to be paid in good, honest money, as I understand him, whereas that testimony shows that allowances of from 15 to 25 per cent. were made in letting contracts because of the depreciated medium in the form of green certificates and yellow certificates, and every other sort of colored certificates, in which these persons expected to receive their pay. This whole subject was considered at the last session when the bill was passed. It was brought more particularly to the attention of Congress by a message from the President upon that subject; and it was on a full explanation and after the report made by the committee, a report in which the committee were entirely unanimous, that the provision remained in the bill as originally reported—the provision for the conversion of the floating debt into the bonded debt provided for by the bill; and that bonded debt was fixed with the rate of interest of 3.65 per cent. upon a computation made with the utmost care that such bond would fully pay the contractors a fair and reasonable compensation for their work. And now the Senator from Pennsylvania says that they expected to be paid in good money when they made their contracts, whereas the fact is directly the reverse, and the contract price of the work was enhanced from 15 to 25 per cent. because they were not to be paid in good, honest money.

One thing further while I am up. My friend from Pennsylvania says, as I understand him, that in thirteen years from this time Shepherd will be canonized here in the District of Columbia. My friend forgets that in that grand old church which canonizes the saints, a hundred years must elapse, a full century after the death of man or woman, before he or she can be made a saint; and although this is a fast age, I do not think we have become so fast that in thirteen years from now Governor Shepherd will be canonized as a saint in any part of the United States. Mr. President, I am quite sure that five years from now no member of the board of public works will be a saint in the District of Columbia. When the fifty-two miles of wooden pavement in this District shall have rotted, as it will in less than five years from this day and become worse than an old corduroy road across a swamp, and when the people of this District or the Government of the United States will be called upon to expend some $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 to replace that rotten pavement, I do not think that any member of the board of public works which laid it here and which taxed the people of this District to lay it, which imposed on the Government of the United States an expenditure of millions of money to lay it, will be canonized as a saint in the minds of any part of the people of this District.

Mr. CAMERON. I am sorry to consume a moment of time longer. I only desire to say that my good friend, the Senator from Ohio, was, I believe, one of that committee which investigated all these bad doings in the city of Washington. Was he not? In looking over the report of that committee I did not see a word which spoke derogatory to the character for honesty of Mr. Shepherd. Not a word of that kind, I think, is in that report. I said that in thirty years he would be canonized, not in thirteen; but I think it will be in a much shorter time than thirty years, for we move faster in this country than elsewhere. A man who showed himself so superior in the ability required for the post to which he was called will not have to wait many years before he is appreciated.

The Senator talks about the wooden pavements here. At the time they were commenced there was a rage all over the United States to build wooden pavements. They had long been used in Russia, and their failure there was not known here until we made them a part of our system of paving. They have failed in Cincinnati and they have failed I believe in Columbus, Ohio; they have failed in San Francisco, and they have failed in Chicago; but they had not failed when the experiment was tried here.

But everything that is created perishes. A pavement no more than a man or a woman lives forever. Pavements have their day and they are useful in their time, but they die. All the improvements which men project die and give place to something else. The wooden pavement already has given way to the concrete, which proves itself better than wood, and after a while that will perish and give way to something else. But in all time, with the improvements begun here, this city will go on and prosper and every year become more beautiful. I have a pride in believing that in a very few years this will be the most beautiful city in the world. Look at this Capitol now; there is nothing like it in any part of the present civilized world. It is more beautiful, more grand, and more convenient in all its appointments than any other building of the kind. Look around these streets everywhere. You can ride over them without being jostled or hurt. How was it before Mr. Shepherd took charge here? The Senator from Ohio and I came here about the same time a great many years ago, and he will remember what a set of straggling and dirty villages there were here; how difficult it was ordinarily to get from the Capitol to the White House or the public buildings beyond. It is no trouble to do that now. What has all this cost? Comparatively nothing. As I said some time ago, the assessed value and the real value of this city is many hundred per cent. more than it was before these expenses began, and the grumblers are getting the advantage of them. We had better act liberally, and we had better act so that in the future our acts shall be approved of.

I know the Senator from Ohio is one of the most humane, one of the most benevolent, and one of the most just men in this body; and yet he is a little governed by politics, I am sorry to believe. [Laughter.] He cannot believe that anything which comes out of a republican head or heart is quite right. If Mr. Shepherd had been a good democrat, I dare say my friend from Ohio would have patted him on the shoulder and said, "That is very nice." [Laughter.]

Mr. TIPTON. I desire to say that I apprehend that the Senator from Ohio misunderstood the Senator from Pennsylvania in this: that the Senator from Ohio supposed that the Senator from Pennsylvania said that this former officer of the District would be canonized in thirty years. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that he would be canonized for thirty years. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMERON. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I would not say a word in prolongation of this discussion upon the point suggested by our venerable friend from Pennsylvania if it were not for one remark that he made, and that was that he had looked into the report of the investigating committee last year and found no condemnation, as I understood him, of Governor Shepherd.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes.

Mr. THURMAN. Well, sir, I have heard a great deal of that sort of thing heretofore by people who have not looked into the report with their glasses on, although they ought to have worn glasses if they could not see otherwise. It is very true that in that report I believe there is no specific charge against individuals; and why not? The report was made toward the close of the session. The committee felt that they had a great duty to perform to relieve this District from a government that was utterly bankrupt and had proved itself totally inefficient and ill-suited to rule over this people; and with the patriotic purpose of passing a bill that should relieve the people from that government, we determined to avoid every question that could excite discussion or excite passion on the floor of either House of Congress, and to put our report upon public grounds and public considerations so that it might be the unanimous report of the committee, no member foregoing his own conviction either as to the guilt or innocence of individuals; and that accounts for that report.

We did not consider ourselves a grand jury to find an indictment against particular individuals. We considered ourselves a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to perform a much higher duty than to prefer indictments against individuals, to perform the duty of reporting to Congress whether the then government of this District was the best government for the District, or whether another and a different government ought to be inaugurated in its stead. That was our highest duty to perform, and we performed that duty. Had we taken the other course, had we brought in indictments against individuals, even though we had reported them by the vote of the entire committee, we should have had such a contest in both Houses here that no measure reported by us could pass. We knew that, and therefore we avoided accusations against individuals and reported simply upon public considerations a bill that we asked Congress to pass. There is no inference from the silence of that report, as to the opinions of the committee or of the members of the committee, as to the guilt or innocence of individuals.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON. I hope the Senator will wait a moment. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion till I say a word in reply to my friend from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina withdraw his motion?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do for the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON. The Senator from Ohio did not repeat exactly the words which I used. I said that in his report there was not one word affecting the integrity of Mr. Shepherd, written or printed. I repeat that now; and I will add that Mr. Shepherd was the great point of attack, and if anything could have been said derogatory to his integrity, if the Senator from Ohio had not found it out, some other member of the committee would.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President—

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask the Senator who has the floor to move an adjournment, rather than have that motion made, to move that we go into executive session for a few minutes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Very well.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But I do not wish to make that motion if it interferes with the Senator who has charge of the bill before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to say that at this state of the session, and in the present condition of the business of the Senate, we ought to settle this matter before we adjourn. I hope the Senate will not adjourn or go into executive session at the present time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SARGENT. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cameron, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Stevenson, Thurman, and Tipton—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Wright—24.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Maryland, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stockton, and Windom—24.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say one word upon the amendment pending. Will it be out of order? [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It will be unusual. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say then that, if I understand the matter, Congress has provided for the funding of a certain amount of the indebtedness of this District, $10,000,000 I think. If I heard the sum stated aright by the Senator from Iowa, about $8,000,000 have been funded. Now I believe that having funded so much of that, no Congress will ever depart from that rule in relation to the balance, nor do I think they ought to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Maine will pardon me, about $8,000,000 have been audited while only a little over $3,000,000 have been funded, and the persons who hold those claims are holding them back for the purpose of making claims against Congress in the future, probably.

Mr. HAMLIN. It was to that very point that I proposed to say a word. I do not think Congress, having funded to the amount which the Senator names, can fund the balance at any higher rate of interest in justice to those who have already taken the bonds. They will not do it. We must adhere to that rule. In relation to the amount that has not been audited, the Senator suggests that there are those withholding audit for the purpose of getting a higher rate of interest. It may be so. I wish to say, however, that it has come to my knowledge within a few days that a very considerable amount of that indebtedness is held by individuals in my neighborhood who did not know that the term for auditing had expired. They appealed to me the other day, and I have introduced a bill, and it has gone to the Committee on Finance to extend the time for auditing.

I hope, therefore, that this amendment will prevail; that the time may be extended; that the outstanding claims may be audited; and I know I speak for a very considerable portion of the claimants who were not aware that the time for auditing had expired.

Senators are very hopeful if they expect that this vast bill, which is a code of itself, is ever to become a law unless it is enacted at this Congress, and I have no sort of expectation of that. I think we are wasting all our time. I think it would be the wisest thing we could do to lay it on the table. It never can pass the House of Representatives at this session in the few remaining days; and yet if it shall stand any earthly possible chance, let this amendment go in, as it is a right one.

Mr. SHERMAN. This last proviso, it seems to me, is not well considered; but my friend from Iowa is generally correct. I will read it:

Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to in any manner pledge the faith of the United States to the payment of any debt or obligation of the District of Columbia, or of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, other than the fifty-year bonds provided for by the seventh section of the act hereinbefore referred to.

That is an implied declaration that the faith of the United States is pledged to the payment of the principal and interest of those bonds. That is not the pledge. The pledge is a limited pledge that taxes will be imposed, and so on. I do not see any use in that proviso except to extend the obligation of the United States, and I think it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the modification of that proviso, so that it will create no greater pledge than the pledge already created with reference to those fifty-year bonds. But I want no implication in this law whereby the faith of the United States is pledged for the payment of the whole debt of this District.

Mr. SHERMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. ALLISON. But unless that is enacted it will be so claimed.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is rather dangerous to legislate about a matter of this kind, affecting difficult questions, in a hasty way. I think this language ought not to be adopted. I am not prepared to propose an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is very manifest, I think even the friends of the bill are satisfied, that it cannot be concluded to-night. Therefore I hope that motion will prevail.

Mr. MORTON. I would like to give a notice before the motion is put. I desire to say that to-morrow morning I will move to lay the bill on the table with a view of proceeding to the consideration of the resolution in regard to Mr. Pinchback.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 12, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev.

J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

TAXES AND TARIFF.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the special order—the tax and tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the bill which is now before the committee is inspired by no theory, but is demanded by necessity. The President and the Secretary of the Treasury call upon you to increase the revenues. The bill includes no item which is not proposed on account of revenue, no item which is not meant to put money into the Treasury, and inserted in the bill solely on that account, except the one section repealing the tax upon matches.

The bill, as you were told yesterday, proposes to raise from whisky an additional amount of $18,600,000; from tobacco, $4,000,000; from sugar, $3,200,000; and by the restoration of the 10 per cent. taken off in 1872, about $8,000,000; making about $38,800,000, less $2,500,000 taken off from matches; leaving the net product of the bill about $36,300,000 upon the importations of 1872; but upon the reduced importations of the current fiscal year we doubtless ought to deduct at least two millions; so that the product of the bill may be estimated to be about $34,300,000, or, as the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means stated yesterday, in round numbers about $35,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless it can be clearly shown that the necessities of the Treasury call for so much money, this committee ought to reject this bill. A year ago the Secretary of the Treasury suggested the raising of about $42,000,000 additional taxation. I was one of those who at that time joined with the majority of this House in refusing to increase taxes; and unless now greater necessity can be shown than existed a year ago, I would expect this committee to reject this bill and to reject any plan for so large an increase of taxation.

But it seems to me the situation has changed; and to-day I feel that the necessity is upon us of raising substantially the sum of money which this bill provides. A year ago investigation led me to differ from the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I had the satisfaction of finding my estimates for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1874, substantially identical with the result. Now investigation has compelled the conviction—not mere authority from the Treasury but investigation for myself—has compelled the conviction that we need the amount of money provided in this bill.

In the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated the 7th of December, 1874, the Secretary gives his estimate of the expenditures and receipts for the fiscal year, including the actual results for the first quarter, showing that he would upon that basis have in the Treasury a surplus revenue on the 1st of July next of $9,200,796 to be applied to the sinking fund. This would be $6,657,914 better than the actual results of last year. This would leave about $22,000,000 to be provided to satisfy the sinking fund.

But, Mr. Chairman, my colleague upon the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Wood,] told you yesterday that we must beware of the Treasury estimates, that they are not to be relied upon. What does he give us instead? He gives us his own estimates instead of the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury. And when the Secretary, after an elaborate investigation, corrects certain differences in the statements of long-standing accounts, the gentleman from New York takes that adjustment of differences, as given in table I, page 18, of the report of the Secretary, as a ground for criticising the accuracy of the reports. Because the Secretary spends months in elaborating the accuracy of his reports, my colleague upon the committee chooses to take issue with him.

But, after all, we must depend for the future results upon estimates. We are to take the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury as a basis of comparison, and I raise no issue with my colleague for criticising these estimates. It is his right and his duty to examine the estimates. I only ask the same right for myself.

Now, comparing the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury as made in December, 1873, and in December, 1874, and as given in the official reports of the two years, we find that he estimated for the current fiscal year in December, 1873, that the internal-revenue receipts would amount to $108,000,000, the customs receipts to $180,000,000; whereas in December, 1874, he makes the internal-revenue receipts for this current fiscal year $105,098,615, and the customs receipts $162,001,200; showing a reduction in the estimate, caused by the lapse of a year, of nearly $21,000,000 in the resources of the Government; and although he has made during the year a reduction of $14,000,000 in the estimate of expenditures for the current fiscal year, there is a deficiency upon these estimates alone of $7,000,000, caused by the difference in the situation of the country in December, 1873, and December, 1874. But again, Mr. Chairman, look at the actual results for the calendar year 1874, as shown by the monthly debt statements. Examine these figures of the debt, less cash in the Treasury, at three different dates:

January 1, 1874	$2,150,315,326.17
July 1, 1874	2,143,088,241.16
January 1, 1875	2,142,598,302.02

You find that the debt was reduced between January 1, 1874, and July 1, 1874, $16,227,085; but between July, 1874, and January, 1875, the reduction was $489,939. So that there was a difference upon the balance for the six months from July to January of last year of nearly $16,000,000 as against the first six months of that year.

Turn now to the current fiscal year. Put side by side the receipts and expenditures for the first six months of several years:

Not only has the customs revenue fallen off largely as compared with the last year as well as the preceding year, but the internal revenue has fallen off as compared with January of the year preceding $1,434,999.15, and we are for the month worse off by $3,233,082.03. Add to this the result for the first ten days of the month of February from this comparison:

By the flush caused by the discussion of this bill customs have revived feverishly, but internal revenue shows a falling off of $81,000, and the balance is worse than last year for the period by $123,434.71.

So that, as the chairman of the committee well stated yesterday, there has been since January a falling off in the balance of $3,357,521 up to the evening of the 10th of February instant.

This has been produced in spite of the rush for goods and for stamps which calculations upon the effect of legislation have inspired, and which are referred to in the letter from the Department which I submit:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
February 10, 1875.

SIR: In compliance with your request of yesterday by telegram, I have the honor to inclose herewith a comparative statement showing the revenues of the Government from various sources for the first ten days in February, 1873, 1874, and 1875, and also the expenditures covering the same periods.

It is the opinion of the Department that the increase in customs revenues in 1875 over those of 1874 is due to the fact that goods in bonded warehouses are being withdrawn in anticipation of an increased tariff. I will also add that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue states that the receipts from internal revenue have been very much stimulated during the current month by expected increase in taxation; in fact, unusually large orders are now being received by telegram for spirit-stamps, which indicate the payment of tax of stocks of spirits now on hand.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,
House of Representatives.

What I desire now to impress upon this committee is that we are not only suffering from a deficiency in the Treasury, but notwithstanding the excitement caused by propositions to change the duties we are upon a falling schedule. The revenues are still decreasing, and the balances are still accruing against us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, put together the figures of the seven months, with reasonable estimates for the next five months, and we have this result:

Items.	Seven months.	Five months.*	Whole year.
Customs.....	$89,086,395 11	$63,500,000	$152,586,395 11
Internal revenue.....	61,521,986 87	44,000,000	105,521,986 87
Miscellaneous.....	14,494,656 48	10,000,000	24,494,656 48
Total.....	165,103,038 46	117,500,000	282,603,038 46

*Estimated.

This would make the receipts for the year $282,600,000 against estimates of expenditures as given by the Secretary of the Treasury of $275,315,489. I know, sir, this estimate is more sanguine than the estimate of the Treasury. The Treasury ought to err, if it errs at all, on the side of abundant caution, but I am bound to say, upon examining these calculations, that the expenditure may exceed these estimates, and the receipts may fall below, so there is danger to-day that at the end of this fiscal year, on the laws as they stand, we will be with a deficiency upon our current expenses, without saying anything about the sinking fund. The figures I have submitted show an apparent balance in the Treasury of about $7,000,000 on the 1st of July next. The probabilities range between that $7,000,000 and a deficiency in the Treasury on that day.

CRITICISMS.

We heard on yesterday from my colleague on the Ways and Means Committee from the city of New York [Mr. WOOD] a very remarkable speech, in which first of all he complains of the debt statement which is submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. He complains that there is included in the debt statement the Navy pension fund. Why should it not be included in the debt statement? It represents money which the Government has received. It represents a debt. The certificates are held for a specific purpose, I know, but they are obligations of the Government.

Mr. WOOD. Will my colleague allow me to answer him?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Certainly, if the gentleman does not take up too much of my time.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to my colleague for making a reference to my statement in regard to the Navy pension fund. It gives me an opportunity to state more distinctly and more authoritatively the grounds upon which I made that statement.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I trust the gentleman will not take up much time in doing so.

Mr. WOOD. I will not take up my colleague's time. I will refer my colleague to section 4630 of the Revised Statutes, page 908, which is in these words:

SEC. 4630. The net proceeds of all property condemned as prize, shall, when the prize was of superior or equal force to the vessel or vessels making the capture, be decreed to the captors; and when of inferior force, one-half shall be decreed to the United States and the other half to the captors, except that in case of privateers and letters of marque, the whole shall be decreed to the captors, unless it shall be otherwise provided in the commissions issued to such vessels.

This naval pension fund is made up of that proportion of this property, or the proceeds of this property, belonging to the United States, and was placed in the Treasury as a fund by act of Congress, the interest of which should go toward paying the pensions and the balance to be met by appropriations from Congress when necessary. But the principal of the fund itself is the property of the United States. This $14,000,000 which the Secretary of the Treasury sets down as a debt of the United States really belongs to and is the property of the United States as much as this Capitol. If my colleague will let me quote the other provisions of law relating to this as the authority for my declaration, I will convince him of it.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. We all know the sources of the naval pension fund and of the certificates. They are debts of the United States. These certificates are set aside for a specific purpose. This money goes into the Treasury for a specific purpose, and it is as distinctly a debt as anything else.

But, Mr. Chairman, my colleague also objects to recognizing the coin certificates as a part of the debt statement, although those coin certificates represent gold put into the Treasury. I do not wonder that the gentleman from New York finds a great deal to criticize in the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, when he refuses to recognize as a part of the debt of the United States certificates which represent coin that has actually been deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

But my colleague goes on to say that the Secretary of the Treasury ought not to ask for more money while he has forty-four or forty-five million dollars of coin in the Treasury. The gentleman must know that there is no great government that ever conducts its treasury with a less balance than our own maintains. The British treasury, without any legal-tenders to care for, without any bonds outstanding which it expects to pay, without any national credit which it seeks to look after, never has a less average balance than from seven to eight million pounds. It would be the height of imprudence for a Secretary of the Treasury to retain less money in the Treasury than the coin balance.

But the gentleman from New York is kind enough to suggest to the Secretary and to this House where money may be got to bridge over this deficiency. And where, Mr. Chairman, does he suggest? Why, he points to the very innocent little tariff bill which was signed by the President the other day, and says you may get $4,000,000 out of that. We have had very sanguine estimates before, but the highest estimate I have ever heard from anybody who examined that bill and its provisions is from two to two and a half million dollars.

But my colleague says that certain changes were made by the Revised Statutes in the customs duties. We have had that talked over here a great deal, and I will not take time now to consider the effect of the Revised Statutes upon the tariff. But my colleague must know that whatever may have been the changes by the Revised Statutes, we have already had their effect. We have already had in the customs duties which we are collecting the effect of these changes by the Revised Statutes. Yet he tells the Secretary to look for more money out of a source upon which we are relying and from which we are receiving our customs day by day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this were a question of a review of the legislation for twenty years, I could imagine the propriety of the reference of my colleague to the Pacific railroads and the legislation and the administration with reference to them. But this is not a question of a review of our political history for ten or twenty years; it is a question of the present necessities of the Treasury.

Again, my colleague complains that we have been buying bonds at exorbitant rates, paying a premium for them, as he states. It is not important to this debate, perhaps, but the truth is that of all the bonds which have been bought into the Treasury, every dollar has been bought for less than par in gold, and the average of the entire purchases made was 95.19 in gold.

APPROPRIATIONS AND EXPENDITURES.

But I find, Mr. Chairman, that I must hurry on. The gentleman from New York calls attention to the fact that a year ago, upon this side of the House, we boasted of a reduction in the appropriations, and promised a reduction in the expenditures. If we boasted, Mr. Chairman, the boast had good foundation. If we made a promise, the promise has been fulfilled.

I submit the following comparison of appropriations for the last three years, recapitulating them by acts. They show, it will be seen, a reduction this year from last of nearly $19,000,000:

Comparative statement of appropriations for the fiscal years of 1873, 1874 and 1875.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
Warrant Division, July 1, 1874.

*There appears for the first time in this bill an appropriation of $2,216,763 for defraying expenses incident to the national loan for the current fiscal year, the appropriations for that object having heretofore been indefinite. There also appears an appropriation for official postage-stamps required by the various Departments of $1,865,900 in 1874, and $1,707,600 in 1875, without any corresponding appropriation in 1873. To arrive at a just comparison of the appropriations made at each session of Congress, the amounts appropriated for postage and expenses of national loan in 1875 and for postage in 1874 should be deducted from the totals of those years, leaving the amended totals.

But, after all, the expenditures are the main thing. It makes less difference how much we appropriate than it does how much we spend.

Now, setting aside the interest and the purchase of bonds for the sinking fund, which are matters of course outside of the discretion of Congress, and regarding the expenditures, which are the only things over which Congress has control, they were in 1873 $180,488,636; in 1874 they were $194,118,985; while for the current fiscal year, including actual expenses for that portion of the year already passed and estimates for the residue of it, they amount to $172,527,590, an amount less than that of last year by $21,591,395.

We have reduced the expenditures to that extent, and yet, Mr. Chairman, this deficiency still stares us in the face. I for one would be glad if we could have reduced the expenditures still more; but I call the attention of gentlemen on the other side of the House to the fact that they are not without responsibility because the expenditures have not been still further reduced.

REASON OF FALLING OFF OF REVENUE.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] became very jolly yesterday, as it seemed to me, over the failures of the last year, stating that they only represented $155,000,000 as against $228,000,000 for the preceding year; but he very carefully omitted to state that in 1874 the business failures were 5,830 in number, the largest number since 1857, except alone the year 1861.

Now, it may be a cause of rejoicing to the gentleman from New York that it has not been the heavy capitalists who have failed during the year. It may be a gratification to him that in most of the failures the amount of money involved was not as large as in the preceding year, although the number of failures throughout the country was more during the last fiscal year than it has been in any year, except in 1861, since 1857. I do not rejoice to see the smaller business houses tumble, to know that disaster has struck below the shining speculators, to the steady traders and producers of the country.

The table as given by a leading mercantile agency is as follows:

Failures in the United States from 1857 to 1874.

1870.....	5,830	155,239,000

Mr. Chairman, the falling off in the revenue is due to causes that affect the whole country. It indicates depression and disaster; but it also shows thrift, saving, and a husbanding of resources necessary, doubtless, under the existing circumstances, and healthful to the country in the not distant future. Sir, you cannot rebuild the ruins of a panic; you cannot recover from the extravagance of the past few years without thrift and saving and sturdy economy. This means a falling off in the use of articles of luxury from beyond the seas. It involves therefore a reduction in imports and in the amount of duties received.

But this is not all, Mr. Chairman. I find that not only do the imports fall off, but the exports fall off as well. Some gentlemen may suggest: Has not this falling off in the revenue occurred from the change in our revenue laws? If it affected only imports and not exports, then possibly it would be fair to say that we might attribute something of these results to the change in the revenue laws. But look at this table of exports and imports for six months of the year before and the corresponding six months of the year after the important legislation of last June:

BUREAU OF STATISTICS, February 8, 1875.

EDWARD YOUNG,
Chief of Bureau.

Observe that the imports for 1874 were less by $5,000,000 than the exports in 1873, while the exports are $20,000,000 less. Sir, legislation has not produced this result. The country has suffered from a panic and from a general depression of its business interests. If I had time I would ask you to look at the earnings of the great railroad companies, which measure the movement of freight. These show the general falling off in the trade and activity of the country. It would be instructive to consider this falling off, not in this country alone but in all the countries of Europe. It is hardly less there than in this country. But time will not permit such an excursion. I find, sir, in the New York Tribune of the 10th instant this paragraph:

The falling off in freight and immigration has proved a very serious loss to the European steamship companies, and they are not paying their running expenses. Three hundred steamships are laid up in English ports for want of employment. Only fifty-eight steam vessels now run from the United States to Europe. In American dock-yards many vessels are on the stocks for which there is no market, and the number of vessels built this year shows a decline estimated by builders to be one-third of the total for last year.

The falling off in our revenue is due to the falling off of commerce all over the world.

WHY SELECT THESE ARTICLES FOR REVENUE?

The necessity for increased taxation has been forced upon us. It is due to general causes outside of legislation. The passage of some bill like this is imperatively demanded.

Now, it is a fair inquiry: Why are the articles named in this bill selected as the subject of duty and taxation rather than some other objects? In the first place, at this period of the session it was obviously necessary that the Committee on Ways and Means should present to the House a simple schedule, the effect of which might be readily estimated. We had to select, in framing this bill, articles which would produce in themselves a large amount of revenue and would do it with little or no increase in the machinery and officials necessary for collection.

It is known to the House that tea and coffee have been proposed as sources from which our deficiency might be in part made up. But while the consumption of the country, of tea, for example, was 54,500,000 pounds in 1874, the quantity now on hand or afloat is estimated at from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 pounds, and is probably about 45,000,000, or nearly the stock for an entire year. The stock of coffee is limited only by the ability to secure it in advance of anticipated legislation.

The speculators and large buyers of tea and coffee have therefore been desirous to have the duty strike those articles. But the Committee on Ways and Means have been flooded by petitions protesting against such tax. The committee thought it wise, therefore, because they did not believe they could during this fiscal year secure much, if any, revenue from those articles, to omit them from the schedule.

It was proposed also to add an additional tax of 1 per cent. upon the circulation of national banks. If there are any gentlemen in this House who believe it would be wise to add 1 per cent. to the tax upon the circulation of national banks, I ask them to look on pages 140 and 141 of the report on finances of the Secretary of the Treasury for this year. They will see that the average earnings of national banks was 9 per cent. on the capital, and on the capital and surplus about 8½ per cent. They will also find that there is a continual tendency in States where the rate of interest is high to reduce the circulation. We have the estimate of careful men that the increase of 1 per cent. upon the tax upon the circulation of national banks would, within a year, lead to a contraction of perhaps $50,000,000 of national-bank circulation in those States where interest is highest, that is to say, in the West and South. And the committee did not think it wise to take the responsibility of putting such a provision in a tax bill.

Again, it has been suggested in the House, as it was suggested in the committee, that the tax on incomes should be restored. I will not take time now to dwell upon the odious features of that tax, nor upon its great inequalities. Let this suffice, that it would require a very large increase in the number of officials to collect that tax, and more than that, the tax could not be made available until about the end of another fiscal year; therefore for present purposes this source of revenue is beyond our reach.

WILL REVENUE BE INCREASED BY THE BILL?

There are gentlemen who tell us that the revenue will not be increased by the bill which the committee have had the honor to submit. The very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] has called attention at length and very forcibly to the subject of the tax on whisky. I will not travel over the ground which he has covered so well, but as my line of argument runs somewhat parallel to his, I will ask leave to add to what he has said two or three suggestions. In the first place it is objected that an increase of the tax on whisky cannot be collected. And the experience of the Johnson administration is referred to to justify that objection. I will not dwell upon the political demoralization which was the feature of national affairs at that time, nor will I recall the statistics of the frauds in regard to the collection of other taxes besides the tax on whisky under that administration.

You will remember that the law passed July 28, 1868, reduced the tax on whisky from $2 to 50 cents per gallon. The same law also introduced the new system of collecting the tax by means of stamps. I hold in my hand a table showing the amount collected on distilled spirits for the six months ending September 30, 1868, and the six months ending March 31, 1869.

The table is as follows:

Comparative statement showing the gallon tax returned on distilled spirits during the six months ending September 30, 1868, and March 31, 1869.

Months.	Six months ending September 30, 1868.	Months.	Six months ending March 31, 1869.
1868—April.....	$1,393,838 50	1868—October.....	$3,134,460 66
May.....	1,312,595 35	November.....	2,556,768 95
June.....	445,282 35	December.....	2,767,090 52
July.....	1,045,946 13	1869—January.....	2,814,247 51
August.....	2,839,162 14	February.....	2,494,828 31
September.....	1,936,969 19	March.....	2,327,361 71
Total.....	8,973,793 66	Total.....	16,094,757 66

The first six months covered the time before the introduction of stamps; the second six months covered the time just after the introduction of stamps. While in April, 1868, the tax collected on whisky amounted to $1,393,838, it amounted in the next March to $2,327,361. For the six months ending March 30, 1869, the tax amounted to $16,094,757, while for the six months ending September 30, 1868, it amounted to only $3,973,793. In the judgment of revenue officers this result was in large part perhaps chiefly due to the introduction of the system of collecting the tax by stamps.

The present system in reference to the collection of the whisky tax is very thorough. It follows the grain through every gallon which is made until it reaches the consumer. In England a tax of $2 (7s. 6d.) per gallon is collected upon distilled spirits without difficulty. Why may we not collect one-half of that sum in this country? I agree with the Commissioner in his confident judgment that he can collect a tax of a dollar per gallon; and if it can be collected there is no article upon which a tax may more properly be levied than upon distilled spirits. That is the practice of all countries; it is the logic of every tax system.

Complaint is made because this bill proposes to tax the stock on hand. I have voted for that proposition because I was not willing that legislation should be made, even by indirection, the instrument of speculation. Besides that, if you want to make your tax at once productive, it is inevitable that you must impose a tax on the stock on hand, because of about the 60,000,000 gallons, which are taxable in any one year, about 40,000,000 gallons are new either in bond or in the hands of wholesale dealers and rectifiers.

The next provision in the bill is the one increasing the tax on tobacco. Statistics show that there is a constant growth in the production and consumption of tobacco, running from 36,000,000 pounds in 1866, by an almost constant gradation, up 118,000,000 pounds in 1874. The accurate figures are:

	Pounds.
For the years 1863, 1864, and 1865 it averaged	35,790,469
In 1866	36,733,769
In 1867	47,631,494
In 1868	46,764,151
In 1869	64,305,117
In 1870	90,199,085
In 1871	95,096,622
In 1872	95,209,319
In 1873	114,789,208
In 1874	118,548,618

About two years ago I was very much interested in a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means upon the subject of the tax on tobacco, when Governor Bagley, of Michigan, a distinguished man in the politics of his State, as well as a very large manufacturer of tobacco, very clearly stated how by an almost constant law the consumption of tobacco increases while the price of tobacco never at all affects the consumption.

Mr. Kimball, who perhaps knows as much about the tax on tobacco as any man in the country, being at the head of the tobacco department in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, concludes that there are about ten million consumers of tobacco in this country, and they pay that tax; not, as my friend from Virginia, [Mr. WHITEHEAD,] who I see is using his pencil, will tell you by and by, the producer; not even the manufacturer. It is not North Carolina nor Virginia nor Connecticut (though they raise the tobacco) that pay this tax; nor is it New York, where the greater part of this tobacco is manufactured. But it is the consumer who pays the tax. Few men use more than 12 pounds of tobacco a year; and it is notoriously a luxury. I have here a clause in a petition which was submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means a couple of years ago, insisting that no consumer of tobacco ever complained of the tax. I believe that is correct. This is the one article with reference to which the consumer never complains of taxation. The petition says:

Who ever heard a consumer of tobacco complain of the tax? Why not? Because $1 worth of smoking-tobacco, comparatively speaking, will go with the consumer from 50 to 100 times and that of the tobacco chewer from 33 to 66 times further than any other luxurious article that mankind is addicted to.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. As the gentleman has alluded to me, will he allow me to ask him a question? If this tax applies to the consumers only, why have not the committee increased the tax on cigars?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the question is a fair one, and if the gentleman from Virginia will choose to move an amendment increasing the tax on cigars, guaranteeing by the manner of the amendment that the increase can be collected, I will very cheerfully vote with him.

Mr. MYERS. And I will not.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. That is not answering my question.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The next article on the bill is sugar; and I will suggest before I go on that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has an amendment authorized by the committee which will include in the increase proposed by the bill the article of melado.

Now, Mr. Chairman, sugar, like tobacco, is of constant use, and differing from tobacco, is of almost universal use. Besides, differing from tea and coffee, the use of sugar is graded to a considerable extent by the degree of the resources of a family; that is to say, the wealthier classes use more sugar than the poorer classes. Sugar is a sure and an increasing source of revenue. The home-consumption tables of the Bureau of Statistics show that we imported during three years as follows, and I add footings for comparison:

It will be observed that of the imported articles melado and the different grades of sugar there were consumed in the United States in 1873, 1,485,000,000 pounds; that is to say, about 37 pounds for each person in the population, taking for round numbers 40,000,000 as the population. In 1872 the consumption was but 35½ pounds to each person, whereas in 1874 the consumption was 41 pounds to each person of the population. There is a constant increase in the consumption of the imported sugar.

Now, it is true, Mr. Chairman, that very little of the refined grades of sugar are imported. The importations are in the coarser grades, and the refining is chiefly, almost wholly, done in this country. That, however, leaves the fact still patent that the growth of the use of sugar is constant; that it is a sure source of revenue, and that taxation upon this article bears not unequally upon the different classes of the population.

Again, the average percentage on all dutiable articles brought into the country was last year 38½%. On the grades of sugar of which most are used the duty ranges from 38½ to 42½ per cent.; and if you make the proposed addition the duty will become only about 47 per cent. on the grades of which most are used. So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if you are compelled to tax anything, sugar is as legitimate a source of taxation as can be named.

I come now to the 10 per cent. restoration. The reduction of duties upon the class of articles so included did not increase the importation, and did not particularly augment the revenues. On the contrary it will be found that, notwithstanding the growth of the country, there were imported of the leading articles affected by the 10 per cent. reduction, in the fiscal year ending August 1, 1872, $194,000,000; and in the fiscal year ending August 1, 1873, $189,000,000; a falling off of about $5,000,000 in the value of merchandise not in the duties.

Here are the accurate figures:

EDWARD YOUNG,
Chief of Bureau.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS, February 9, 1875.

So gentlemen have no right to tell us that the restoration will reduce importations or diminish the revenues.

I wish I had time to call attention to some of the leading articles included in this table; but I must refer gentlemen to the reports of the Bureau of Statistics for further details of figures.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the only exception to the features of this bill which increases the revenue is that one section which strikes out the tax on matches. That is stricken out because with the various articles which have been selected for revenue it was thought that so much could be spared from the Treasury. It was given to the tax on matches because of the strong appeals which come to the committee showing that particular industry is greatly disturbed, almost shaken to its foundations, because of frauds, or if not frauds, at least because a system of packing has been introduced, to which the law seems to give its approval and indorsement, which destroys those manufacturers who choose still to include one hundred matches in each box.

THE SINKING FUND.

Mr. Chairman, if the committee will bear with me a little while, I desire to refer to the very remarkable treatment of the sinking fund in which a member of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. WOOD] from the city of New York indulged yesterday. In the first place, he was kind enough to state he thought the sinking fund is absurd. Perhaps it is; but yet this country is bound by the act of February 25, 1862, to maintain the sinking fund. That law expressly provides that the money shall be set apart for the sinking fund before any of the ordinary expenses of the Government are paid. But the gentleman again says the sinking fund was abolished by the act of 1870. That act simply provides for the cancellation of the bonds and for keeping the accounts. That act was passed in 1870, and since 1869 the sinking fund has been equitably kept up until last year. I will not go over the ground which the chairman of the committee went over yesterday, indicating how the failure to provide for this sinking fund has affected our credit abroad. It is an open secret that foreign bankers give as one reason why they did not close up our five per cents last year is the failure to provide for the sinking fund.

But not only does my colleague say, first, that the sinking fund is absurd, and, secondly, that it has been abolished, but in the third place he suggests it may be met by putting in the bonds which have been already bought for the reduction of the debt. Those bonds have been canceled and destroyed, and yet my colleague suggests the sinking fund may be met by putting in canceled bonds. First it is absurd and then it has been abolished, and next it may be paid by canceled bonds. I do not wonder upon such theories that the gentleman from New York suggests the Secretary of the Treasury ought to have more courage. He ought not to be so tender of the public faith, of the law, of solemn pledges perhaps, my colleague thinks.

My colleague is honored according to the newspapers with being the leading candidate of his party for Speaker in the next House of Representatives. What he says then is not simply the utterance of the Representative from New York, but it becomes the utterance of a great party, and indicates the policy that party would employ if in power. He tells us he would not repudiate. O, no; but he would settle the sinking fund with canceled bonds.

Besides, he tells us this sinking fund has been kept up for five or seven years in advance. The creditors of the country will understand what will be the fate of the sinking fund when it falls into the hands of gentlemen who say it is absurd, that it has been abolished, that it may be paid by canceled bonds, and that it has in fact been paid for five or seven years in advance.

My distinguished friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] who I am sorry not to see upon the floor to-day, called attention to the fact yesterday that there had been a reduction of the gross amount of the national debt. That is true. The national debt reached its maximum the 1st of March, 1866, when it was $2,707,856,000.22. It was $2,143,996,172.29 February 1, 1875. It has been reduced $563,859,827.93.

If the whole reduction of debt were allowed on the sinking fund, and the latter reckoned from 1862, it would stand:

Reduction of debt.....	$563,859,827 93
Demands of sinking fund.....	417,556,000 00

Excess..... 146,303,827 93

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] urge that all reductions of the debt should so apply on the sinking fund. They know the joint resolution of March 17, 1864, in these words, (13 Statutes, 404:)

Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt, and for other purposes:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt, by a period not exceeding one year, from time to time, either with or without a rebate of interest upon the coupons, as to him may seem expedient; and he is hereby authorized to dispose of any gold in the Treasury of the United States not necessary for the payment of interest of the public debt: Provided, That the obligation to create the sinking fund according to the act of February 25, 1862, shall not be impaired thereby.

Approved March 17, 1864.

They know the distinct provision of law that the payment for the sinking fund is "to be made within such fiscal year." (Act of February 25, 1862.)

They set up equities against law; construction against solemn pledges. The pledge follows every obligation of the Government to-day. "Within every fiscal year" the guarantee of the sinking fund is to be maintained.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object to any further extension of time. There are many gentlemen who desire to be heard, and some I fear will be cut out altogether.

Mr. DAWES. I hardly think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will do that, after two gentlemen yesterday were each allowed an hour and a half.

Mr. KILLINGER. If this were the last speech to extend beyond an hour I would withdraw my objection, but there are to be half a dozen of the same kind.

Mr. DAWES. I hardly think so.

Mr. CESSNA. I am opposed to all unnecessary delay or protraction of the discussion on this subject. I do not wish to object in any spirit of unkindness or antagonism. I am willing the gentleman from New York shall print the remainder of his remarks. I object, however, because I think that is the wish of the House. Although I take no part in this discussion I must object.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the gentleman from New York did not come here prepared with a written speech, and he only wants a short extension of time.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. If the gentleman had not objected I should have finished what I had to say by this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the extension of the gentleman's time for ten minutes?

Mr. CESSNA. If it does not come out of somebody else's time I object.

Mr. DAWES. I think the gentleman who will have the floor will perhaps be more courteous than the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA.]

Mr. KELLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman yield to me for ten minutes?

Mr. KELLEY. I yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to suggest that when the gentleman from New York has occupied his ten minutes the committee be permitted to rise, that we may proceed with an appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLEY. O, no; let us go on with this.

Mr. CESSNA. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that I made my objection with no want of courtesy to the gentleman from New York or to the committee.

Mr. DAWES. In what I said I did not mean any other want of courtesy than that which cuts off a man in the middle of his speech. Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] yields to me a portion of his time.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield my colleague on the committee ten minutes.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I desire to add but two or three points to what I have said. In the first place this: that there is no tax upon this country so onerous as the gold premium; that whatever reduces the revenue contributes to the increase of the gold premium; and that a falling off of the revenue has been accompanied almost pari passu by an increase of the gold premium, which means an increase in the price of articles of consumption, and is not attended by an increase in the wages of labor.

I ask the committee to pass the bill which is before it in some form that the revenue may be adequate to meet the obligations of the country; because if you suffer the Treasury to be bankrupt, you put a heavy hand upon every industry of the nation, upon every interest of the nation; because you trample down production and trade and commerce.

The natural revenues of the country are decreasing still; and, as I have indicated, so long as the country goes on in thrift and saving they cannot be expected very greatly to increase. The bill which is submitted provides only enough to meet the legitimate demands of the country. It contains nothing for jobs. It leaves no margin for extravagance. Nothing more is provided by the bill than the natural requirements of the Government call for. My colleague from the city of New York [Mr. WOOD] said he would not be sorry if the dependents of the Government went without their pay; that is to say, if the Army and Navy went without their pay; if the honest creditors of the Government went without their pay. And he added in the elegant manner which gives effect to all he says, "If that be repudiation, make the most of it." For one I am not willing that the Army and the Navy shall go without their pay. I am not willing that any honest creditor of the country shall go without his dues. I am not willing that any obligation of this nation shall be dishonored. We have had notice from the other side of the House by the speech of its distinguished Representative that they are willing to leave the Administration bare. Then I ask gentlemen on this side if they are willing to leave the Treasury empty? Many things may be left undone; but you cannot afford to leave the Treasury bankrupt. You cannot afford, with an opposition majority coming into this House, to refuse to provide for the legitimate demands of the Government in this year and the year to come. Gentlemen on the other side are willing to leave the Administration bare; that is to say, they are willing to leave the Government bare. This is not a question of party politics, Mr. Chairman. Yet the majority on this side are responsible for the honor of the nation; and when gentlemen come here and sneer at the sinking fund; when they come here and tell us "If that be repudiation, make the most of it," it seems to me that the majority of this House should say, "We will have none of repudiation; we stamp it out in its beginnings." I ask this House to stand faithfully to its solemn pledges; to say that the country shall not be left naked in the face of its enemies; that as a great party goes out of power in this House it may be at least said that one of its last acts was to protect the honor of the nation, was to stand true to law, to faith, to integrity.

I thank the committee for the courtesy they have shown me.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the effort to protect the sinking fund and to provide for the exigencies of the Government by reimposing war taxes in the midst of such general depression as now prevails is as ill-judged as it is inopportune. It will fail of its intended effect. If we adopt this bill, I confidently predict that instead of replenishing the revenues it will deplete them, and that the Administration will meet the Forty-fourth Congress with a demand for a further increase of taxes to supply deficiencies.

The falling off in the revenues demonstrates the poverty of the people. They do not contribute to the Treasury, because they cannot supply their wants. They are unable to consume dutiable and taxable commodities, because we have by our legislation paralyzed their productive power. It is a maxim of mine, and I cannot too often repeat it, that a prosperous people not only supply their wants but gratify their desires; while a people suffering as the laboring people of this country now are not only do not gratify their desires, but are unable to provide themselves with the necessities of life.

Water-power hitherto utilized to the advantage of the country and its people now runs to waste; steam-engines and the cunning machinery they once impelled rust in repose; and more than a million of willing working people are living in enforced idleness and want. Hence it is that the revenues decline; and not by reason of the thrifty economy so eloquently depicted by my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS.] Those thrifty laborers who are living on public or private charity are not practicing economy or contributing much to the public welfare.

Sir, I have said that this condition of things is the result of our legislation. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who addressed the House yesterday, dissents, I know, from this proposition. He tells us that decline in the receipts of the Treasury is produced by occult and mysterious laws more potent than human legislation. Ay, sir, more potent than human legislation; but in spite of their potency its servants. Occult and mysterious they are, as are all the laws of nature; but, sir, they are brought into operation as the result of human legislation, and we have called them into activity.

Sir, in 1865 and 1866 the Government needed about $600,000,000 a year, and it had only the people dwelling north of the then recently confederated States upon whom to draw; and in the form of direct taxes of internal revenue and duties on imports it drew in 1866 more than $490,000,000 and in 1867 more than $446,000,000, and that without complaint from or trenching upon the comforts of a prosperous people. Mark the strange contrast our present condition presents. Now, with our Government restored, with several of our Southern States abounding in prosperity as much as any others, as much as any can do under our vicious financial legislation, there is a demand for but $300,000,000 from all sources, and it is said that to meet this we must reimpose upon a prostrate people $35,000,000 of war taxes.

I am opposed to the proposition; and, sir, if any gentleman will study the occult and mysterious laws referred to in the light of constantly recurring knowledge, let him go back with me and behold the first application of Hugh McCulloch's patent financial tourniquet. It was in 1867. Mr. McCulloch was then Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and was dealing with the bond-brokers and bullion-dealers of this country and Europe. The first announcement of his purpose to apply his patent was issued in an edict from Fort Wayne, announcing his intention to resume specie payments.

Congress yielded to his wishes, and permitted a contraction of $44,000,000 of the volume of greenbacks. Meanwhile he industriously converted those of our obligations which were temporary in their character, which were held by the American people and the interest on which was payable in our own paper money, into gold-bearing bonds, which might be exported. By the time Congress reassembled his tourniquet had produced its inevitable result—wide-spread paralysis—and from every State in the Union came a demand that the work of contracting the currency should be arrested. Many mills were then as idle as they are now, business was depressed, and general bankruptcy seemed imminent; but the people made themselves heard, and Congress repealed the act empowering the Secretary to contract the greenback money.

On the 4th of March, 1869, Mr. McCulloch retired from the office of Secretary of the Treasury and became a junior partner in the London bankinghouse of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. When that house failed his fortunes were not impaired, he is now, thanks to the folly of the American Congress, the proud head of a great London banking house known as Hugh McCulloch & Co. and more than a million of the working people of the country are in want. In one week, ay, in the first five days of one week, it is recorded that forty-one sober, industrious, and honest working men in my own city begged the privilege of passing the winter in the house of correction rather than starve or steal.

But we are asked to close our eyes upon this suffering and maintain the honor of the country by imposing taxes enough to enable the Treasury to purchase more than $31,000,000 of bonds. And when the sufferings of our people are alluded to, the reply is, "Look at our bonds! look at our credit! Was ever a nation able to put its bonds at a premium so speedily as we have done?" That is no answer to me, and it is no answer to the men who, having acquired by long years of toil and economy little homesteads embarrassed by a small mortgage, have seen them pass under the sheriff's hammer at a nominal price to the mortgagee. It is no answer to the worthy people who have lived under a noble sense of independence, in view of their ability to maintain themselves and their families by labor, and who now find themselves forced to endure the torture of living on the bitter bread of charity.

Sir, I am as anxious as any gentleman on this floor to sustain the credit of the country. I have desired to see it gradually appreciated; but when I see our finances so managed as to feed the gold and bullion brokers on the blood of my constituents, I feel constrained to beg Congress to order a halt, and if possible to retrace some of its mistaken steps. My colleague on the committee from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] says that the public debt has been reduced $600,000,000. Sir, I know that these figures represent the reduction as it appears in the books of the Treasury and in the monthly debt statements. But, sir, in its effects upon the industries of the country the debt has not been reduced. No, sir; measured thus it has been more than doubled. Let me demonstrate this.

What is the burden of a debt on a great country like this, to which four hundred thousand people would gladly come every year and identify themselves with its fortunes and share the burdens of its debt if our unwise legislation was not repelling them? It is not the ultimate extinguishment of the principal. It is the draught it makes upon the current resources, the annual earnings of the people. Let us measure our debt by what it required to pay the interest when we owed the $600,000,000 which we have extinguished and what it now requires. Everybody that could work was then employed; now more than a million workers are idle. Yet in days labor we now pay more than two for every one the interest on the total debt required. We pay more than two pounds of tobacco for one, more than two pounds of cotton for one, two bushels of wheat, two barrels of flour for one, and infinitely more than two gallons of petroleum, and so on with all the great staples of the country that we are able to export. And this is all due to the processes we have resorted to for enhancing the value of our bonds in foreign markets. We have thus doubled the burdens of the people while reducing the total of the debt. We have thus made the property of the rich man more valuable, while we have robbed millions of laborers of their whole estate, the wages of the current day they waste in enforced idleness.

I come now directly to the legislation of this Congress. No; before doing so I had better recur to some remarks in this same direction I had the honor of addressing to the Fortieth Congress. On the 18th of January, 1868, I said:

Mr. Chairman, two policies were open to us at the close of the war. We have tried one, and the results are but too painfully apparent; the other is still open to us. It is true we cannot repair the losses already endured, but we can check the downward tendency, quicken industry, and give a new impulse to the productive power of the country. It is open to us to diminish the depreciation in the rate of wages by diminishing taxes and furnishing, as we had done during the war, a sound circulating medium adequate in volume for the rapid exchange of commodities among our own people, and thus secure employment to our laborers with fair wages for their work; or, on the other hand, we can by imposing taxes not demanded by our exigencies and contracting the currency, impair confidence, force sales, palsy enterprise, reduce wages, and deprive the laborer of a market for the only commodity he has to sell—his industry.

Gentlemen will say there can for the present be no employment because the markets are overstocked and there is what political economists often speak of, "a glut in the market." Sir, the time has never been when the markets of the world were glutted. When that event shall come, every home will be well furnished, and every human being well clothed. A superabundance of the necessities of life cannot exist while the urgent wants of millions cannot be supplied. Our markets are not glutted. The stock of goods of every kind in the hands of merchants is unusually low, and there are unemployed people in the country who need them all, and who would gladly labor for the means to purchase them all. The wretch that shivers in a cheerless home without food, fuel, or adequate clothing; she who, ill-fed herself, shares her last crust with her hungry children; and they who in the midst of winter are deprived of the privilege of toiling, and as their goods are thrown rudely into the street realize a landlord's power when rent is in arrear, do not believe that the market is glutted. Nor is it. The disease from which we suffer is not glut or plethora. Its seat is in the functions of circulation. It is congestion produced by a financial tourniquet applied by a charlatan. That phrase "glut in the market" involves a perversion of terms, and is used to express the fact that the masses are from some cause unable to consume their usual supply of the comforts or necessities of life. It does not, as it implies, express the fact that there is an over supply of commodities essential to the comfort of man, but that there is financial derangement. It is a convenient phrase for the theorist, a veil used to conceal a fact the occurrence of which should admonish every statesman that there is something wrong in the prevailing practice of government.

The author of the next treatise on popular fallacies should make "glut in the market" the subject of a leading chapter; for they who use the phrase invariably confound terms and designate the consequence as the cause. Thus the Irish Republic, in the course of a generally able article in its issue of January 4, says:

"From all parts of Massachusetts and Connecticut we have been receiving during the past six weeks the very unwelcome intelligence that mill-owners and manufacturers were either contracting their producing operations or suspending them altogether. Running half or quarter time appears to be the order of the day, while not infrequently the engine fires are blown out and the machinery left to rust in idleness. The cause is obvious. There is little or no demand for goods. The consequences are what we have already stated. The hands of hundreds of thousands of honest workmen are idle, and their children are ill-fed and ill-clad under the biting blast of a North American winter."

Let me point out the fallacy of this statement. Fires are blown out and machinery left to rust in idleness not because there is no demand for goods, but because throughout the South and West there is no circulating medium with which to effect exchanges; and the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury with the cry of the creditor class for resumption have destroyed confidence in individual credit. The proposition should be stated thus:

There is little or no demand for goods. The cause is obvious: it is that the hands of hundreds of thousands of honest workmen are idle and their children ill-fed and ill-clad because mill-owners and manufacturers have been compelled to contract their operations and withhold from laborers employment and wages with which they would be able to purchase the products of the farmer and manufacturer.

The general theory I am advancing is not new, and is one that should never be disregarded by those who legislate for the people of a republic. The social evils we are enduring, the bankruptcy that is overtaking so many men of enterprise, the want and enforced idleness that prevail so largely among our laboring classes, are due to two causes—excessive internal taxation and the curtailment of our currency at a time when the numbers and activities of our people were rapidly increasing. The Secretary of the Treasury and his adherents are responsible for this general prostration of credit and business. They talk of the honor of the country and the necessity of maintaining it by making the paper dollar equal to the gold dollar and of hastening the day when our bonds shall be paid in gold. The means to which they resort will not produce the results they desire but will defeat them. Nor are those who resist them hostile to the bondholder. They aim to secure the laborer the possession and just fruits of his hard inheritance, and by the rapid development of the boundless resources of the country and the restoration of general prosperity to enable the Government to meet the utmost of its obligations with honor at maturity. The contest is between the debtor and the creditor class, the men of investments and the men of enterprise; and during all such contests the laboring classes are inevitable sufferers.

The issue thus raised is as old as civilization, and now, as always heretofore, the creditor class is the aggressor. Alison, in his History of Europe from the fall of Napoleon to the accession of his nephew, says:

"Whoever has studied with attention the structure or tendencies of society, either as they are portrayed in the annals of ancient history or exist in the complicated relations of men around us, must have become aware that the greatest evils which in the later stages of national progress come to afflict mankind arise from the undue influence and paramount importance of realized riches. That the rich, in the later stages of national progress, are constantly getting richer and the poor poorer is a common observation, which has been repeated in every age from the days of Solon to those of Sir Robert Peel; and many of the greatest changes which have occurred in the world—in particular the fall of the Roman empire—may be distinctly traced to the long-continued operation of this pernicious tendency. * * * For the evils complained of arose from the unavoidable result of a stationary currency, coexisting with the rapid increase in the numbers and transactions of mankind; and these were only aggravated by every addition made to the energies and productive powers of society."

Again he says:

"But if an increase in the numbers and industry of men coexists with a diminution of the circulating medium by which their transactions are carried on, the most serious evils await society, and the whole relations of its different classes to each other will be speedily changed; and it is in that state of things that the saying proves true that the rich are every day growing richer and the poor poorer."—Alison's History of Europe, 1815-52, chapter 1.

As Sir Archibald Alison was not gifted with more than human prescience he could not have foreseen the condition of our country in the years that are passing. If, therefore, he described it, he did so by declaring a general law. That he did portray our condition with nice discrimination no one can controvert. Let us see how exact a compliance the contraction policy is producing with all the conditions the conjunction of which he tells us must produce the most serious evils to society.

Let me now refer to the action of this very Congress. What have we done? How does our record stand? There were in the Treasury available resources to the amount of $18,000,000, with which it could have bought more than $15,000,000 of gold-bearing bonds, reducing the annual draught upon the industry of the country $1,000,000 in gold. The emission of these notes would have been a guarantee to our men of enterprise that the pernicious system of contraction, which was ruining them, would no longer be persisted in, but that at least a stationary amount of currency would be maintained. We struck these $18,000,000 from the current money of the realm and from the available resources of the Treasury, and by that act blasted the hopes of the industrious classes of the country, by announcing that persistent contraction was the settled policy of the republican party.

That was bad enough, but it was not all or the worst; for by thus enhancing the value of our bonds we have provided for the contraction of the national-bank circulation, and it is contracting at a fearfully rapid rate. Having thus prostrated trade and individual credit, it has come to pass that the best investment known to the brokers of England and the continent is found in American gold-bearing bonds, and the only investment regarded as entirely safe by the cautious capitalists of this country is in the same bonds. We have given such a shock to credit and business, and have imparted so high a relative value to gold in comparison with all other commodities, that the money of the country in the hands of capitalists is being loaned on call or invested in gold-bearing bonds, while mines, mills, forges, furnaces, factories, and farms, when brought to auction in default of ability to meet the interest on mortgages, are bought at nominal prices by those who control the gold and bond market and can offer bonds as collateral for loans if needed temporarily.

Am I wrong in saying that our legislation has forced the contraction of national-bank circulation? Here is a statement received from the Treasury Department this morning:

Legal-tenders deposited under act of June 20, 1874, for the retirement of circulation.

New York	$2,694,435
Connecticut	27,000
Rhode Island	153,900
Pennsylvania	35,200
South Carolina	405,000
Georgia	180,000
Tennessee	72,499
Ohio	140,850
Indiana	437,600
Illinois	1,446,710
Iowa	136,000
Michigan	316,300
Wisconsin	451,500
Minnesota	495,050
Utah	270,000
Missouri	2,516,050
Kansas	94,500
Louisiana	383,000
Nebraska	45,000
Total	10,303,594

This is an instructive statement and gentlemen from the West and South will pardon me for commending it specially to their attention. Our act which was to settle the currency question forever by authorizing free banking was approved on the 20th of June, 1874, but this statement shows that between that date and yesterday, February 11, 1875, $10,303,594 in greenbacks have been deposited for the retiring of national-bank circulation, in addition to the $18,000,000 of greenbacks which we retired and canceled by the same act. Again there were on deposit bonds to secure circulation on the 1st of July, 1874, $391,171,200. Yesterday there were on deposit $383,578,650, being a reduction of $7,592,550.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the expansion in new notes?

Mr. KELLEY. I sought most diligently to ascertain it, and the utmost figure I could get was about $600,000. But mark you, that $600,000, or whatsoever the amount may be, is covered by notes included in the statement just presented. The withdrawal is $10,303,000 in excess of any notes that may have been deposited to secure new circulation. If gentlemen will analyze this statement they will observe that the New England States and New York, which have always had bank-notes in excess of their quota, have surrendered but $2,875,335, while the Middle States, the West, and South, which have always been deficient and are in need of circulation, have surrendered $7,428,259. Our unwise legislation has forced our bonds up to such a price that the money-needing sections of the country cannot afford to deposit them in exchange for 80 per cent. of their par value and pay a tax of 1 per cent. for the privilege.

While bringing these facts to the attention of the republican side of this House I beg leave to implore them to study them in the light of the philosophy of Sir Archibald Alison. I conjure them, before they force through this bill to provide by additional taxation for the purchase and cancellation of $31,000,000 more of our bonds, to read in the parliamentary proceedings and the current history of the times the story of the sufferings inflicted upon the lower and middle classes of the English people by the act of Parliament of 1819 to compel the resumption of cash payments. That act caused the sale under legal process of some of the finest estates in England, for which more than one-half the entire price had been paid in cash, and upon which large expenditures had been made for improvements at prices so far below the purchase-money mortgages that the unhappy sufferers appealed to Parliament to relieve them from the judgments had against them for the balance.

To this condition are we forcing the enterprising and industrious classes of our country. Do not wonder, gentlemen, that you were beaten in the late elections. Do not hope to stand in manufacturing districts and carry congressional elections when the voters shall come from charitable institutions or cold firesides, leaving hungry and ill-clad wives and children behind them when they go to exercise a freeman's right to vote for a representative of their interests.

I have not time now to discuss the details of this bill and will have the opportunity to do it when we proceed to five-minute speeches; but I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are but two prosperous industries in this country and that the bill strikes at both of them, and that they are prosperous because we have an export market for their products and only for that reason. I refer to the distillation of grain into spirits and the production and manufacture of tobacco. To show how largely we export spirits would require me to enter into a number of collateral branches of the question. The direct exports are very large, and we are now rivaling France and Germany in the manufacture of perfumery, chloroform, collodion, quinine, &c. We excel every other nation in the production of quinine. To increase the tax on spirits, as is proposed by this bill, will be to prostrate every producer of perfumeries and alcoholic drugs. One chemical-works in my district pays over $50,000 spirit tax annually. To manufacture an ounce of quinine from the purest bark you can obtain requires the waste of 15 cents of the present spirit tax; from inferior bark it requires a waste of not less than 22½ cents—mark you, gentlemen, not of spirit but of the spirit tax; and I venture the prediction that, if we pass this bill and do not guard the industries referred to, either by giving them free spirit as Great Britain does to all her industries, or by protecting them by increased duties on their productions, these great alcohol-consuming industries will cease to exist, and we shall be importing Hungarian and Russian grain in the form of perfumeries, chloroform, collodion, and other similar articles. I put that to you, gentlemen of the West. If you think it better that your farmers and their wives should consume foreign grain than that which they and their neighbors raise, increase the tax on spirits and leave all these alcoholic preparations without protection, and you will accomplish your end.

I know there are those who believe that whisky and tobacco ought to be taxed because they are pernicious luxuries. Sir, I do not find any provision of the Constitution of the United States that authorizes Congress to enact sumptuary laws; and I do not recognize its right to put them in revenue bills when they would be unconstitutional if proposed in terms. I am not discussing moral propositions; I am trying to do the duty of a Congressman who should be a statesman, and to protect the general prosperity and trade of the people, leaving them to settle moral questions between themselves and their conscience.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I shall not avail myself of the ten minutes promised me by the gentleman from Illinois, but will close with the remark that on this point I will insert in my remarks in the RECORD, with the permission of the House, the letter of A. H. Jones, esq., president of the Philadelphia Drug Exchange, in which gentlemen who will take the pains to read it will see that, apart from all other questions, the imposition of this duty on spirits will add to the woes of the laboring classes by throwing many additional hundreds of them out of work, and will thus further diminish the revenues of the country, thereby perhaps endangering the continuance of the reduction of the public debt.

PHILADELPHIA, February 10, 1875.

MY DEAR SIR: The proposition to increase the rate of taxation upon distilled spirits is of special interest and importance to a large number of manufacturers who are obliged to use alcohol in their preparations. The present tax upon distilled spirits, 70 cents per gallon, is equivalent to about $1.30 on each gallon of alcohol, and on each barrel, say of forty gallons, about $52.

Selecting but one of the various branches of industrial interests wherein the cost of alcohol enters as an important crude material into consideration, namely, the manufacturing of chemicals and pharmaceutical preparations, it will be found that the consumption of this article (alcohol) is very considerable. The total amount consumed by manufacturing chemists I cannot readily ascertain, but there are known to me at least six firms that are largely engaged in making alcoholic preparations, and I presume that a single concern (probably one of the largest) uses per annum 1,000 barrels of alcohol, paying in this way into the Treasury of the United States a yearly sum of $52,000. This it will be remembered from one house only.

I would here state that there are a great many smaller establishments engaged in preparing pharmaceutical preparations, and these, in the aggregate, consume a large quantity of alcohol; how much I cannot estimate accurately, as they are scattered over the whole country; in Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Baltimore, Saint Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, and elsewhere.

In addition to the above, almost every druggist in the country, wholesale and retail, make more or less for their own sales, and hence the circle of those interested in the cost of alcohol is very much enlarged, commencing with the large chemical manufacturers and going down to the retail apothecary.

On pages 84 and 85 of the United States Dispensatory will be found a list of a number of preparations in which alcohol is largely used, and I will cite but a few.

Chloroform: Made very extensively in this country, and amount of tax paid on the alcohol I estimate as about $30,000 per annum on chloroform alone.

Ether, sulphuric, also produced largely: One gallon of alcohol equal to between 4 and 5 pounds of ether, or a tax on each pound of ether of about 26 cents.

Ether, spirits nitrous, made here (I mean the United States) in large quantities.

Tannic acid.

Collodion.

Spirits of ammonia.

Alcoholic extracts.

Tinctures, and an immense number of preparations used in medicine and the arts.

It can therefore be easily understood why manufacturers are anxious that the increase of the spirit tax should receive careful consideration.

If there are those who suppose that by taxing spirits they are only imposing a burden on an article used exclusively for drinking purposes they are in error, and I suppose that members of Congress are better advised than to entertain such an opinion.

You perceive from what I have stated that alcohol is a crude material in many of the products made in this country.

Hence it is obvious that due regard should be had to advancing the rate of duties upon alcoholic preparations should an increased tax be imposed upon alcohol, (or distilled spirits.) That is to say, should alcohol be taxed more than at present, then chloroform, ether, tannin, spirits of niter, &c., should be protected by a corresponding advance in the duties.

The course of legislation in Great Britain on the subject of alcohol is perhaps clearly explained in the extract from the address made before the Philadelphia Drug Exchange on the tariff, which I annex:

"Great Britain, on the other hand, provides free spirits for manufacturers and imposes a duty on imported chloroform."

"You will find in the United States Dispensatory, page 1643, thirteenth edition, the following reference made to the act of Parliament passed in 1855:

"In Great Britain alcohol is subjected to a heavy duty, which until lately prevented it from being used in many manufactures, because the products of its use can be more cheaply obtained from abroad. The British Parliament, wishing to encourage the use of alcohol in the arts but not as a beverage, passed an act in 1855 allowing it to be used duty free, provided it be mixed with at least one-ninth of its bulk of pyroxylic spirit, which renders it unfit for drinking, but does not spoil it for use in the arts. This mixture is called methylated spirit, and is now employed extensively in Great Britain by hatters, brass-founders, and cabinet-makers for dissolving shellac and other resinous substances, and by manufacturing chemists for making ether, chloroform, and sweet spirits of niter."

It may interest you to hear a portion of the act read, a copy of which I have here, as follows:

"CAP. XXXVIII.

"An act to allow spirit of wine to be used duty free in the arts and manufactures of the United Kingdom. [26th June, 1855.]

"Whereas it is expedient, with a view to promote the advancement of the arts and manufactures of the United Kingdom, to allow spirit of wine to be used duty free in the various processes thereof: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in this present Parliament assembled and by the authority of the same, as follows:

"1. It shall be lawful for the commissioners of inland revenue to permit and authorize any distiller or rectifier of spirits or other person specially licensed in that behalf to mix, under the conditions and regulations hereinafter mentioned, spirit of wine of not less degree of strength than 50 per cent. over proof, and in a quantity of not less than four hundred and fifty gallons at one time, with not less than one-ninth of its bulk measure of wood naphtha or methylic alcohol, or to mix spirit of wine of such other degree of strength and in such other quantity or proportion with wood naphtha or methylic alcohol, or with such other article or substance as the said commissioners shall from time to time approve, order, and direct, and as to the satisfaction of the said commissioners shall render such spirit unfit for use as a beverage and incapable of being converted to that purpose, and thereupon such mixture shall be allowed duty free for use in such branches of the arts and manufactures of the United Kingdom as the said commissioners shall sanction or approve in that behalf, or if such mixture shall be made by a rectifier with duty-paid spirit of wine, he shall be allowed a drawback of the duty on such spirit of wine at the rate chargeable on spirits of the like strength distilled in that part of the United Kingdom where such mixture shall be made."

"2. The said mixture of spirit of wine with the wood naphtha or methylic alcohol shall be denominated methylated spirit, and the mixture of spirit of wine with any other substance appointed or approved by the said commissioners for the purpose aforesaid shall be designated by such term as they shall from time to time direct; and wherever in this act the term methylated spirit is used, the same shall be deemed to include any and every such other mixture as last mentioned, and the several provisions of this act shall be deemed to apply to any and every such last-mentioned mixture as if the term by which the said commissioners shall direct the same to be designated had been substituted in this act for and in lieu of the term methylated spirit."

"The imperial tariff of Great Britain for 1872, a copy of which I have at hand, states, page 11, duty on chloroform 2s. per pound."

"The British tariff for 1862-'63 names the duty on chloroform 3s. per pound. It is true that some chloroform is made in England from unmixed, and therefore taxable, alcohol. This is quoted on the list of Hopkin & Williams, London, October, 1874, at 6s. (or $1.50 gold) per pound, against 3s. 6d. (or about 87 cents gold) for methylated chloroform."

"Chloroform in this country made from heavily taxed alcohol is quoted at $1.05 per pound currency."

The preamble to the act to allow spirit of wine (or alcohol) to be used duty free in the arts and manufactures of the United Kingdom is sufficiently explicit to show to the legislators of this country that the British government regarded the subject of alcohol as entering into many of the processes of the arts and manufactures of the United Kingdom of sufficient importance to demand special legislation so far back as 1855.

I introduce it here, not to advocate free spirits for manufacturing purposes, but to show the importance of alcohol in medicine and in the arts, and to enforce what I have urged before, namely, that if alcohol is to be still more heavily taxed, then alcoholic preparations should be protected by increased duties.

That this is eminently just I hope will be admitted by all, and it will indeed be a singular commentary upon the wisdom of our law-makers at Washington and their disposition to treat their constituents with fairness if they refuse to protect American industries in this direction, especially having before them the course adopted by two of the leading powers of the world, namely, England and France.

In England we find free methylated spirits for manufacturing purposes. In France, we turn to the tariff and observe that all chemicals not enumerated (and the enumerated list is small) are prohibited so far as this country is concerned—the United States not being a treaty power.

It can hardly be feared, therefore, that French alcoholic preparations should be encouraged while they prohibit American, nor that British chloroform, &c., made from free spirits, should be admitted into this country, unless the manufacturers of our own land are protected as they may of right demand.

I do not argue for free spirits, because the Government needs money too greatly; nor yet would I ask for a drawback for manufacturers, because, in my opinion, the revenue would be (or might be) defrauded; but the increase, if any, should be moderate, and both the crude material and the manufactured products should receive attention.

Again, an excessive rate of taxation leads to deception and corruption; lying and cheating too often result from inordinate taxes.

This I have seen illustrated in the matter of tax on alcohol in years past. When the tax on distilled spirits was two dollars per gallon alcohol could be had at a price far below the amount of the duty, and was bought in the open market at rates clearly indicating non-fulfillment with the requirements of the law.

The result was that honest manufacturers were almost ruined in some cases by reason of unfair competition, and those who stood by the Government and bought their alcohol at full prices saw their business departing and their customers "fold their tents like the Arabs and as silently steal away," to buy cheap alcoholic preparations made from alcohol costing about half what it would have done had the taxes been properly paid.

I cannot do better than to make an extract from the seventh annual report of the Philadelphia Drug Exchange regarding this subject:

It speaks well for many of the manufacturers and druggists of our city that they stood nobly by their resolution; but as I tell you it stopped the stills of the honest chemists and helped to build up the trade of those not so scrupulous:

"This association may with safety refer to their record; and to substantiate our statement we turn with pardonable pride to the seventh annual report, to the action taken with reference to the 'tax on distilled spirits,' pages 4, 5, 6, and we quote:

"At the meeting of your board held on March 18, primary action was taken upon the important subject of the 'tax on distilled spirits,' a topic destined to become of great prominence in the history of the drug exchange; and the advanced position then taken and subsequently maintained has secured for it the encomiums of the public press, and the confidence of not only our own but of other communities of the country.

"The tax, although an excessive one, would have been cheerfully submitted to, and the prices of alcohol and its products proportionably advanced; but the immense and palpable frauds in the return of the tax soon made it manifest that the manufacturer and the druggist were forced to choose one of two alternatives: either to maintain their business by buying the smuggled spirit as cheaply as possible or to sacrifice their business by adherence to the law. Under these circumstances the Philadelphia Drug Exchange has the undivided honor, in the whole country, of taking a firm stand for loyalty.

"At a large meeting held March 21, 1867, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas the amendatory tax law passed by Congress at its last session contains this clause: 'Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That whenever any distilled spirits, so found elsewhere than in a bonded warehouse, shall be sold or offered for sale at a less price than the tax imposed by law thereon, such selling or offering for sale as aforesaid shall be taken and deemed as prima facie evidence that said spirits have not been removed from a bonded warehouse according to law, and that the tax imposed upon the same has not been paid, and the same shall, without further evidence, be liable to seizure and forfeiture; and whereas we are anxious to maintain and vindicate our character as law-abiding citizens, however easy or profitable the violation of the law might be; and whereas in such adherence to the letter and spirit of the law we are liable, through dishonorable competition, to the loss of all that part of our business which depends upon the use or sale of distilled spirits: Therefore,

"Resolved, That we, members of the Philadelphia Drug Exchange, druggists, manufacturing chemists, perfumers, and brokers, will not buy, offer, or sell distilled spirits or alcohol, either directly or indirectly, at a less price than the Government tax, either by a net price or by any commission, drawback, return, or any counterbalancing advantage whereby the spirit of the law may be violated, or its intention defeated.

"Resolved, That for our own protection and for the assistance of the Government we will endeavor by every honorable means to discountenance and discourage any evasion of the law and to prevent the recurrence of any such violations which may come to our knowledge."

"It is true that these resolutions did not secure the unanimous support of the trade, but their signers included many of the most honored names of Philadelphia, and many who did not sign the resolutions have maintained an equally conscientious adherence to the law, notwithstanding constant and trying loss."

"A trial of nearly a year having shown the impotence of the Government to collect so high a tax, the exchange again met in November last, and while maintaining their unflinching adherence to the law while it remained resolved as follows:

"Whereas a meeting of the Philadelphia Drug Exchange, held on March 21 last, resolved to observe scrupulously the laws relating to distilled spirits, and to give all possible assistance to the Government in the enforcement of the same; and whereas the result of this effort, to those who have faithfully maintained it, has been a ruinous loss in their business and increased encouragement to those who defraud the revenue, while some of the most able officers of the Department acknowledge that their efforts to reach and control illicit distillation are utterly hopeless: Therefore,

"Resolved, That in order to put at end at the same time to an expensive and useless effort, and to the fearful demoralization which has taken place under the present heavy tax, Congress be petitioned to remove the tax of two dollars per gallon on distilled spirits, and to place them in the list of other manufactures, subject to a tax of 5 per cent., and that any additional tax be placed in the form of a license or special tax at the place of manufacture and also at the place of retailing.

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the chair to prepare a petition and to solicit the co-operation of other associations in this and other cities."

I remain, dear sir, with kind regards, respectfully, your friend,

ALEXANDER H. JONES.

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] how he proposes to make up the deficiency stated to exist in the Treasury.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not see any deficiency; the taxes to be imposed under this bill are to provide a fund with which to purchase $31,000,000 of bonds; and I thank my colleague for asking that question. Yesterday the honored chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means drew so fearful a picture of the crimes of those who had neglected the sinking fund that in deference to their memory I asked him whether he would have had Abraham Lincoln and Salmon P. Chase impeached and convicted, as he seemed to think they had merited. I now suggest that if his high-flown appeals in behalf of the sacredness of the sinking fund have any truth in them, Abraham Lincoln, and Andrew Johnson, and Salmon P. Chase, and William P. Fessenden, and Hugh McCulloch should all have been impeached, and afterwards convicted of felony.

Mr. DAWES, Mr. MYERS, and others rose.

Mr. KELLEY. I have not finished. There is no deficiency. The way one is made to appear is (though not so meant) kindred to the way the books of great corporations are sometimes doctored. The sinking fund was provided for by law in 1862, but it really came into existence as a separate and distinct fund in 1869. Before then we had extinguished large amounts of our debt, and have since then bought bonds and canceled them and stopped the interest on them. All the world knows that our credit is buttressed and sustained by the payment and cancellation of nearly twice the amount demanded by the sinking fund.

Mr. DAWES. Now, will the gentleman allow me to ask—

Mr. KELLEY. No, not in the midst of my reply. I wish gentlemen would sit down awhile, especially the chairman of the committee, [Mr. DAWES,] who had an hour and a half yesterday. This, I was about to remark, is the way the alleged deficit is produced: They carry back bonds from 1869 to 1862 and charge up against the canceled bonds and against the hungry working people of the country a deficit of the quotas of seven years to the sinking fund because the payments were not applied to it technically within each year. They thus mark their opprobrium of the dishonest management of Lincoln, Chase, Fessenden, Johnson, and McCulloch, by putting to their credit what would save them from impeachment or prosecution if they were all still living and their crime had not been outlawed. Thus they propose to impose the payment of the whole debt upon the people who have borne the burdens of the war, and to exact it from them in thirty years less seven; that is, by carrying back part of the payments of the twenty-three years and crediting them to the seven antecedent years, they hope to compel us to pay in twenty-three years this debt, which has already been doubled upon us by its conversion into gold-bearing bonds and the increase of the relative value of gold to other commodities, and which by that process may be quadrupled; when we will give four bushels of wheat instead of one, four barrels of flour instead of one, four pounds of cotton and tobacco and four gallons of petroleum for one. I have now got to the end of my answer, and will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAWES. I have listened with great interest to the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means. I want to know if I exactly understand him. As near as I can interpret his policy to-day—and I would like him to point out if there is any error—it is this: that we will carry on this Government from this time by abolishing all taxes, and paying current expenses by the issue of new notes. If I have misunderstood him I should like him to say where it is.

Mr. KELLEY. I can readily appreciate the fact that the gentleman in his obtuseness should have understood me to make that argument, but I venture to say there is not one person in that long gallery who so understood me.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the argument not to be addressed to the House of Representatives, but to be addressed to the gallery. I understand the difference between those who have the responsibility of carrying on the Government and who know the difference between the present mode and paying the interest on the public debt by issuing new promises to pay, as my friend suggests. I know the men sitting in these seats understand that difference. I am sorry my friend from Pennsylvania so far mistakes the general intelligence of the public as to suppose that even the galleries can see how we shall pay our demands by issuing more of them.

Mr. KELLEY. I am sorry to say that the task the gentleman has undertaken in forcing this bill through seems to have benumbed him, and I will refer him to gentlemen who sit round him, or to to-morrow's RECORD, to find out what I have been saying. I have not proposed to repeal a tax; I have not proposed to repeal a duty; all I have asked is that you shall pause in the horrid work of contraction which is dooming honest, independent, whole-hearted men and virtuous women to penury and want, and which is transferring the hoarded earnings of your men of labor and limited capital from them to those from whom in happier times may have received a loan on mortgage, or otherwise. I am only asking this Congress to have some sympathy with, and consideration for, the producing classes of this country, and not to bestow all their consideration upon the bond and bullion brokers who deal in our national credit.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir; I am entitled to the last word, and I ask if the gentleman is going further to interrogate me that he will secure from the House such an extension of my time as will permit me to reply at length. To ladies I give the last word always. I owe respect to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means; I know his adroitness, and if I want to consume the time left me I will do it by recurring to the last speech he made in which he glowingly depicted me as suggesting that every foreign bondholder would hasten to convert his gold-bonds into currency three-sixty-fives, and then asked what fool would believe it? My answer, as his motion carried us to other business, had to be made in private, and was that the fool who believed I had ever said anything of that kind never stood in his shoes nor wore his hat. I have no idea of giving my last minute now for the practice of any such shrewd parliamentary tactics as that. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

Mr. BURCHARD obtained the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and a message in writing was received from the President of the United States by Mr. BABCOCK, one of his secretaries.

A message was also received that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles, namely:

- An act (H. R. No. 366) granting a pension to Hugh Wallace;
- An act (H. R. No. 393) granting a pension to Rosanna Quinn;
- An act (H. R. No. 650) for the relief of John Brennan;
- An act (H. R. No. 1275) granting a pension to William D. Boyd, of Johnson County, Kentucky;

- An act (H. R. No. 3277) granting a pension to Robert D. Jones;
- An act (H. R. No. 3278) granting a pension to Margaret Beeler;
- An act (H. R. No. 3681) granting a pension to William M. Drake;
- An act (H. R. No. 3691) granting a pension to James Burris;
- An act (H. R. No. 3697) granting a pension to Belinda Craig;
- An act (H. R. No. 3702) granting a pension to Alice Roper;
- An act (H. R. No. 3707) granting a pension to Louisa Thomas;
- An act (H. R. No. 3722) granting a pension to John Fink;
- An act (H. R. No. 3723) granting a pension to Mary Logsdon;
- An act (H. R. No. 3723) granting a pension to Abby A. Dike;
- An act (H. R. No. 3193) repealing the act granting a pension to William H. Blair, approved July 27, 1868;
- An act (H. R. No. 3682) granting a pension to Theron W. Hanks, a private of the Third Minnesota Battery;
- An act (H. R. No. 1579) for the relief of Joseph J. Petri; and
- An act (H. R. No. 3177) for the relief of De Witt C. Chipman.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask my colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] who is entitled to the floor on the tariff bill to yield to me to move the committee rise. I desire to say that we have had no private-bill day for four weeks, and if any attention is to be given to private bills it is necessary to-day should be set apart for that purpose. I think the Committee on Ways and Means should yield the balance of this private-bill day, as they have had two hours of it already, to me to go on with private bills. I therefore move that the committee rise in order to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and take up the private business.

Mr. DAWES. I know the desire to go to the Private Calendar and also the desire to press the other business of the House. I am willing to submit to the House itself what course shall be pursued. It is the wish of the Committee on Ways and Means to go on with this bill, if the House shall agree to that course. But if the House feels that the Private Calendar or the appropriation bills are of more importance than the continuation of this discussion, we shall of course yield, for we have no disposition to press this against the majority of the House to-day; but we are anxious that the bill should be disposed of as soon as possible.

Mr. MAYNARD. What is the intention of the chairman of the committee in regard to closing general debate on this bill?

Mr. DAWES. I should have moved to close general debate on this bill were it not for one or two things. There are one or two members of the Committee on Ways and Means who desire to address the House. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] whose interests at home are materially affected by this bill, met with a serious accident last night, as is known to every one, and he desires the unanimous consent of the House that he may be permitted to have the floor on this bill for thirty minutes to-morrow. If that is agreed to, I for one am willing to close general debate upon this bill whenever the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] who has the floor gives his consent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is it the intention that only members of the Committee on Ways and Means shall have the right to speak on this bill? If they will only make the taxes apply to the gentlemen of the committee, I have no objection; but I understand that the taxes are to be borne generally.

The CHAIRMAN. The order to limit debate can only be made by the House.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations wishes twenty or thirty minutes to be given to the consideration of the Military Academy bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. And the pension bill. There are two or three small appropriation bills which we can get through readily to-day and leave a portion of time for the consideration of the business of the Private Calendar as well. I hope the House will allow us to send these bills over to the Senate to-day.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to say that I shall only ask the attention of the committee for a short time. I am indifferent whether the committee rises or whether I proceed now.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the committee rise now.

Mr. BURCHARD. My colleague, [Mr. HAWLEY,] the chairman of the Committee on Claims, yielded for a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on this bill; and therefore out of courtesy to him I yielded to him for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I had no expectation that the Committee on Ways and Means would occupy more than an hour to-day, and I yielded for that on account of the desire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] to speak to-day—sickness in his family making it necessary for him to go home. I now insist on my motion.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, being House bill No. 4680, to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PAY OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I send to the desk a bill appropriating money for the payment of certain employés of the House, on which I desire that the House shall act now. It is necessary to enable us to pay the fourteen crippled soldiers, employed by the Doorkeeper, and other employés who have had no pay since the first day of the session.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read.

Mr. THOMPSON. I must object to the present consideration of the bill, because I observe that it does not include the employés in the folding-room, who are a most meritorious class.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have proceeded on the information furnished me by the Clerk. If those employés are omitted I will withdraw the bill for the present and have the omission supplied.

The bill was accordingly withdrawn.

E. BOYD PENDLETON.

Mr. SHELDON, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Ways and Means, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3750) for the relief of E. Boyd Pendleton.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, in the settlement of the accounts of E. Boyd Pendleton, late collector of the fifth district of Virginia, to audit and allow such amounts as are shown to have been stolen or embezzled by his late deputy collector, R. W. Hobson, it first being proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that such embezzlements or larceny did not occur through any fault or negligence of said Pendleton; provided that in case any of the money so stolen or embezzled shall thereafter be recovered, the same shall inure to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHELDON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House.

The bill was read.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I object to the consideration of the bill in the House.

Mr. O'NEILL. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] will allow the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pension appropriation bill I think its consideration will not consume five minutes, and the bill may be passed very quickly.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. If it would not take more than five minutes I should not object, but discussion might arise upon it, and I therefore move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. DUNNELL in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bills upon the Private Calendar.

DUNCAN MARR.

The first bill upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2683) for the relief of Duncan Marr, a loyal citizen of Montgomery county, Tennessee.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Duncan Marr, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,024, the same to be in full satisfaction of his claim for wood and brick taken from him near Clarksville, Tennessee, the quantity having been ascertained and reported on by the Quartermaster General of the United States Army.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 640) for the relief of Duncan Marr, a loyal citizen of Montgomery County, Tennessee, submit the following report:

On the 2d day of December, 1870, the claimant, Duncan Marr, made oath to the following claim against the Government of the United States, namely:

THE UNITED STATES TO DUNCAN MARR.	Dr.
December 25, 1862, to September 30, 1863, for 6,500 cords of wood, at $2 per cord.....	$13,000
September 30, 1863, to July 1, 1865, for 8,500 cords of wood, at $2 per cord.....	17,000

Total.....30,000

Subsequently, and on the 31st day of July, 1871, the claimant made oath to the following additional claim, to wit:

That on and about the years 1864, 1865, and 1866, at or near Clarksville, Tennessee, Captain William Brunt, Sixteenth United States Colored Infantry, superintendent freedmen and acting assistant quartermaster, took from claimant—
Seven thousand five hundred cords of good wood, lying near the Cumberland and Red Rivers, valued at $2 per cord.....	$15,000
Seventy-eight thousand brick, at $9 per thousand.....	702
One hundred and twelve thousand brick, at $9 per thousand.....	1,008
The use and occupation of one hundred and eighty acres of land from January, 1864, to January 1, 1866, at $540 per year.....	1,080

Total amount of second claim.....17,790

Making the entire demand of the claimant against the Government the sum of.....$47,790

Subsequently the claimant withdrew so much of his second claim as had reference to wood, reducing the demand the sum of.....15,702

Leaving a balance claimed to be due of.....32,088 for wood, brick, and use of premises.

These claims have been presented to the proper Department of the Government for examination and settlement.

These claims arose from the use by the Federal troops and freedmen of the premises of the claimant and the wood growing thereon, during and since the rebellion of 1861.

The first of these claims, for $30,000, was filed December 2, 1870, and the second claim was filed with the Department July 31, 1871.

Upon the presentation of the first claim, and in July, 1871, the chief quartermaster of the Department of the South, Major A. R. Eddy, under the direction of the Quartermaster-General, investigated this claim, and August 7, 1871, made the following report:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH, CHIEF QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE, Louisville, Kentucky, August 7, 1871.

GENERAL: I have the honor to return herewith the claim of Duncan Marr, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, amounting to $30,000, for quartermaster stores taken from him during the war by the Federal Army, with the information that upon an investigation made by James C. Wheeler, quartermaster agent, it is found that the wood for which claim is made was used by the troops stationed at Clarksville, Tennessee, from 1862 up to and for some time after the close of the war. It consisted of standing timber cut and hauled by the troops.

The land from which this timber was removed is situated within three-fourths of a mile of the city of Clarksville, and consisted of three different tracts, which were surveyed under the direction of the agent making the investigation, by which it is shown that one tract, lying on the north side of Red River, opposite Clarksville, contained 161½ acres, which averaged 50 cords per acre, 8,087½ cords. One 25-acre tract adjoining the corporation line averaged 30 cords per acre, 750 cords. The wood from the above-mentioned tracts was all removed. One other tract, containing 100 acres, one-fifth of which belonged to claimant, was also cleared by the troops; this averaged 50 cords per acre, and claimant's share was 1,000 cords, making a total of 9,837½ cords of wood taken from this claimant and used by the Army mostly for fuel and lumber, a portion being used in constructing and repairing the bridges and trestles on the Louisville, Clarksville and Memphis Railroad. A camp of freedmen was established on claimant's land, under the direction of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands. This camp remained upon claimant's land for some time after the close of the war, and all the fuel used at the camp was obtained from this land. From the situation of the timber, its nearness to the camps of the troops, and the general information obtained from the citizens of Clarksville and vicinity, it is evident the amount of wood stated above as taken from this claimant is not too large. Wood standing in the tree in that locality was worth $1 per cord, which would be a just price to be allowed for this, making a reduction in the claim to $9,837.50, which would be ample payment for the wood taken.

Mr. Marr remained at Clarksville during the war, availed himself of the first opportunity that offered to take the oath of allegiance, amnesty, &c., and faithfully observed them. He was a law-abiding citizen, and was never known to express other than loyal sentiments. Federal officers who knew him intimately from the first occupation of Clarksville until the close of the war do not hesitate to pronounce him as a loyal citizen. He took no part against the Government, but exerted his influence on the part of law and order at all times.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. R. EDDY,
Chief Quartermaster.

Brigadier-General M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General United States Army,
Washington, D. C.

Upon presentation of the second claim, a second investigation was ordered, as appears by the following letter of the Quartermaster-General, indorsed on the foregoing report:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
December 19, 1871.

Respectfully returned to Major A. R. Eddy, chief quartermaster Department of the South, Louisville, Kentucky, for reinvestigation and report in connection with another claim in favor of the same person, recently filed in this office.

By order Quartermaster-General:

M. I. LUDINGTON,
Quartermaster, United States Army.

Upon such second investigation the following report was made:

NASHVILLE, June 6, 1872.

COLONEL: The two claims in favor of Duncan Marr, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, and all papers pertaining thereto are herewith returned, and the following report respectfully submitted:

Claim No. 1, for $30,000, was filed December 2, 1870, to recover pay for 15,000 cords of wood, at $2 per cord. In July, 1871, this claim was investigated by James C. Wheeler, quartermaster agent, for Major A. R. Eddy, who had a survey made of all the land from which wood or timber was cut by the Federal authorities, and on August 7, 1871, Major Eddy filed a report, herewith inclosed, marked A, (before quoted,) which I respectfully ask to be made a part of this report. I went upon the land from which the wood and timber was taken, and am satisfied that the allowance made by Agent Wheeler of 50 cords per acre on 18½ acres, and of 25 cords per acre on 20 acres, is a liberal allowance; and that the price awarded ($1 per cord for standing wood) is also a liberal price for wood in that locality at that time.

Claim No. 2, for $17,790, was filed July 31, 1871, as claimant says, against his judgment, so far as relates to wood and timber. Attention is invited to the affidavit of claimant, herewith inclosed, marked B, in which he expresses a wish to withdraw the second claim so far as relates to wood and timber, but that the papers be retained to corroborate claim No. 1, which was investigated by Captain Wheeler.

The items for brick and rent of land mentioned in the second claim the claimant desires should be considered in connection with claim No. 1, before mentioned.

[Here follows a report as to the bricks, which will be considered in briefing claim No. 2.]

By reference to the first statement of Captain William Brunt, of the Sixteenth United States Colored Infantry, and acting assistant quartermaster, herewith inclosed, and attached to the second claim, marked D, it will be seen that he estimates the quantity of wood and timber used by him for the benefit of freedmen, for fuel and building purposes, from May 28, 1864, to about January 1, 1866, at 7,500 cords, the number of freedmen being 6,000 or more.

The last statement in reference to wood is given as answering the inquiry of the Quartermaster-General of December 19, 1871 indorsed on the back of claim No. 2, in pencil.

Also claimant and witnesses estimate that 300 cords of wood taken from claimant's land (if put into cord-wood) was used in the construction of fortifications, block-houses, and defenses.

The merits of the two claims collectively then stand as follows: 9,837½ cords of standing wood and timber, as awarded by James C. Wheeler and approved by Major A. R. Eddy, August 7, 1871, as covering all wood and timber taken by the Federal authorities from the commencement to the close of the war, and until the winding up of military operations at Montgomery County, Tennessee, in 1866, at $1 per cord for standing wood, $9,837.50.

If the Quartermaster-General United States Army cannot pay for the stores taken and used for freedmen and refugees, nor for timber used in the construction of fortifications, block-houses, &c., then deduct the following from the above amount:

7,500 cords of wood taken by Captain William Brunt, and used for the benefit of freedmen and refugees.....	$7,500 00
300 cords of timber put in fortifications, at $1.....	300 00

Total.....7,800 00

Very respectfully,

J. E. STEVENS,
Quartermaster Agent.

[In duplicate.]

Lieutenant-Colonel JAMES A. EKIN,
Dep. Q. M. Gen., U. S. A., and Chief Q. M. Dep. South, Louisville, Ky.

Upon these reports being made to the Quartermaster-General of the United States he referred the same to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with the following recommendation:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1873.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith two claims of Duncan Marr, a citizen of Montgomery County, Tennessee, presented to this office under the act of July 4, 1864, and stated as follows:

Claim No. 1.

For 6,500 cords of wood, at $2 per cord.....	$13,000 00
For 8,500 cords of wood, at $2 per cord.....	17,000 00

Total.....30,000 00

Claim No. 2.

For 7,500 cords of wood, at $2 per cord.....	$15,000 00
For 78,000 brick, at $9 per thousand.....	702 00
For 112,000 brick, at $9 per thousand.....	1,008 00
For rent of 180 acres of land, from January 1, 1864, to January 1, 1866.....	1,080 00

Total.....17,790 00

So much of claim No. 2 as is for timber has been withdrawn by the claimant, it being a duplicate of claim No. 1.

The charge for rent in claim No. 2 has not been considered, this office having no jurisdiction, under the law of 1864, in cases of rent arising in the State of Tennessee during the rebellion.

An examination of the claims has shown that the larger portion of the timber proved as taken was used for the comfort of freedmen, and that some of the brick charged for were put to a like use. A statement showing the quantity of timber and brick proved as taken, embracing both claims, and distinguishing that chargeable to freedmen from that chargeable to the Army, has been prepared, and is inclosed, marked X.

This office has no power to settle claims for wood and brick used by the Freedmen's Bureau.

The evidence establishes the loyalty of the claimant, and I respectfully recommend for settlement under the act of July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores," &c., the following described property taken for the use of, and used by, the United States Army:

On claim No. 1.
For 2,037½ cords of wood, at $1 per cord..... $2,037 50

On claim No. 2.
For 112,000 brick, at $8 per thousand..... 896 00

Making a total of..... 2,933 50

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General.

The THIRD AUDITOR,
United States Treasury, Washington, D. C.

X.

THE UNITED STATES IN ACCOUNT WITH DUNCAN MARR.

(1.)

The Quartermaster's Department.

Claim No. 1.

2,037½ cords of wood, at $1 per cord..... $2,037 50

Claim No. 2.

112,000 brick, at $8 per thousand..... 896 00

The Freedmen's Bureau.

Claim No. 1.

7,500 cords of wood, at $1 per cord..... $7,500 00

Claim No. 2.

28,000 brick, at $8 per thousand..... 224 00

7,724 00

To accompany letter of Quartermaster-General of March 10, 1873, to the Third Auditor.

By the following letter from the Third Auditor's Office, it will appear that so much of this claimant's demand as relates to quartermaster stores has been paid in full:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1874.

SIR: In pursuance of request by your committee, per George C. Smith, clerk, I herewith transmit the papers pertaining to the claim of Duncan Marr.

By Treasury settlement No. 2494, of March, 1873, there was allowed and paid upon this claim as follows:

For 2,037½ cords wood, at $1 per cord..... $2,037 50

For 112,000 brick, at $8 per thousand, (used by Quartermaster's Department)..... 896 00

2,933 50

Very respectfully,

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

HOB. JOHN B. HAWLEY,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

From the report of the Quartermaster's Department it appears there is justly due the claimant the sum of $8,024, as follows:

On claim No. 1.

For 7,500 cords of wood, at $1 per cord..... $7,500

For 300 cords of timber for fortifications, &c..... 300

On claim No. 2.

28,000 brick, at $8 per thousand..... 224

Total..... 8,024

On the 2d of April, 1873, this claim was referred to the Adjutant-General United States Army, and by him referred to the Third Auditor of Treasury and by the Third Auditor to the Second Comptroller, as will appear by the following letters:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1873.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit the papers in the claim of Duncan Marr, for action upon so much thereof as pertains to the Freedmen's Bureau. By settlement No. 2494, (March, 1873,) the sum of $2,933.50 has been paid to the claimant.

Please return the papers.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

Brigadier-General E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General, United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Adjutant-General's Office, May 2, 1873.

Respectfully returned to the Third Auditor, United States Treasury, with the information that this office has no jurisdiction over claims of this character, and no funds from which payment can be made.

It is therefore unnecessary at this time to consider the justice of the claim or to consult the records of the late Freedmen's Bureau for verification thereof.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Third Auditor's Office, November 20, 1873.

Respectfully referred to the Second Comptroller for his decision on so much of the within claim as refers to the 7,500 cords of wood at $1 per cord, $7,500; and 28,000 bricks at $8 per thousand, $224; making the aggregate sum of $7,724.

These items were not considered by the Quartermaster-General in his recommendation for the settlement of the quartermaster's stores, included in the claim, for the reason that the wood and bricks above mentioned were appropriated to the use of the Freedmen's Bureau.

There is a small balance, about $300, standing on the books of this office to the credit of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, prior to the 1st of July, 1870.

A. M. GANGEWER,
Acting Auditor.

Respectfully returned to the Third Auditor. There appears to be no provision of law for the payment of claims of this character. The act of July 4, 1864, authorizes payment only for such quartermaster's stores as were "actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army."

As the stores for which pay is claimed were not taken for or used by the Army, this law does apply.

Even if there were no legal objections, there is no appropriation available out of which payment can be made.

I therefore see no other remedy for claimant than an application to Congress for relief.

J. M. BRODHEAD,
Comptroller.

SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, November 22, 1873.

The evidence in the case fully establishes the loyalty of the claimant, and the report of the Quartermaster-General is fully sustained by abundant proofs, and your committee are clearly of opinion that there is justly due the claimant the sum of $8,024, and therefore report the bill for his relief back to the House, with recommendation that the accompanying substitute be passed.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, said: I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the reading of this whole report.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I insist upon its reading. It is a case which I respectfully submit to the chairman of the Committee on Claims ought not to have gone to his committee. It is clearly a matter that belongs to the Committee on War Claims. The Committee on War Claims are not anxious to take jurisdiction of it, for they have an abundance of business already; but the committee have been and ought to be scrupulously careful not to take or to act upon any claim properly within the jurisdiction of another committee. Whenever a claim goes to a committee to which it ought not properly to go, it ought to be reported back to the House and referred to some other committee. I am sure that the Committee on Claims would not take jurisdiction of any claim that does not properly belong to that committee, and I think the chairman of that committee will see on reflection that this is a case over which his committee has no possible jurisdiction, and it is disrespectful to the Committee on War Claims that any other committee should assume jurisdiction of business properly belonging to it.

Mr. MAYNARD. Was not this bill sent by order of the House to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not know.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand it was, and I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not stand here and quarrel upon a point of etiquette.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I shall insist that this bill belongs to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman will let an honest claim be lost because it was not referred to the proper committee, I will make all sorts of apologies to him.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio is not treating the Committee on Claims with the highest courtesy. I understand that the whole of this claim arose after the war.

Mr. BURROWS. Every dollar of it.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The Committee on Claims has probably a thousand claims before it which it cannot possibly examine, and I presume that the Committee on War Claims are in the same condition, and our committee will be able to give consideration to but a small portion of the claims before them. I presume the same is the case with the Committee on War Claims. The Committee on Claims has so much business before it that it certainly will not claim the right to consider any claim that does not properly belong to it, or arrogate to itself the right to act on claims which do not properly belong to it. I am surprised that the chairman of the Committee on War Claims [Mr. LAWRENCE] should now insist that this claim should have gone to his committee. It was referred to the Committee on Claims by order of the House; and if I had supposed it ought to have gone to his committee, I should have promptly reported it back and asked to have it sent there, as I have done in the case of many other claims. The Committee on Claims have considered this case, and have unanimously reported this bill to the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is said that the most of this case arose after the war. When did the war close?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. On June 20, 1865.

Mr. LAWRENCE. On the 20th of August, 1866.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I think not.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The Supreme Court has so decided. And all claims growing out of military operations up to the 20th of August, 1866, fall within the jurisdiction of the Committee on War Claims. Now, in regard to this claim, the report of the committee gives the following bill of particulars:

On the 2d day of December, 1870, the claimant, Duncan Marr, made oath to the following claim against the Government of the United States, namely:

THE UNITED STATES TO DUNCAN MARR, DR.
December 25, 1862, to September 20, 1863, for 6,500 cords of wood, at $2 per cord..... $13,000
September 20, 1863, to July 1, 1865, for 8,500 cords of wood, at $2 per cord.. 17,000

Total..... 30,000

Subsequently, and on the 31st day of July, 1871, the claimant made oath to the following additional claim, to-wit:

That on or about the years 1864, 1865, and 1866, at or near Clarksville, Tennessee, Captain William Brunt, Sixteenth United States Colored Infantry, superintendent freedmen and acting assistant quartermaster, took from affiant—
 Seven thousand five hundred cords of good wood, lying near the Cumberland and Red Rivers, valued at $2 per cord..... $15,000
 Seventy-eight thousand brick, at $9 per thousand..... 702
 One hundred and twelve thousand brick, at $9 per thousand..... 1,008
 The use and occupation of one hundred and eighty acres of land from January, 1864, to January, 1, 1866, at $540 per year..... 1,080

Total amount of second claim..... 17,790

Making the entire demand of the claimant against the Government the sum of..... 47,790
 Subsequently the claimant withdrew so much of his second claim as had reference to wood, reducing the demand the sum of..... 15,702

Leaving a balance claimed to be due of..... 32,088
 For wood, brick, and use of premises.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The trouble with the gentleman is that the claim he refers to now has already been paid.

Mr. LAWRENCE. What is it in the report for? I read from the report.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The report shows.

Mr. LAWRENCE. When did the claim accrue for which this bill is reported? I call for the reading of the rest of the report.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is given above.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN ALDREDGE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the relief of John Aldredge, reported from the Committee on War Claims.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Aldredge, of McNairy County, Tennessee, such sum, not exceeding $9,606, as the Secretary may deem reasonable, for money paid into the Treasury of the United States by virtue of an assessment made upon the disloyal citizens of and around Henderson Station, Tennessee, to make repayment for the destruction of cotton, the property of said Aldredge; the sum so to be paid to be charged to the account of captured and abandoned property.

Mr. SPEER. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1104) for the relief of John Aldredge, having had the same under consideration, ask leave to report:

That they find, from the evidence submitted with the bill, that there was an irregular force of rebel troops made a raid upon Henderson Station, Tennessee, on or about the 24th of November, 1862, and captured the post, with the garrison, and destroyed a large amount of public and private property, and that there was an assessment made by proper military authority of the United States upon certain citizens living in the vicinity of said military post to reimburse the Government and loyal citizens that had suffered by said rebel raid; and that upon proper investigation John Aldredge's loss was alleged to be $9,606.36, and that the money was collected; and that part intended to reimburse the Government went into and was used in the military railroad department, and the remainder, or that part intended to indemnify the loyal citizens who had suffered loss by said rebel raid, went into the Quartermaster's Department, as shown by evidence obtained from the Third Auditor's and Quartermaster-General's offices, and was accounted for and turned over to the Treasury of the United States. The evidence shows Mr. Aldredge, the claimant, to have been a loyal citizen of the United States during the late rebellion, and your committee are therefore of the opinion that he is entitled to the amount so collected for him and covered into the United States Treasury, and accordingly report back the said bill (H. R. No. 1104) with a substitute, and recommend the adoption of the said substitute.

Mr. SPEER. From information which I have I am of the opinion that this bill ought not to pass, and I will state briefly the reasons. I am informed that Mr. Aldredge was not the owner of the cotton which was destroyed. He had bought it, but had not paid for it. It was destroyed, and an assessment was levied upon the citizens of the town for the value of the property destroyed, and the money was paid into the Treasury. After that was done this man Aldredge took the benefit of the bankrupt law, and has been discharged. His creditors, therefore, will be unable to collect a dollar of what he owed them. He did not present this claim against the Government in his schedule of assets to the court of bankruptcy. He now, after being discharged, makes claim against the Government for over $9,000. This bill proposes to take that amount out of the Treasury of the United States and to pay it over to him, while in fact, as I am informed, the cotton for which the amount is to be given was not paid for by him. He made no claim against the Government when he applied for his discharge in bankruptcy; and if he now gets the money those he owes will not get a cent of it.

Mr. POTTER. Did he make no reference to it in his statement?

Mr. SPEER. I was so informed. I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I am informed is from a responsible citizen of Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

HENDERSON, TENNESSEE, January 15, 1875.

DEAR SIR: This is to certify that John Aldredge bought of me $1,950 worth of cotton that was burned in the Henderson Station, burning in the year of 1862, and has never paid me a cent for same; and I understand he is trying to get pay out of Congress. He has taken the benefit of the bankrupt law since he purchased the cotton from me. I would respectfully ask if there should be any appropriation made for his claim the above amount be held for my benefit.

Respectfully, yours,

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS.

WILLIAM CASSON.

Mr. SPEER. If this bill is to be passed, I think it should be with this amendment:

Provided, That the same be paid over to his assignee in bankruptcy.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not care what becomes of this money nor of this bill. I do not propose to appear as the advocate of any bill that makes an appropriation of money. But I do propose to do what I believe to be just, and I think it but just that this bill should receive a fair consideration. John Aldredge was a citizen of Tennessee. During the war there was a rebel raid made upon the country round about Henderson Station, and a large amount of private property was taken by the rebels. Aldredge was a loyal citizen. The Union military authorities levied an assessment upon the rebel citizens of that vicinity to pay the losses which the Union citizens had sustained by reason of the rebel raid.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. How does the gentleman know that these persons assessed were rebel citizens? I am informed that those persons had taken the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will state how I know it.

Mr. HURLBUT. I was there, and I know it.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] state that these were rebel citizens?

Mr. HURLBUT. I state that the men upon whom this assessment was levied were disloyal men.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is a question upon which the military authorities who made the assessment may be presumed to have had the best information. I think it eminently just that after the military authorities of the United States have made an assessment upon the rebel citizens to reimburse loyal citizens who suffered by a rebel raid, and after the money has gone into the Treasury of the United States, those loyal citizens who suffered should be paid the losses they sustained.

It is said, however, that Aldredge has taken the benefit of the bankrupt law. I do not know how the fact may be; I have seen no evidence of that; but if gentlemen here affirm that they know such to be the fact, I have no doubt it is true.

Mr. ATKINS. I state that Aldredge has taken advantage of the bankrupt law.

Mr. LAWRENCE. But suppose that to be so; is this a claim which by law would pass to his assignee? He has no claim to-day that could pass to an assignee in bankruptcy. A man who erects a building for the Government under a contract has due to him a liquidated demand that will pass to his assignee in bankruptcy; but a claim like this, which is an unliquidated demand, which rests upon an appropriation to be made by Congress, which cannot be enforced upon any ground of contract, for which the party cannot sue in the Court of Claims, for which he has no remedy but that which rests in the judgment and discretion of Congress, will not in my judgment pass to an assignee in bankruptcy. But if this is a claim that would legally pass in that way, let the assignee in bankruptcy assert his claim upon the fund when Congress provides for its payment.

It is said (and a letter is presented here affirming the fact) that a portion of the property destroyed by the rebel forces was property which John Aldredge had bought from some citizen of Tennessee; and this citizen asks that the money shall be paid to him. We are asked to make provision for such payment upon a simple letter alleging that he sold this property and has not been paid for it. I suppose, sir, that Congress cannot undertake to settle the debts of anybody. The man who sends this letter here concedes that he sold the property to John Aldredge. If he did, let him pursue his remedy against Aldredge. But Congress has never yet undertaken, when appropriating money that may rightfully go to any citizen, to ascertain who his creditors are and appropriate the money for their benefit. Was such a thing ever heard of before? It is a method of proceeding utterly impracticable.

Mr. STORM. We did it in the last Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE. For whom?

Mr. STORM. In the case of a certain claim, the allegation was that the property claimed to have been taken had not been paid for, and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania had an amendment put on the bill directing that the proceeds should go to the benefit of the creditor.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not know of any such case.

Mr. SPEER. We ought to make a provision of that kind in all such cases.

Mr. LAWRENCE. We cannot undertake to settle disputed questions between creditor and debtor. Will you in this case undertake to pay over this money to a man who simply alleges in a letter that he is the creditor of John Aldredge, without presenting any evidence?

Before taking my seat, I wish to state that the persons upon whom the assessment was made in this case by the military authorities have presented a claim for reimbursement, upon which claim the Committee on War Claims have presented the following adverse report:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3044) for the relief of H. Johnson and others, citizens of Tennessee, having had the same under consideration, report:

That in December, 1863, assessments were levied in Henderson County, Tennessee, on certain specified persons by the order of Brigadier-General Jeremiah C. Sullivan, of amounts fixed in money, to reimburse the losses sustained by loyal people, by reason of a rebel raid on Henderson Station.

The order under which these assessments were made does not appear among the papers, but its character can be fully ascertained from the notices which were served on the parties assessed, of which the following is a copy:

"SIR: You are hereby notified that pursuant to Special Order No. 15, from district headquarters, Brigadier-General Jeremiah C. Sullivan commanding, you have been assessed to pay the sum of — dollars, the same being your proportion of the damages resulting to the Government of the United States and to the property of loyal citizens by the late rebel raid on Henderson Station; you will pay the amount to Captain William J. Stephenson, commanding at Henderson within ten days from this date, and take duplicate receipts for said money. One you will forward to headquarters, post of Bethel, Tennessee; the other you will keep.

"By order of—

"WILLIAM J. STEPHENSON,
"Captain, Commanding Post."

The whole question involved is this: A military officer, with a view to pay to the Government of the United States and loyal citizens for losses sustained by a rebel raid on Henderson Station, made an assessment on certain named parties of the State of Tennessee, of specific sums of money, which assessments were paid by many of the parties on whom the same was imposed.

If this assessment was justified from any cause existing in a period of war, then the money raised by that means should not in justice be repaid.

If this assessment was not justifiable, then it was one of the incidents of war, a wrong done in the heat of a civil controversy, for which, on principles well recognized, the Government should not be made responsible. The Government is not responsible in pecuniary damages for the tortious acts of its officers, and nothing is disclosed in the papers presented which should make this an exceptional case.

The committee therefore report adversely on the bill, and recommend that it lie on the table.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I have known Colonel Aldredge for some fifteen or twenty years. He is one of the leading Union citizens of West Tennessee. He sustained these losses because of his devotion to the Union cause. After the war he was for some years a senator in the Legislature of our State. He is one of the best men in the State; and having resided there for thirty years he is known as such to all the community. I have never heard any opposition made to him or to his claim except such as has grown out of hatred against him because he was a Union man during the war and did his duty.

Gentlemen have stated that they are "informed" of certain things in regard to Judge Aldredge. Now, if there is any charge against him, proof should have been produced here in the proper way. Why, sir, any man in this House can be "informed" at any time that there is something against any man who has an honest claim and who is a Union man—a loyal citizen of the Government. I do not think that any importance is to be attached to the statements that are made here upon this point. If gentlemen desired to show that this claim was not fair or just, they should have produced the proper proof. Evidence is what is wanted. It would have been easy, if the facts stated existed, to produce the evidence of witnesses showing those facts. Evidence in support of the claim has been presented in proper form before the Committee on War Claims; the whole case has been proved thoroughly. This is one of the best known and most striking cases in West Tennessee. I hope that the bill will be passed, and that this man will receive what is justly due to him. I trust that the House will hear from my friend from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] who was the major-general commanding that region at the time of the occurrence and who knows the facts.

Mr. HURLBUT. Mr. Chairman, it is right, I think, that the House should understand precisely the facts of this case before determining the question. The facts are simply these: This man John Aldredge was one, not of the few but of the many loyal citizens in the immediate neighborhood where he lives. It so happened that while that region of country was under my military command a band of troops, sometimes recognized by the confederate authorities and sometimes not so recognized, broke into Henderson Station, overpowered the guards, and destroyed public and private property. General Grant, then commanding all that region, issued orders through me which were properly extended to subordinate officers in charge of that district to examine into the facts. A military commission was appointed, which did examine and did pass upon the ownership of the property destroyed. The same military authority ordered a levy to be made upon certain citizens, not by any means in sympathy with the United States, in that neighborhood, denominated here disloyal citizens, and that money was collected. So much as belonged to the United States, to compensate them for their loss, was paid over and used, and so much as belonged to this man John Aldredge, by some slip on the part of the provost marshal general then in charge of that district, was not paid directly to him but was paid into the Treasury of the United States, and is there now. He asks that money so collected under this military order for his benefit and now in the Treasury of the United States shall be paid to him.

Objection, as I understand it, comes from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] that he has since been in bankruptcy, and the money, if paid at all, should be paid by act of Congress to his assignees. I never heard of such a proposition in any bill that ever passed Congress. We deal with the man who had the right to the money, and leave the creditors, assignees, legal representatives, or legal claimants to settle in the courts of law. If it be true—I do not know anything about it but accept the statement of the gentleman that he has been in bankruptcy—this claim never appeared there and never could appear there. I never heard that in any case of bankruptcy the bankrupt was required to schedule a claim against the United States which was not a matter of strict right but a matter of grace. If, however, bankruptcy does have the effect to transfer his right to the assignee, the assignee holds the power to enforce that right when the money is paid to Aldredge.

Now, sir, there is no doubt whatever, from the statement and evidence before that committee and from the facts stated as within my personal recollection—there is no doubt, I say, of the fact of the absolute loyalty and high character of this man during the unfortunate time of the late rebellion. There is equally no doubt that competent military authority ordered the assessment of these men, and the amount was collected and is now in the Treasury of the United States. The only question, it seems to me, is to whom it ought to be paid. My clear idea of the law is that the claim is the personal right of this man, John Aldredge, not transferable to the assignee under the terms of the bankrupt law but remains for his benefit, and if he has any creditors they may prosecute him if they like.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] who reports this bill as chairman of the Committee on War Claims, has the character in this House of being a prudent and careful man in making committee reports. But there is a grave allegation here, to ascertain the truth of which should secure the recommitment of this bill. I promise the gentleman from Ohio, if the allegation made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] and my colleague from Pennsylvania should prove not to be correct, I will aid him in passing this bill. If the allegation be true, I think we should know it. The bill will not be injured by being recommitment.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. You might as well kill the bill as recommit it.

Mr. STORM. The allegation is that while in bankruptcy this claimant made no schedule of this property, which, notwithstanding what the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Illinois have said, he was bound, under the forms the Supreme Court promulgated, to return. He was bound to make return of all property, whether in possession, remainder, or expectancy, choses in action—all property of whatever kind or wherever situated. Therefore, under the forms required by the Supreme Court, this should have been returned and have gone among the assets of the bankrupt. If the allegation be true, it is of such a character as to warrant the recommitment of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reply. It has been asserted upon the floor by my colleague from the Memphis district that the principal objection to this bill is the loyalty of the claimant. So far as I am concerned I desire to distinctly avow here that I have no opposition to this gentleman on that ground or to any other claimant before Congress. I have uniformly voted to pension soldiers. I have introduced bills here to pension widows of Union soldiers. I have introduced bills to pension the children of Union soldiers. I know no such sentiment as that attributed to me; none whatever. I am incapable of occupying a seat upon this floor and entertaining resentment or unkindness toward any man who wore the blue. But enough of that.

Now, in regard to the remark made by the gentleman from Illinois, that this amount was levied upon disloyal citizens, I have only to say that I have information that all or nearly all of those men there, and there were forty-eight in number, have taken the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

But I want to say another thing. When this raid was made upon this station, Henderson Station, by this confederate band, these men who were assessed were in their beds. This party of soldiers crossed the Tennessee River at sundown. Henderson Station is forty miles from the Tennessee River. They traveled there and did this mischief before daylight, and these men who were assessed were in their beds and did not know such a troop was west of the Tennessee River when the act was done.

Well, sir, I have no disposition whatever to make any war upon this claim, except that here is an old man verging upon three-score and ten who writes me a letter that this man Aldredge owes him nearly $2,000 for that cotton; and that he (Aldredge) had taken the benefit of the bankrupt act, and had not paid him a single cent. Sir, with this state of facts, discarding all questions of loyalty, discarding all idea that a man should be paid simply because he was loyal, whether he has a just claim or not, discarding such an idea as that, I appeal to the sense of justice of this House whether these assignees should not have the benefit of this money, if it is to be paid at all. Therefore I move to recommit the bill.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] attracted my attention quite impressively. I agree with him in his view of the law in one particular; in another I should not.

If this be a debt due by the United States to this claimant I have no doubt that as a matter of law, although there might be no means of collecting it by compulsory process against the United States, it would pass to his assignees in bankruptcy; and if a bill should be introduced to pay it to the assignee as the legal owner of the right of property, that would be done with as much reason as, in case the man were dead, it would be paid to his administrator or executor. For the purpose of settling his estate the assignee in bankruptcy is the owner of the bankrupt's rights of property.

But I agree with the gentleman that that is not the nature of the case; that this is a matter of grace and favor, in which the United States is endeavoring to make up to a loyal citizen his losses by raiders or robbers or confederates, or whatever may be the smoother phrase for them; the fund, whether it was rightfully or wrongfully collected you can hardly now ascertain, being in the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of indemnity.

That being so, when we are bestowing our grace and favor to make good the loss, it certainly seems to me we should make good the loss to the loser. And, if we find that a man who had just sold this property, had not got a dollar of pay for it, the purchaser having gone into bankruptcy afterward, so that no claim could be enforced, if he now gets this money, we shall be making a donation to the man who has actually lost nothing, while the man who has lost the $2,000 or $1,900 comes here and petitions us that he may be considered in the apportionment of our grace and favor. It would seem to me that if he has made seasonable application, of which I know nothing; if his credit is vouched for as showing that he is an honest claimant, and this claim is not merely put in here as an obstruction; if there is reason to believe that his letter is true, it would seem to me a reason why this should be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims, with instructions to inform that party that he will be heard.

Mr. ATKINS. I vouch myself personally for the reputation and honor of the gentleman whose letter has been read.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The gentleman from Tennessee can make the motion to recommit, or I will make it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to say only one word upon this bill. I do not think that it should be recommitted. I understand fault is found because Mr. John Aldredge did not include this in his assets in the proceedings in bankruptcy. Now, if a man has got an honest claim before this Congress, and has ever had any experience here, I do not think those of us who understand our proceedings would ever find any fault with him because he did not include that claim in his assets in proceedings in bankruptcy. If he has got an honest claim here it is the last place where he would expect to get it settled during his life-time.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] has shown distinctly that a legal claim can be reached by the assignees in bankruptcy. It is a perfectly just claim, as the Committee on War Claims unanimously reported. If any claim can get through that committee with its unanimous approval, I think it ought to be passed. Let us now have a vote.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to say just a word.

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. MORRISON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It seems to me that the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] is utterly impracticable. Now, suppose Mr. Casson owes somebody else, can we go back and inquire whether he owes anything for the cotton he bought? The idea that we in paying to any citizen of the United States money that he is entitled to can go back and inquire who his creditors are and how the fund ought to be distributed by him it seems to me is utterly impracticable. It is a proposition that the Government of the United States shall assume the guardianship of this man, and it seems to me that that is utterly impracticable.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims and of the House, and also the attention of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG,] who has spoken of the unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims, to the fact that new facts are now before the House which were not before the committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know whether they make any difference in the result.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not know whether they make any difference, but these facts were not before the committee.

Mr. SPEER. In view of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] I will withdraw my motion until that is acted upon.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let it be understood that a recommitment of this bill would be to kill it.

The question was on the motion of Mr. E. R. HOAR that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims; and being taken, there were—ayes 51, noes 64; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATKINS and Mr. KELLOGG were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 89. So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to move the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER,] to add to the bill these words:

Provided, That the sum be paid over to his assignees in bankruptcy.

The question was put on agreeing to the amendment; and there were ayes 34, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. LAWRENCE; and it was agreed to.

So the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

RELIEF OF LOYAL CREDITORS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2686) to provide for the relief of certain loyal creditors whose moneys were confiscated by the confederate congress.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to divide among the loyal northern creditors whose debts were confiscated by the acts of the confederate government the sum of $203,334.89, being the amount captured from confederate receivers as proceeds of debts due northern loyal creditors, paid to such receivers by confederate debtors at New Orleans, pro rata, according to the amount of such confiscated debts; and for that purpose said court is authorized to cause thirty days' public notice to be given of the time and place of hearing in a newspaper published in the cities of Washington, New Orleans, New York, and Philadelphia; and said court shall thereafter hear and determine the claims of all persons to the said fund, and ascertain by testimony taken under oath who is justly entitled to any part thereof caused by confiscation of his debts; whether or not such creditor has received in any other way or from any other source any portion or the whole of said claim; and, after determining the amount, to distribute or allow for all such claims presented to him, and order a division of said sum between said claimants pro rata, after deducting the expenses of such division; and upon the approval of such division by the Secretary of the Treasury, he is authorized to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer of the United States, in favor of the several claimants, for payment thereof.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there is no report.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have the leave of the gentleman who reported this bill to offer a substitute for it.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to divide among the loyal northern creditors, whose debts were confiscated by the acts of the confederate government, the sum of $203,334.89, pro rata, according to the amount of such confiscated debts; and for that purpose he is authorized to appoint a commissioner, whose duty it shall be, after giving thirty days' public notice of the time and place of hearing in a newspaper published in the cities of Washington, New Orleans, and Philadelphia, to hear and determine the claim of all persons to the said fund; to ascertain by testimony taken under oath who is justly entitled to any part thereof caused by confiscation of his debts, whether or not such creditor has received in any other way, or from any other source, any portion or the whole of said claim, and after determining the amount, to distribute or allow for all such claims presented to him and order a division of said sum between said claimants, pro rata, after deducting the expenses of said division, which shall in no event exceed the sum of 5 per cent. in the amount thereof; and upon the approval of such division by the Secretary of the Treasury, he is authorized to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer of the United States in favor of the several claimants for payment thereof.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This bill was originally introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] and he proposed in the bill that the money appropriated should be distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury. When that proposition was submitted to the Committee on War Claims, they thought it advisable to let the parties in interest go to the Court of Claims and let the distribution of the money appropriated be made by the Court of Claims. So far as I am individually concerned, I have no choice about the matter. I am only carrying out what was the understanding of the committee. I understand now that the gentleman from Massachusetts thinks that it would be more expedient that the money should be distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and so far as I am personally concerned I have no objection to that, although I do not undertake to speak for the Committee on War Claims on that question.

Mr. McNULTA. I ask the gentleman to insert "Chicago" after the word "Washington," as one of the places where advertisement is to be made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly, I will do so. I want to make a statement to the Committee of the Whole, and I pray the attention of gentlemen while I make it. At the last session of Congress the bill I have offered as a substitute was reported from the Committee on Claims by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] It passed the House but failed to be considered in the Senate.

The circumstances are these: The confederate congress passed a law requiring all southern debtors of northern creditors to pay the amount of their debts, after the war began, into the Confederate States treasury. For that purpose they appointed certain receivers. When New Orleans was captured there was found in the banks of New Orleans to the credit of these Confederate States receivers $203,000 and odd of money. That money was taken and sent to the Secretary of the Treasury here, with a letter which will be found in the history of that date stating that it should be a fund out of which the creditors whose debts had been confiscated might be paid.

Mr. LAWRENCE. All of which will be found in Parton's History of General Butler at New Orleans, which the gentleman is too modest to refer to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It will be found in the history of that date.

Mr. STORM. It ought to be found in the report of a committee of this House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is in a report made to a former Congress. The bill, as reported by the Committee on War Claims, provides no way in which these owners can be notified, and provides no authority to adjudicate on the claims. The difficulty is this: There is not enough money to pay all these claims, and my amendment provides that it shall be divided up pro rata after advertisement, and that the whole expense shall not exceed 5 per cent. of the amount of claims paid, instead of sending the claimants to the Court of Claims, where there would be about eighty suits eating up the whole amount of money available. The whole expense under this amendment cannot exceed $10,000.

I need not elaborate upon this bill, because it has already passed the House twice, and the fact that it was favorably reported by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who never allows anything to get through if he can help it that ought not to pass, is evidence that everything is right about this bill.

Mr. MERRIAM. Have the claimants ever presented their claims?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They have been sending petitions here ever since I have been in Congress.

Mr. MERRIAM. Where do they reside?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Some in New York, some in Philadelphia, more in Saint Louis, and many in Chicago.

Mr. HAMILTON. I do not see how the gentleman can distinguish between the money referred to in this bill and any other property of Union men destroyed by the confederacy. If we open the door for these claimants, I do not see how we can refuse to admit claimants for property destroyed in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and wherever else it was destroyed. I do not see how we can distinguish between a debt taken from a loyal citizen and a horse or other property taken.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Allow me to state that this very money was put into the Treasury, and this bill is to pay it out again.

Mr. O'BRIEN. What is the amount of these claims? The gentleman says that the amount appropriated by this bill is to be paid out pro rata.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The amount of money paid into the Treasury was $203,000 and odd; the whole amount of claims is $500,000.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Do these claims still remain in possession of the original creditors or have they been assigned?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This bill requires that the parties shall make proof before the commissioner that they are the claimants for this very money on account of debts confiscated.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not know that it is necessary to suggest an amendment; yet for greater protection there should be inserted after "expenses of division" the words "including the salary of said commissioner."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is right.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This substitute provides that thirty days' notice shall be given, and that then these claims shall be adjudicated. Inasmuch as there is no limit fixed in the bill as to the time within which these claims may be presented, and inasmuch as the bill itself provides that this fund shall be distributed pro rata among whatever claims may be presented, so that any claim which may not be presented will be forever barred so far as this fund is concerned, I wish to ask the gentleman whether there should not be specified some limitation of time within which claims may be presented.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is such a limitation. There is to be thirty days' notice; and then three months are allowed for the presentation of claims.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. And all claims not presented within three months will be barred?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRIAM. Might not many just claims be shut out in that way?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; these creditors are all on the alert, and ready to avail themselves of any legislation of this kind.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have the bill now in my hand; and I find that it does not contain any specification of three months as the time within which claims shall be presented. There is a provision for thirty days' notice in a newspaper of the time and place of hearing; that is all.

Mr. SENER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this question: Did the account in the bank at New Orleans show from what parties these several sums in the hands of the receivers came or in favor of what debt in the North they should be applied, if so, why not apply this fund to the payment of those debts specifically, instead of making a general provision?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The bank account did not show the individual creditors. It stood in the name of the Confederate States receivers. But the books of those receivers, which I have no doubt are in the archives—they were at one time—will show—

Mr. SENER. Would it not be equitable to provide for paying these sums to the parties whose debts were confiscated?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is what the bill provides; it provides that this money shall be divided pro rata among them.

Mr. SENER. Only among those parties.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Only those.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Inasmuch as the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts contains no limitation as to time, I suggest that he add a provision specifying the time within which claims shall be presented. One year has been suggested—

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Say six months.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I am willing to make it six months, if that be satisfactory to other gentlemen. I suggest, then, this addition to the gentleman's substitute:

And claimants shall have six months in which to present claims to said commissioner.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. MERRIAM. I suggest that the gentleman add also the following, to which I presume there will be no objection:

Provided, That personal notice shall be given to all claimants as far as they are known.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am content with that; anything to have these men paid. I accept that amendment as a modification of my substitute.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I rise to oppose this bill. I submit that this money should be returned to the parties from whom it was taken. It is no more the property of northern creditors than any other money taken by the confederate forces. The courts have invariably decided that payment to a Confederate States receiver was no discharge of the debt; and northern creditors have enforced their claims against southern debtors in every instance where it was possible to do so. This money belongs to the parties from whom it was illegally taken by the Confederate States receivers.

Now, if any of those parties are bankrupt, and the northern creditor cannot enforce his debt against the individual debtor, then there is no more right or justice in saying that this particular fund shall be applied to the benefit of the northern creditors than that any other property taken by the confederate forces should be applied in that manner. The money belongs to the parties from whom it was taken by the Confederate States receivers, and should be returned to those parties.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say in answer to the gentleman that the fund was at the time sent home for that purpose; and this bill provides that any man who has received his pay in any other way shall not receive it out of this fund. There are debtors to the amount of five or six hundred thousand dollars who had their property confiscated and who have not been paid. I know one case (and to the honor of southern men, or rather southern women be it spoken) in which a woman of large estate was ordered by the Confederate States receivers to pay a debt due the northern creditor to the receivers. She refused to do so; she stood out and never did it. After the war she paid all the money to the creditor. But there were those who were obliged to obey the order of the confederate government; and there was the remainder of the money—only the remainder—standing in the bank to the credit of the Confederate States receivers; and when it was sent home it was accepted by the Government as a fund out of which to pay these men who had suffered these losses.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Suppose there were loyal creditors in the South, this bill would cut them off; for it specifies only northern creditors.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will look at the act of the confederate congress, he will find that it confiscates only the debts of northern creditors; that government never would admit that there were any disloyal men in the southern confederacy.

Mr. GIDDINGS. It is to confiscate the property of aliens.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is beyond the line.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Besides, the payment of this money to northern creditors will operate as a discharge of southern debtors.

Mr. GIDDINGS. They have already enforced their debts against southern debtors.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then they cannot have any of this money, because the bill provides they shall not have it unless they prove they have not received it in any other way.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 26.

So the substitute, as modified, was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was then laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

THE MORGAN RAID.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2687) making compensation for supplies taken by Union military forces during the Morgan raid.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the commissioners of claims to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of claims for horses, and stores or supplies, taken or furnished during the Morgan raid in July, 1863, through Indiana and Ohio, for the Union military forces, whether under command of officers of the United States, or of either of said States. And said commissioners shall make report of said claims as of other claims.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why make this exclusive; why not allow similar claims of northern people?

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is no other class of claims not already provided for by law. The object is substantially this: The present law provides for payment of claims of this character so far as they grew out of the taking by the Union Army, but during the Morgan raid there was an irregular State military force which did more service than the regular force of the United States, and they took these stores and supplies for military use. This is to pay citizens for property so taken and used by the military there.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I only rose to inquire why this should not be made general instead of special?

Mr. LAWRENCE. There was only one Morgan raid.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Read the bill again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not object to the bill, but think it is always doubtful policy to make special provisions of this character.

Mr. DURHAM. Why do the provisions of this bill apply only to Indiana and Ohio and not to Kentucky?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Because there was no other Morgan raid except that which passed through Ohio.

Mr. DURHAM. Why, General Morgan made four or five raids in Kentucky.

Mr. KELLOGG. He lived there.

Mr. DURHAM. Certainly he did, and raided on the people of Kentucky.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman from Kentucky misunderstands this bill. It is not to pay for anything Morgan took, but for what our own troops took.

Mr. DURHAM. Then why do you not apply it to Kentucky?

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is already a law for the payment of all stores and supplies taken by our troops in Kentucky.

Mr. DURHAM. Where?

Mr. LAWRENCE. In the act of July 4, 1864, and I will show it to the gentleman in the book if he wishes to see it. This proposes to pay for stores and supplies taken not only by the regularly authorized forces of the military but by the State military force. There was a State military force which did effective and valuable services during that raid. They took stores and supplies, and this is to pay for them. These words are used, "stores and supplies," which have been construed and are well understood by the Quartermaster-General's Department and by the Court of Claims. They only call for payment wherever stores and supplies taken by the troops of the United States are paid for.

Mr. DURHAM. I am not antagonizing this, but I dislike to see this discrimination against Kentucky. When you go before the gentleman's committee with a claim proven as clearly as it can be, because it comes from Kentucky or Virginia or some other southern State it is rejected.

Mr. SENER. And even when of loyal men.

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, even of loyal men. The great plea is that they are disloyal.

Now, because Ohio or Indiana happens to be raided upon, the chairman of the Committee on War Claims can report in their favor. It is the distinction being made I object to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have made no distinction between citizens of Kentucky and Ohio. The misfortune is there were vastly more disloyal citizens in Kentucky than in Ohio, though there were enough in Ohio.

Mr. DURHAM. That is in the opinion of the gentleman.

Mr. LAWRENCE. No; in the opinion of every man who knows anything about it.

And I say so far as the gentleman intimates that I am unwilling to do justice to any man in Kentucky, he says what is not correct.

Mr. DURHAM. I do undertake to say that the gentleman is very unfortunate in coming to the conclusion that there are no loyal people in the State of Kentucky. Many claims have been reported by his committee I do not say unjustly, but I undertake to say that wherever the two sections come in competition he has invariably voted for men in the Northern States against men in the Southern States, apparently on the ground that they were southern men.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky. He is not altogether fair in his strictures on the Committee on War Claims. They are very careful in regard to the claims they report, and it may be that sometimes they are too stringent. But I must say that it appears to me that Kentucky has been as well treated by that committee as any other State.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to say to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] that I have voted for Kentucky and Tennessee a great deal more than for any northern State. If I find what I consider an honest claim coming from Kentucky or Tennessee or any other State, whatever other members of the committee may do, I am ready to vote for it.

Mr. DURHAM. I concede that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] is a fair man.

Mr. LAWRENCE. And I am always ready to do the same.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ALBERT F. YERBY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2688) for the relief of Albert F. Yerby, administrator of Addison O. Yerby, deceased, or whom it may concern.

The bill was read. It provides that the claim presented by Albert F. Yerby, administrator of Addison O. Yerby, deceased, late of the county of Richmond, and State of Virginia, for lumber and timber taken by an officer or officers of the United States Army, in the year 1861, in Northumberland County, Virginia, which was used by the Government of the United States for the construction of wharves, and other purposes; and also for an ox-beef slaughtered on the farm of Addison O. Yerby, deceased, by the order of the commander of the United States gun-boat Currituck; also for horses and mules taken, be referred to the commissioners of claims, and that the commissioners shall ascertain and determine whether Addison O. Yerby, at and prior to the time the property was so taken, was and had been a loyal citizen of the United States, and what was the amount and value of the property so taken; and that the commissioners shall determine who is the legal representative of Addison O. Yerby, and entitled to any money for the property, if any money shall be awarded by the commissioners. In case any money shall be awarded by the commissioners, the same shall be awarded to the party lawfully entitled thereto.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask that the report may be read.

Mr. SENER. It is all right.

The report of the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

Addison O. Yerby was a citizen of the United States, residing in the county of Richmond, and State of Virginia, and said to be a loyal citizen of the United States. He was the owner of a saw-mill, situated on his farm on Dividing Creek, in the county of Northumberland, and State of Virginia, and had, as he by his representative claims, at said mill one hundred and fifty thousand feet of lumber, worth at the time $25 per thousand feet, and which was valued at $3,750. This lumber was taken by the Government of the United States in the year 1863, and transported by steamers to Point Lookout, in the State of Maryland, and there used in the construction of wharves and other building purposes.

He had also, as is claimed, an ox-beef, which was slaughtered on his farm by the order of the commander of the gun-boat Currituck, which gun-boat was a guard-boat of the transport steamers by which the lumber was carried away, which beef was valued at $50, as stated.

The claim also covers two mules and four horses, which were valued, as stated, at $1,250, which were seized and taken by the Eighth Illinois and Twelfth New York Regiments, and which were taken to the Army of the Potomac, then under the command of General Joseph Hooker. This seizure took place in the latter part of May or the forepart of June, 1863.

Addison O. Yerby died on the 1st day of January, 1866, leaving a widow and two children. Letters of administration have been granted on his estate.

The claims for the lumber and the ox-beef and the horses and mules would come within the equity of the act of Congress of 3d March, 1871, which made provision for the payment of stores or supplies which were taken from loyal men.

It is therefore requested that the claim for the ox-beef and lumber, horses and mules, be referred to the commission of claims for adjudication, and that Congress shall confer jurisdiction to that effect, should any doubt or difficulty from any cause exist.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

EMILLE LAPAGE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2339) for the relief of Emille Lapage.

The bill was read. The preamble recites that Emille Lapage, surviving partner of the firm of Lapage Brothers, has presented his claim for the recovery of the proceeds of twenty-five bales of cotton, alleged to have been taken from them at Pitch Landing, North Carolina, in January, 1865, by a naval expedition under the authority of the United States, and which cotton when so taken was supposed to belong, as is said, to the so-called Confederate States; and the claimant avers that Major-General BUTLER, commanding the military department having jurisdiction over the place where the cotton was stored and taken, had given permission to Lapage Brothers to remove and retain the same prior to the time when the cotton was so taken; and the claimant avers that at and prior to the time the cotton was taken Emille Lapage and Henry A. Lapage, partners composing the firm, were loyal citizens of the United States; and it is also claimed that the cotton was sold under proceedings to condemn the same without prejudice to the rights of Lapage Brothers.

The bill therefore provides that the claim of Emille Lapage for the recovery of the proceeds of the twenty-five bales of cotton so taken be referred to the Court of Claims for examination and adjudication, and that the court shall ascertain and determine whether the cotton was seized as aforesaid, and whether the same was the property of Lapage Brothers when the same was so seized, and whether at the time of such seizure, and prior thereto, Emille Lapage and Henry A. Lapage were loyal citizens of the United States; and whether, when the cotton was condemned and sold, if condemned and sold, such condemnation and sale were made without prejudice to the rights of Lapage Brothers; and also what amount arising from the proceeds of the sale of the cotton was covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The second section provides that the court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the claims aforesaid for such amount as shall be found to have been covered into the Treasury of the United States; provided that the court shall find upon examination the facts to be as alleged by Emille Lapage and therein before recited.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let the report be read.

The report of the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

That it appears from the evidence that on or about the 1st day of January, 1865, the said Lapage Brothers were in possession of twenty-five bales of cotton at Pitch Landing, in the State of North Carolina; that Major-General BUTLER, commanding the department, being satisfied as to the loyalty of the said Lapage Brothers and that they were the owners of said cotton, issued an order permitting them to remove said cotton from said landing; but that before they could remove it a naval expedition seized the same as the property of the so-called Confederate States, and it was subsequently libeled in the prize court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. It further appears that the cotton was condemned and sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States, without prejudice, however, to the claim of the memorialists, and that, in consequence of the fact that the cotton was under the control of and subject to the order of the said prize court, which did not render its decision in the case until July, 1867, the memorialists were unable to prosecute their claim in the Court of Claims, as provided by the act of March 12, 1863.

Your committee are of opinion, in view of these facts, that the said Emille Lapage, surviving partner of the firm of Lapage Brothers, is equitably entitled to the relief prayed for, and to that end report the accompanying bill authorizing the said Emille Lapage, surviving partner of the firm of Lapage Brothers, to institute suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the proceeds of said cotton paid into the United States Treasury, and recommend its passage.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey. I observe that in the bill there is a mistake in the name; it should be Lapage.

The CHAIRMAN. The correction will be made by the Clerk.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARK DAVIS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2390) for the relief of Mark Davis.

The bill was read. The preamble recites that it appears that the military authorities of the United States in command of the city of New Orleans, on the 23d day of February, 1863, demanded and received at the city of New Orleans, from the agent of Mark Davis, a loyal citizen of the United States, residing at Petersburg, Virginia, promissory notes to the amount and value of ——— dollars, and demanded and received possession of real estate belonging to Mark Davis, and subsequently collected certain rents for the use and occupation thereof, the amount whereof does not clearly appear.

The bill therefore authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the amount of money so collected by the authorities aforesaid for the rent of the real estate of Mark Davis and upon the promissory notes, and to adjust and settle the claim and to pay over such amount so collected by the authorities aforesaid to Mark Davis or his legal representative: Provided, That he shall first be satisfied that the claimant was a loyal citizen of the United States during the rebellion and that the sum allowed was received by the United States officers; and the necessary amount of money is appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

That the petitioner, Mark Davis, is, and always has been, a loyal citizen of the United States; that during the rebellion, and for many years prior thereto, he resided at Petersburg, in the State of Virginia.

He was formerly a merchant carrying on business in Virginia and at New Orleans, but some years before the rebellion retired from business, and was living at Petersburg, his place of residence, mainly on the income of the real estate described in his petition, which he owned in the city of New Orleans, and which was in charge of his agent, Mr. Edward Barnett, who leased it and received rents on account of Mr. Davis. Mr. Davis is an aged man and an invalid, and during the entire rebellion was confined to his domicile in Petersburg. On the 14th of February, 1863, the following requisition was made upon Mr. Edward Barnett, the agent of Mr. Davis, at New Orleans:

OFFICE OF CHIEF QUARTERMASTER,
DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
New Orleans, February 14, 1863.

SIR: You are hereby ordered to pay to Colonel Holabird, or to me, at this office, forthwith, all money, notes, bills, or other funds, and all evidence of debts due to or belonging to one Mark Davis, of Virginia, now in your hands, or in any way under your control.

Respectfully, yours,

JNO. W. MCCLURE,
Assistant Quartermaster.

EDWARD BARNETT, Esq.

In compliance with this requisition, Mr. Barnett, who had been the agent of Mr. Davis for over thirty years, delivered to the military authorities the possession of two stores, then under lease at the rate of $7,500 per annum; two other stores then under lease at the rental of $166.66 per month, and certain other real estate then under lease at $30 a month, together with forty-one promissory notes, each for $325, and maturing monthly from the 1st of July, 1862, until the 1st of November, 1863, given by H. Hollander and H. Weber. The first note being credited with $500, paid thereon on the 9th of August, 1862; and also fourteen other promissory notes, each for $166.67, made by Booth & Co., and maturing monthly from the 30th of September, 1862, until the 31st of October, 1863, the first note being credited with the $75 paid thereon. These notes amount in the aggregate to $27,953.24 without interest. They were all good, and were paid by the makers at maturity.

Possession of the real estate was restored to Mr. Davis some time in the year 1865. Mr. Davis, believing that his residence within a State in rebellion rendered it proper that he should apply for and obtain a pardon, did so apply, and obtained a pardon from the President of the United States on the 29th day of July, 1865.

Annexed to the memorial of the petitioner, together with certain exhibits and proofs, are—

An affidavit of sundry citizens of the State of Virginia, marked Exhibit A; Requisition upon Edward Barnett by John W. McClure, assistant quartermaster, marked Exhibit B; Affidavit of Edward Barnett, marked Exhibit C; and the Receipt of S. B. Holabird, colonel and chief quartermaster, for the property seized, marked Exhibit D.

EXHIBIT A.

We, the undersigned, citizens respectively of Petersburg, in the State of Virginia, having been severally sworn, do depose and say we have known Mark Davis, sr., for many years; that previous to the year 1843 he was engaged in active business, partly in this city and partly in New Orleans, his home, however, being here. Since about the time last aforesaid the said Mark Davis, sr., has lived retired from business and without occupation. From the proceeds of his business a large portion of his property was invested in real estate in the city of New Orleans, the rents and profits of which constituted a like proportion of his income.

Mr. Davis has always been an exemplary citizen, and a truthful and honorable man. He took no part whatever in the rebellion, directly or indirectly; but to manifest, either by words or acts, sentiments of loyalty to the Government of the United States during the rebellion would have subjected him to every annoyance and a very great peril both in person and property. He was protected both by age and infirmity from being called upon to serve the Confederate States or promote the rebellion in any way whatsoever, and led a life of entire repose and quiet seclusion from affairs from the beginning to the end of the rebellion. We do not hesitate to say that any statement Mr. Davis may make is entitled to implicit confidence and belief.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF QUARTERMASTER,
DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
New Orleans, February 14, 1863.

SIR: You are hereby ordered to pay to Colonel Holabird or to me, at this office, forthwith, all money, notes, bills, or other and all evidence of debts due to or belonging to one Mark Davis, of Virginia, now in your hands, or in any way under your control.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN W. MCCLURE,
Assistant Quartermaster.

EXHIBIT C.

Affidavit of Edward Barnett.

NEW ORLEANS, November 22, 1871.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
City of New Orleans:

I, Edward Barnett, of the city of New Orleans, do hereby certify and declare, that, as the agent and attorney in fact of Mark Davis, sr., of Petersburg, Virginia, under power of attorney from him dated April 4, 1851, I was in possession of the following-described improved properties, rights, and credits belonging to him in this city, namely:

First. Two stores in square bounded by Saint Charles, Camp, Common, and Gravier streets, both fronting on Saint Charles street, and forming the corner of Common street, valued at $60,000, and rented to Hollander and Weber at $6,500 per annum, payable monthly.

Second. Stores Nos. 34 and 36 Magazine street, in square bounded by Magazine, Tchapioulas, and Gravier streets, and Natchez alley. No. 34 rented at $65 per month, No. 36 rented at $166.66 per month, and valued at $55,000.

Third. Property No. 244 Tchapioulas street, in square bounded by Tchapioulas, Delard, Pearl, and Louisa streets, rented at $30 per month, valued at $5,000. Together with the following rent-notes, cash, &c., namely:

Forty-one notes for $625 each, of H. Hollander and A. Weber, tenants of said stores corner of Saint Charles and Common streets, maturing monthly from 1st of July, 1862, to the 1st of November, 1865, the first note credited with $500, together with the lease of said stores.

Also, fourteen notes for $166.66 each, signed by Booth & Co., maturing monthly from the 30th of September, 1862, to the 31st of October, 1863, the first note credited with $75 for rent of said store No. 36 Magazine street, together with lease of same to said Booth & Co.

Also, one lease of said store No. 34 Magazine street to H. Spiro & Co., at $65 per month in advance.

Also, lease to W. Zimmerman for premises No. 244 Tchapioulas street, at $30 per month.

Also, $1,085 in Confederate States notes.

Also, $275.30 in currency.

All which was seized under military orders by order marked A, and identified by me, John W. McClure, captain and assistant quartermaster Department of the Gulf, under date of February 14, 1863, as will also appear by his receipt to me, marked B, and also identified by me, dated the 23d day February, 1863.

That above-described real estate only was returned to me by W. B. Armstrong, captain and assistant quartermaster, on the 31st of October, 1865, as per order dated 14th October, 1865, as appears by document marked C, also identified by me, the said Armstrong refusing to account to me for said notes, ready money, or rentals of said property, but referring me for same to the Government at Washington.

In witness whereof I hereto set my hand at the city of New Orleans, parish of Orleans, and State of Louisiana, on the 22d day of November, A. D. 1871.

EDWARD BARNETT.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 22d day of November, A. D. 1871.

[I. R. S. 5 cents.]

A. BARNETT,
Notary Public.

EXHIBIT D.

The receipt referred to is follows:

"Received, New Orleans, February 23, 1863, from Edward Barnett, esq., forty-one notes for $625 each, signed by H. Hollander and H. Weber, to mature monthly from 1st July, 1862, until 1st November, 1865. The first note is credited with $500 paid 9th August, 1862, for rent of Mr. Davis's property corner Saint Charles and Common streets, as per lease, before E. Barnett, notary public, dated February 16, 1860.

"Also, fourteen notes for $166.67, signed by Booth & Co., to mature monthly from 30th September, 1862, until 31st October, 1863. The first note is credited with $75 for rent of store 36 Magazine street, as per lease, also received.

"Also, one lease for store No. 34 Magazine street, to H. Spiro & Co., at $65 per month, in advance.

"Also, one lease to Mr. Zimmerman for store 244 Tchapioulas street, at $30 per month.

"Also, $1,085 in Confederate States notes.

"Also, $275.25 in cash, balance as per account rendered this day. This interlineation on reverse side is $275.25.

"S. B. HOLABIRD,
Colonel, Chief Quartermaster,
Per J. W. MCCLURE,
Captain, Assistant Quartermaster."

Upon the facts, the committee find, and are of opinion, upon well-settled principles of law and equity, that the petitioner is entitled to redress and proper compensation for the property so seized and appropriated, and the committee therefore report and recommend the passage of this accompanying bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I think the report does not state the grounds on which the seizure was made. Will the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] explain that?

Mr. KELLOGG. This claimant, Mark Davis, resided in Petersburg, in the State of Virginia, and was a loyal citizen. He had an agent in New Orleans, where he owned his property and had notes due to him. The Government seized his property by the hand of Colonel Holabird.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why?

Mr. KELLOGG. Simply because they wanted to get it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I see that it was by a special order. Was it charged that he was a rebel?

Mr. KELLOGG. It may have been so charged. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall first be satisfied that the claimant was a loyal citizen; otherwise he will not get anything. The bill simply refers it to the Secretary of the Treasury, to ascertain the amount of money taken from this man and paid into the Treasury, and to pay it to Davis if he is satisfied that he was a loyal citizen of the United States during the rebellion.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not object to the bill. I only wanted to know why the property was seized.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

RANDALL BROWN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 633) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee, the sum of $1,600 for property taken by the rebel forces while the same was being used by the Government of the United States, to be shown upon proofs and vouchers.

The Committee on War Claims reported an amendment, to insert in line 5 the word "five" in place of six.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 633) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee, having had the same under consideration, report:

That the said Randall Brown is a colored man, resident of Nashville, Tennessee; that during the late rebellion, in the year 1863, he was the owner of three teams, wagons, &c., and was employed with said teams, wagons, &c., on the forts then being constructed for the defense of Nashville, by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, with a promise or guarantee of protection against capture by the enemy; that during the month of July, 1863, while engaged with his teams in hauling wood to Overton's Station, on the Tennessee and Alabama Railroad, on the 3d of July, the rebel forces made a raid upon the hands engaged in hauling wood to said station, taking them prisoners and capturing several teams, among others the teams, wagons, &c., of the said Randall Brown.

The committee are of opinion that the claimant was entitled to the protection pledged him, and that the capture of said horses, wagons, &c., were without fault or negligence on the part of the said Brown; that the said horses, ten in number, were worth the sum of $125 each, the price paid for horses for the military service of the United States at that time; that the wagons and harness were worth the sum of $250; and these facts are clearly established by satisfactory evidence.

Your committee, therefore, report back the foregoing bill with the recommendation that the same be amended by inserting in line 5 the word "five" in place of "six," and that, as thus amended, the bill do pass.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. FLORA A. DARLING.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the relief of Mrs. Flora A. Darling, of New Hampshire.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Flora A. Darling, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, in reimbursement for losses sustained by her in consequence of the seizure by military authority of certain bank-notes and personal effects at the city of New Orleans in January, 1864, while on a flag-of-truce boat, under the protection of a passport given her by Major-General N. P. Banks, then commanding the Department of the Gulf.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The report was read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Mrs. Flora Adams Darling, having had the same under consideration, ask leave to report:

That the memorialist is a native of New Hampshire; that in 1859 she was married to Edmond A. Darling, of New Orleans, Louisiana; that during the late rebellion her husband was a general in the confederate army, and was killed in a battle near Franklin, Tennessee, in November, 1863; that in the month of December following, having closed up the estate of her said deceased husband, so far as possible, she applied to General Dabney Maury, the confederate commander at Mobile, Alabama, for permission to return to her home in the North, there to remain permanently with her father and mother and her only child; that General Maury acceded to her request, and applied to Major-General N. P. Banks, then in command of the Department of the Gulf, for permission to go north under the protection of a flag of truce; that such permission was granted, and during the month of December, 1863, the memorialist was received on board a United States flag-of-truce boat, by Captain Thomas Tileston, United States Volunteers, then a flag-of-truce officer in the United States service, who then delivered to her a passport signed by Major-General Banks. Captain Tileston's sworn statement is herewith appended, and made a part of this report:

STATE OF NEW YORK.

City and County of New York, ss:

Thomas Tileston, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I reside in the city of New York; my occupation is a broker. During the months of December, 1863, and January, 1864, I was flag-of-truce officer in the service of the United States, on the schooner Alice Maguigen, plying between Pascagoula, Mississippi, and New Orleans.

On or about the — day of December, 1863, as said officer, I received Mrs. General F. A. Darling, and, by direction of General Banks, commanding general of the Department of the Gulf, I delivered to the said Mrs. General Darling a permit to enter New Orleans under said flag of truce. I heard her remark that she had no United States money, but had funds she intended to exchange when she arrived in New Orleans. She also stated her intentions to proceed directly to New York and join her family in the North. I know of her arrest and the taking possession of her trunks by a sergeant in the United States Army, under the direction of the provost marshal general of the Department of the Gulf, on board the said flag-of-truce boat, but I do not know the name of the sergeant who made the arrest and seizure. I considered Mrs. Darling then, as I do now, a lady who was entitled to the protection that had been guaranteed to her by her passport. She was under my care during the passage, and I heard nothing and obtained no impression that led me for one moment to believe she would be subjected to other treatment than that accorded to all other flag-of-truce passengers.

THOMAS TILESTON,
Late Captain, United States Volunteers.

Sworn to before me this 24th day of January, 1874.

J. CLINTON GRAY,
Notary Public, New York City.

Your committee further find that the memorialist, Mrs. Darling, proceeded to New Orleans on said flag-of-truce boat; that while said vessel was lying at the wharf in said city with a flag of truce flying from her mast, a sergeant of the United States Army, acting under the direction and orders of General Bowen, an officer on duty at New Orleans as provost marshal general of the Department of the Gulf, took possession of her trunks, and in her presence took therefrom a package alleged to contain $5,000 in State bank notes, then at par, and $10,000 in confederate cotton bonds; that she was then taken by the sergeant to the Julia street prison where she was confined eight days without money and without a change of clothing, and for three months thereafter was under arrest endeavoring during that period to obtain an interview with General Banks, but without success; that after that period of time she obtained an interview with General Banks, who sent a staff officer with her to General Bowen's headquarters; that the said General Bowen expressed entire ignorance as to what had been taken from her trunks, and that every officer to whom she applied informed her that they knew nothing of the matter.

Your committee further find, from the statement of the memorialist, that when her trunks were returned to her everything of value had been taken therefrom, including the cotton bonds and State bank notes, and some silver and gold coin and diamonds; that she made further effort to obtain redress, but failed, and that soon afterward she was, by order of General Bowen, taken on board a military transport and sent to New York City.

Your committee further find that Mrs. Darling applied to President Lincoln for redress, who directed an investigation to be made by the Bureau of Military Justice; that report thereon was made by Judge-Advocate-General Holt, under date of July 19, 1866, who had only the application or statement of Mrs. Darling before him, and from which report the following extract is taken:

"The application of Mrs. Darling having been referred to the military authorities at New Orleans for investigation, no trace of the property and no information whatever in regard to its seizure has been found possible to be obtained. This is probably owing in great part to the long period which has intervened since the proceeding complained of, and to the laches of the applicant in prosecuting her claim."

The Judge-Advocate General, in conclusion, says:

"As to the merits of the claim in respect to its other items, it is impossible, in the absence of any evidence whatever in support of the statements of the applicant, to arrive at any final conclusion."

"It is clear, however, that after a careful investigation none of these moneys can be found in the hands of any officer of the Government, and that there is thus no existing property of the party which can be restored to her in specie. In any event, therefore, the Military Department—whose power would be limited to such a restoration—would be wholly without the means or authority to grant any relief in the case."

From the foregoing extracts it appears that Mrs. Darling's claim was considered by the War Department upon the statement only of Mrs. Darling. As to the charge of laches in prosecuting her claim, it appears that Mrs. Darling had placed it in the hands of the late Hon. Robert J. Walker, and that Mr. Walker's illness and subsequent death account for whatever delay or neglect has occurred, which, however, your committee consider an immaterial matter.

Your committee are of opinion that the Government is in strict law bound to reimburse Mrs. Darling for losses sustained by her through the acts of a military subordinate, whether the same were authorized by the rules and regulations of war prescribed by it or not, while she was under the protection of a flag of truce with a proper passport or safe-conduct from United States military authorities. On this point Chancellor Kent defines the general rule with regard to flags of truce as follows:

"He who promises security by a passport is morally bound to afford it against any of his subjects or forces and make good any damages the party might sustain by violation of the passport. The privilege being so far a dispensation from the legal effects of war, it is always to be taken strictly, and must be confined to the purposes and place and time for which it was granted. A safe-conduct generally includes the necessary baggage and servants of the person to whom it is granted." (Kent's Commentaries, 161.)

Your committee are further of opinion that, in point of equity, the Government is bound to make reparation for the wrong done Mrs. Darling by the acts of its subordinates, at least so far as may be practicable. As to the recovery of the value of the confederate securities, no claim is made. That their being found in Mrs. Darling's possession was a justification of the seizure of her baggage cannot be maintained. As to the character of confederate notes, the Supreme Court says, in the case of Thornton vs. Smith, 8 Wallace, page 11:

"They must be regarded, therefore, as a currency imposed on the community by irresistible force. It seems to follow as a necessary consequence from this actual supremacy of the insurgent government as a belligerent within the territory where it circulated, and from the necessity of civil obedience on the part of all who remained in it, that this currency must be considered in courts of law in the same light as if it had been issued by a foreign government temporarily occupying a part of the territory of the United States."

The possession of the confederate cotton bonds by Mrs. Darling was therefore a lawful possession, and no possible benefit could inure to the confederate government by such possession, either in the South or North. Under the law of nations the possession of the currency or securities of one belligerent cannot be regarded as a violation of the flag of truce by the other.

They are not contraband. Wildeman, in a chapter in his work on the law of nations, includes every species of contraband known to modern nations, and mentions only official communications as contraband under a flag of truce.

If one belligerent does not wish to receive the person or effects of one who holds a passport under a flag of truce, he may refuse to receive the person or his effects; but to enter upon a flag of truce boat, and seize and confiscate the moneys and securities of a person who has been guaranteed protection, is denominated by the law of nations an act of perfidy.

As to the diamonds, which the petitioner values at $1,000, they cannot be regarded otherwise than as personal effects. For the detention at New Orleans at her own expense, while under arrest, for three months, with other expenses incidental to the prosecution of her claim against the Government, your committee believe that, in strict equity, she should be reimbursed.

Your committee believe, in conclusion, from all the evidence before them, that Mrs. Darling was in possession of the property specified in her petition; that it was taken from her by a sergeant of the United States Army, acting under the color of authority of the provost marshal general at New Orleans; that she was subjected to detention and consequent expense, as well as considerable expense since in the prosecution of her claim for redress, and that, both in law and equity, she is entitled to reimbursement for the losses incurred while under the special protection of the United States Government.

Wherefore your committee report the accompanying bill appropriating the sum of $5,000 as reimbursement for the State bank notes taken from her, for loss of personal effects, and reimbursement of necessary expenses incurred in procuring redress, and recommend its passage.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to say that I do not concur in that report of the committee, because I believe the claim not sufficiently proven.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS DAY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1283) for the relief of Thomas Day, of Indiana.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Thomas Day, of Indiana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $640, in full satisfaction of the claim for damages sustained by him by reason of the appropriation by the United States, in 1863, for hospital purposes, of the grounds used and occupied by him for a nursery of fruit trees at Madison, Indiana.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I will not ask for the reading of the report in this case; but I do ask that it go into the RECORD.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I have agreed with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the committee should rise in time for him to have action upon the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not understand that the chairman of one committee of the House has control of the business of the House, and I trust the committee will continue its session and go on with this business.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is important that we should close up our action on the bill pending in the House, and I trust that the committee will now rise.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] will understand that the report on the bill now reached, if its reading be insisted on, would take a long time, and I think we shall save time by rising. The bill will be the first thing in order when we go again into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois; and on a division there were—ayes 59, noes 42.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does not require a quorum for the committee to rise; less than a quorum can rise. It was a plain matter of agreement that at this hour we should go on with the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. O, no.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well; go on, if you want to try it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on the motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It requires in this case an order of the committee for tellers, as a quorum is not required for tellers on a motion to rise.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts. I withdraw the call for tellers. So the motion of Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. KASSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DUNNELL reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with and some without amendments, with the recommendation that they do pass.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the following bill:

A bill (H. R. No. 3623) to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed to clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1863.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 1799) granting a pension to Angelica Hammond.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and asked the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 1294) to fix the salaries of the district judges in the northern and southern districts of New York.

DUNCAN MARR.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2683) for the relief of Duncan Marr, a loyal citizen of Montgomery County, Tennessee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ALDREDGE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the relief of John Aldredge.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPEER. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 80, not voting 96; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Burchard, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Corwin, Crooke, Crouse, Crutchfield, Danford, Dobbins, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Farwell, Foster, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Hegans, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, John B. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Tyner, Wheeler, Whiteley, George Willard, and Wolfe—96.

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, said: I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from New York, Mr. LAMPORT. If present he would vote for the bill, and I would vote against it.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF FOR LOYAL CREDITORS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2686) for the relief of certain loyal creditors whose moneys were confiscated by the confederate congress.

The bill was reported with a substitute, and the question was upon agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I cannot conceive why these northern creditors should be paid out of this fund rather than those who lost other property during the war. According to the showing made here, this money was found in the hands of Confederate States receivers, having been paid to them under the confiscation act of the confederate government. The money was seized by Federal authority and sent to the Treasury of the United States. The courts in the Southern States, State and Federal, have uniformly held that the receipt of a Confederate States receiver is no discharge of a debt; and in every instance where parties have instituted suits they have recovered their debts, unless they have failed to make proper proof, or the debtors had no means to pay.

The proposition in this bill is to apply the money of a debtor who has paid his debt once to the Confederate States receiver to the payment of another man's debt. There is no sort of sense, justice, or honesty in applying this fund in this way, any more than in applying any other fund derived from property captured by Federal authority to the payment of the particular creditors of parties living in the South. It is wrong in principle, and will be opening a door which you will find it difficult to shut. It is making the Government responsible for all the property captured in the South during the war, and applies the proceeds to a particular favored class of northern creditors, who have no more right to this money than have any other persons.

According to the decision of the courts in the Southern States, it was illegally taken from southern debtors and found in the hands of confederate receivers and captured like any other property. The receipt of those receivers did not discharge the debtors, and when after the close of the war those debtors were sued, in every instance where they were able to respond, the money has been collected from them. It is no answer to say that these parties must show that they have not been paid in order to receive any part of this fund, for if some have not been paid others have been paid, and this is applying the money of one debtor to discharge the debt of another. There is no justice in it, there is no sense in it, any more than in applying the property taken otherwise in the war to the payment of particularly favored creditors.

When the war closed it was held by the courts throughout the South, State and Federal, that a payment made to a Confederate States receiver was no discharge of the debt. The creditors who instituted suits invariably collected their money when the debtors were able to pay. Those parties who have not been paid hold claims against parties who are bankrupt, and this money which was so collected by the Confederate States receivers is by this bill to be applied to pay the debts of bankrupts.

Mr. SPEER. Your proposition is that Congress should not appropriate money to pay the debts of bankrupts.

Mr. GIDDINGS. No; for if you pay the debt of one bankrupt, why not pay all? If you pay one class of persons who have lost by the war, why not pay all?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say one or two words about this matter. As I have already stated, this bill has heretofore passed this House in two different Congresses. In the last Congress it was before the Committee on Claims, and was referred for special examination to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who reported favorably a bill identical with this.

I will again state the facts of the case. The confederate congress passed a law providing that the debts of all aliens should be confiscated and paid into the confederate treasury. This was done through the medium of certain receivers. When New Orleans was captured the receivers there had to their credit in the bank $203,000, the representative of debts of northern creditors that had been confiscated. That money was taken and sent here to the Secretary of the Treasury; it was sent specifically (and was so received by him and put in his report) as a fund out of which these northern creditors might receive payment of their debts. Now, there not being enough to pay all these debts, the creditors have asked us to divide the fund. Two Congresses have undertaken to do that. It is necessary to have a commissioner to divide the fund pro rata.

Under the bill it is provided that no man shall receive any part of this money until he proves that he has not received his pay from any other source. The books of the Confederate States receivers (and I believe those books are still in existence) will show exactly from whom this money was taken, and who had claims upon it. This is a specific fund. It is as if the confederacy had undertaken to confiscate a northern man's horse, and that horse should now be found in the custody of the United States. The question would be simply, will the United States give back that horse to the man it belongs to?

The fact that some of these creditors may have been otherwise paid does not affect this bill, because all such payments must under its provisions be deducted whenever payment is claimed from this fund.

Mr. SPEER. Are the men who are to get this money the creditors of the debtors who paid the money into the hands of the Confederate States receivers?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; exactly those men and no others; it is limited to them.

Mr. MERRIAM. Whether this money should be divided among these northern creditors is a question which each member will decide for himself in voting on this bill; but I would like to know this, if I as a banker or merchant of New York have sold goods or loaned credit to a man in New Orleans and that money has been seized, how am I to know under this bill from whom it was seized, so that I may be notified that there is something due to me? How can I know that I am a party interested in this matter?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me answer that question in a word. The bill provides that there shall be published in all the principal cities of the country notice that this fund is in existence and is to be distributed. Not only that; when the books of the receivers are found it is made the duty of the commissioner to give notice to the parties whose debts appear to have been confiscated.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose the books are never found?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then, as in other cases of this kind, resort must be had to legal notice; and let me tell the gentleman that if he or any other man had a southern debt confiscated, he has very likely found it out before now, and if this bill be passed he will apply to see whether its provisions cover his case. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read the third time by its title.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I ask for the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the demand comes too late as the bill has already been read by its title.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I made the demand before the Clerk commenced to read the bill by its title, but the Chair did not recognize me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon that statement the gentleman's demand is in time. The bill has not been engrossed; and it must go to the Speaker's table unless some motion in regard to it be interposed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. As the gentleman demands the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. While the bill is being engrossed we might go into Committee of the Whole and pass the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. CESSNA. Before the yeas and nays are taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I ask for a division. I think we can get through without a call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken; there were on a division—ayes 33, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. GIDDINGS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 36; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a further count demanded?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, yes.

Mr. SPEER. If the House should now adjourn, will not this bill come up as unfinished business to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPEER. Then I move to adjourn.

Mr. CESSNA. The House is now dividing.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And therefore the motion to adjourn is not in order.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. BLAINE having resumed the chair.) The tellers cannot detain the House all the afternoon. The House has divided, and a return has been made. The motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The tellers made return just as fast as it could be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who was temporarily occupying the chair announced the result "ayes 72, noes 36; no quorum voting." Therefore a motion for adjournment or for a call of the House is the only thing in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] has moved to adjourn.

Mr. CESSNA and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, called for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. GIDDINGS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 71.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the engrossed bill.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The last vote shows there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present in the judgment of the Chair, but as the count did not disclose it he will not interpose his judgment.

Mr. KASSON. The pending motion is to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. COTTON. I move there be a call of the House to see if there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. RANDALL. The better way would be to move to adjourn and have the yeas and nays on that.

The SPEAKER. Tellers on the motion that there be a call of the House would test whether there be a quorum or not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILBER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 61; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman who demanded the presence of a quorum before the engrossed bill was read has not himself voted.

Mr. RANDALL. Nobody has the right to interrupt the tellers.

The SPEAKER. The tellers have the floor.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I will vote now, and not be so long about it as the gentleman was awhile ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present in the House.

The House further divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 104.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes "no," and defeats the motion. There is a quorum present, and the House refuses to order a call of the House.

Mr. KASSON. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is not in order now.

The SPEAKER. The previous question now operating exhausts itself on the reading of the engrossed bill; but the previous question is required to be repeated on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I demand the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. I hope it will not be seconded just now, as this bill is of so dangerous a character that it requires further and more careful consideration.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KASSON, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

Mr. KASSON. I move the House do now adjourn; and pending that I move the engrossed bill be printed in the RECORD to-morrow, so we can all see it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is no objection to printing it, but in the mean time let us pass it.

The engrossed bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to divide among the loyal northern creditors whose debts were confiscated by the acts of the confederate government the sum of $203,334.89, pro rata, according to the amount of such confiscated debts; and for that purpose he is authorized to appoint a commissioner, whose duty it shall be, after giving thirty days' public notice of the time and place of hearing in a newspaper published in the cities of Washington, Chicago, New Orleans, New York, and Philadelphia, to hear and determine the claims of all persons to the said fund, to ascertain by testimony taken under oath who is justly entitled to any part thereof, caused by confiscation of his debts, whether or not such creditor has received in any other way or from any other source any portion or the whole of said claim; and after determining the amount, to distribute or allow for all such claims presented to him, and order a division of said sum between said claimants, pro rata, after deducting the salary of said commissioner and the expenses of such division, which shall in no event exceed the sum of 5 per cent. on the amount thereof, and upon the approval of such division by the Secretary of the Treasury he is authorized to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer of the United States in favor of the several claimants for payment thereof; and claimants shall have six months in which to present their claims to said commission; and provided that personal notice shall be given to all claimants as far as they are known.

Mr. KASSON. I move the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 64.

Mr. KASSON. I demand tellers.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It does not require a quorum on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question of a quorum having been raised, it might as well be determined on this as on the motion for a call of the House.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 77.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DONNAN. I object to this bill being printed in the RECORD. We have it in print on our files, and there is no use of cumbering the RECORD with it.

Mr. KASSON. This bill was not printed; the substitute was in writing.

The SPEAKER. Objection comes too late. There being no further count demanded, the previous question is seconded and the main question is ordered.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were ayes 21, not one-fifth of those present.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does not this and the other bills reported from the Committee of the Whole come up as unfinished business to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. They do.

Then, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD, (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ARTHUR: The remonstrance of tobacco manufacturers and dealers of Covington, Kentucky, against an advance on the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COBURN: The petition of 500 citizens of Indiana, for the equalization of bounties, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of 30 soldiers of New Jersey, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois: The petition of 300 citizens of Jasper County, Illinois, for an appropriation to construct the Hennepin canal, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. LOUGHRIDGE: Memorial of the National Woman Suffrage Association, relative to suffrage, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PACKER: Two petitions of citizens of Mount Carmel, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872, and also for the passage of the currency bill submitted by Hon. W. D. KELLEY, providing for the issue of 3.65 convertible bonds, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of citizens of Trevorton, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Lykens, Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: The petition of citizens of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, for Government aid to the Texas and Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. SPEER: The petition of citizens of Mifflin County, Pennsylvania, for Government aid to a southern railroad line to the Pacific, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Also, petitions of workmen of the Logan Iron and Steel Works,

Pennsylvania, and of citizens of McConnellstown, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and remonstrating against a tax on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SWANN: The petition of citizens of Baltimore, Maryland, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Five petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WALDRON: The memorial of Jules L. Williams, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 13, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, presented the credentials of Hon. William W. Eaton, appointed by the governor of the State of Connecticut a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. William A. Buckingham.

The credentials were read; and the oaths prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. EATON, he took his seat in the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BOGY presented a memorial of the Union Merchants' Exchange, of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of the location of a mint in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Union Merchants' Exchange, of Saint Louis, Missouri, in opposition to the passage of a law transferring the control of the Light-House Board from the Navy to the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of John Kelly, of Alleghany County, Virginia, praying for a rehearing of his claim disallowed by the commissioners of claims, or that the same be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SARGENT presented a memorial of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, remonstrating against the repeal of the provision for the special subsidy granted to them by the law of Congress approved June 1, 1872, for mail service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, and praying that an appropriation be made to carry it into effect; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCCREERY presented a petition of delegates of the Creek Nation of Indians, praying the payment of the balance claimed to be due them under the treaty of June 14, 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of citizens of Johnstown, Cambria County, Pennsylvania, praying that the aid of the national credit be extended to the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, and a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a memorial of citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DORSEY presented a letter from the Postmaster-General, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, relative to the nature and extent of the operations of the registered-letter system and its defects; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE presented the petition of John A. Brown, of Mobile, Alabama, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING presented resolutions of the Ship-Owner's Association of the State of New York, in favor of Congress granting the appropriation asked for by General John Newton for the improvement of the channel at Hell Gate, New York; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Finance, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1298) to establish a mint for the coinage of gold and silver at Chicago, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move that this bill be printed and recommitment to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the petition of 208 American merchant seamen of the port of New York, and the petition of 8 American merchant seamen of Cairo, Illinois, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the marine-hospital service, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1193) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the schooner Matilda, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3268) for the relief of John N. Reed, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported a bill (S. No. 1297) to provide for the republication of the first volume of the Patent Office Gazette; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

PRINTING OF ENGROSSED AND ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, who were directed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the expediency of making an alteration in the mode of engrossing bills, reported the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the fifth and sixth joint rules of the two Houses be, and the same are hereby, amended by the omission of the following words in brackets and the addition of the following words in italics; so that the rules will read:

5. While bills are on their passage between the two Houses, they shall be in print [on paper] and under the signature of the Secretary or Clerk of each House, respectively.

6. After the bill shall have passed both Houses, it shall be duly enrolled in print on vellum [parchment] by the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate, as the bill may have originated in the one or the other House, before it shall be presented to the President of the United States.

The resolution was ordered to be printed.

CONSULATE HOUSE AT TUNIS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was addressed a communication from the Secretary of State, inclosing a draught of a bill to allow the acceptance of the consulate house at Tunis by the Government of the United States, to report a bill; and I ask to have it put upon its passage now.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1296) to authorize the acceptance in behalf of the United States of America of certain real property occupied by the United States consul at Tunis, was read three times, and passed. It authorizes the President of the United States to accept in behalf of this Government the title to the residence now and for many years occupied by the consul of the United States at Tunis, which has been courteously offered by His Highness the Bey of Tunis. When the proper muniment of the title shall have been furnished it is to be lodged in the Department of State.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3750) for the relief of E. Boyd Pendleton;

A bill (H. R. No. 2683) for the relief of Duncan Marr, a loyal citizen of Montgomery County, Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the relief of John Aldredge.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1299) to establish a post-route from Ozark to Boston, in Christian County, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1300) to establish a mint of the United States at Saint Louis, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1301) to admit free of duty the diamond necklace presented by the Khedive of Egypt to Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM J. COITE.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. There is a gentleman from my State who has a bill on the Calendar, reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs a few days ago, who is employed in the Internal Revenue Department and is under orders to proceed to North Carolina. The bill is a pecuniary bill for his relief, involving some $900. I have the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to call up the bill. The gentleman cannot very well proceed on his trip to the South until this bill is passed. It has passed the House of Representatives and has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask consent of the Senate to take it up. It is House bill No. 3658.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of William J. Coite was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William J. Coite, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy, of $953.33, being the amount falsely returned by the clerk of Coite, when he was unable, through sickness, to supervise his final accounts.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. The chairman of the committee is now here and can state the case if any Senator desires.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator state what the bill is about?

Mr. CRAGIN. The Committee on Naval Affairs reported this bill back unanimously and adopted the House report. It is a House bill. This gentleman was a paymaster in the Navy during the war, and while he was sick with yellow fever his clerk made a false return to the Department by which he was involved in the sum of about $900. He asks that in the settlement of his accounts he may be allowed that amount. It was clearly no fault of his. If there was any fault whatever, it was in his clerk in robbing him of that amount.

Mr. CAMERON. I think that bill ought not to pass. The paymaster ought to be responsible for his clerk. He gets a high salary because he has to incur responsibility.

Mr. CRAGIN. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection to hearing the report, but I cannot vote for a bill of that kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. I only state to the Senate that other committees have felt themselves bound in very hard cases to report against such bills. I know the Committee on Finance have never reported a bill to make good a loss by a deputy except in the case of Spinner and the case of Hillhouse, and then we hesitated a long time before we did it in those cases.

Mr. CRAGIN. Since I have been in the Senate I presume there have been a dozen cases similar to this which have passed without opposition, cases where paymasters have lost money by fire or by other unavoidable accidents, or where they were robbed by their clerks. In one instance a paymaster in the Army, I remember, was robbed by his clerk at a hotel in this city of a large amount of money, without any fault of his, and he was made whole or not held responsible.

Mr. SCOTT. The most recent case which I recollect involving this principle was reported from the Committee on Claims, the case of a paymaster named Underwood, if I recollect aright, who claimed to be relieved from liability for money of which he was robbed in the city of Baltimore. The Committee on Claims is frequently called upon to adjudicate upon claims of this character, and unless the circumstances are such as to take them out of the general rule we have been disposed to hold all parties intrusted with the custody of public money responsible for acts of their clerks and employes. I do not know what the circumstances are in this case that are relied on to take it out of the operation of that general rule. The general rule is certainly a wholesome one.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, it is undoubtedly true that there are precedents both ways in cases of embezzlement by clerks or deputies. In this particular instance, however, the claimant was a very faithful officer during the war, and while lying sick with the yellow fever and therefore incapable of exercising the supervision over his clerk which he otherwise might have been able to exercise he was robbed by that clerk by a falsification of accounts, so that the amount which this bill allows him is charged against him by the Government. This was obviously without any fault of his own, he being stricken down by disease while in the discharge of his duty and incapable, as I have said, from this disease of exercising supervision over his clerk. It certainly seems to me that as the precedents are both ways, the particular circumstances of this case ought fairly to induce the Senate to concur in the action of the House.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, certainly we all feel a sympathy for that public officer who, stricken by disease, incapable of attending to his business, falls a victim to a designing clerk. He is to be pitied; but the Government is to be pitied much more that undertakes here to interpose between the officer and his bond. When it is established, as it is about to be established in this Government, that in all cases like this, whenever parties upon ex parte statements can make out a case in which hardship results, the Government is to relieve them from their bond. I say that the Government is much more to be pitied than that individual, for the reason that the Government represents the masses, the great body of the people, and the individual can suffer but for himself.

If you, however, establish the precedent here, why not extend the rule to an indorser upon the bond of an officer, who, believing that that officer was honest, that he was full of integrity, that he would not betray his trust, became his surety, and the poor indorser after awhile finds that his trust has been betrayed, that the officer has squandered his funds, and he is left to foot the bill. The indorser may himself have died; his widow and orphan children may come here asking Congress to relieve them from the penalties incurred by reason of their husband and father indorsing the bond of a faithless public officer. Here is a case that would excite the pity of Congress; but I ask whether the representatives of the Government have the right to interpose between the officer and his bond?

If the case that the honorable Senator from Connecticut recites is sufficient to incite the movement of this Senate in behalf of this individual, then I say give it out to all the world that if a custodian of the public funds is going upon his way through the country and he falls sick, being taken with an attack of fever, his brain becomes confused, his money is at the service of those who represent him, and he is robbed of his treasure, Congress will on his appeal relieve him from the liability of his bond. Who can resist such an appeal after the precedent that this will establish?

I undertake to say that the office-holders of this country, holding as they do the money of the public in their hands, can by conspiracy under this rule bankrupt the country. It is better that individuals should suffer; it is better that we should pass by these isolated cases of hardship; it is better that ruin should cluster around the household of a single individual, than to establish a precedent like this, a precedent that threatens to bankrupt the nation. When a public officer undertakes the discharge of a public duty, it is in consideration of receiving a certain compensation. He is paid for his risk; he takes the risk; under the forms of law he executes his bond; and if he fails to comply with the conditions of that bond, when the courts of the country refuse to grant him relief, I say as a Senator on this floor, "Give me my bond." Shylock-like, in this case I would call for the bond. The courts of the country grant relief in every case where relief ought to be granted. The legislative power of this country is not the court to pass upon questions of this character. Let an officeholder who claims relief from the responsibility of his bond go to the courts of the country, and if there is no relief there let him make up his mind that for the good of the State it is necessary that he should suffer.

Why, sir, where will you stop the rule? Once establish the precedent that relief is to be granted and there is no checking, there is no stopping the rule. There is a frontier in which and on which justice fades from view and a question of doubt is raised; we get upon the confines of doubt; and when we reach that Castle Doubtful, then in our sympathies we are disposed to give the doubt in favor of the poor man who has been robbed of his treasure or of the treasure of the nation. The precedent is dangerous.

I have been astonished since I have been here at the bills that have been passed for the relief of officers of this character. It lies, I repeat, in the power of an officer holding in custody the funds of this nation, by conspiracy to have men robbed, to have his funds burned up in a conflagration, to fall sick by the wayside and be robbed in the time of his incapacity to attend to his business, or to fall into the hands of a designing clerk; and a gracious government comes up and makes amends and says "we will sustain the loss."

I shall vote against this bill and I shall vote against every bill of this character. I consider that it is my duty here as a representative to demand the conditions of the bond; and wherever the conditions and penalties of the bond are sought to be avoided, to refer my constituent to the courts of the country, and if no relief is to be had there then he is without relief.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, this question does not arise on a bond nor does it affect the rights of sureties. The question is whether this officer finding unexpectedly charged in his account, shall be debited with these two items amounting to $953.33, or whether he shall be relieved.

Cash paid officers and crew in specie..... $483 75
Prize-money paid to E. Eldredge, engineer..... 469 58

I am well aware of the dangerous class of bills to which this belongs; I am well aware of the refusal by committees, the Judiciary Committee among others, to relieve in cases resembling this in general description; and yet I think it right to call the attention of the Senate to a fact which seems to exist in this case and which I am inclined to think goes far to distinguish it from all the ordinary cases of this kind. The fact to which I refer is this: these items were falsely put into the account by a clerk, and that clerk was not a bonded officer, he was not responsible; and, so far, I am aware it is the ordinary case; but now I come to the distinction: The report of the House committee states that this clerk was not selected by Mr. Coite at all, but in the language of the report:

Your committee would state that the claimant was furnished with a clerk, Henry S. Beedle, detailed from the enlisted men on the boat on which he did service.

Thus we find, as in another case to which the Senator from Ohio referred, that the officer in misfortune has suffered through the delinquency of one in no moral sense an agent of his, but one selected by external authority to act in this capacity. There is another fact stated in this report which strengthens this point, which is that the making up of the account in which this falsehood occurs by this clerk was not only during the absence of Mr. Coite and his sickness, but was an act done under the order of the Treasury Department. Let me read:

This last act of the clerk was performed when Coite was confined to his bed by sickness, caused by a relapse from the yellow fever, which he had while on duty. And it was done in obedience to an order from the Treasury Department.

I express no opinion upon this, but I think it right to call the attention of the Senate to it, because it may be the judgment of the Senate that a tangible distinction does arise from the fact that in place of this clerk being an agent selected as a sheriff or marshal selects his deputies, as a collector of internal revenue selects his deputies, for whom therefore for reasons of good sense he ought to be responsible, this man seems to have been without intervention of Mr. Coite detailed from the enlisted men to act as clerk, and then he seems to have performed this fraudulent and unfortunate act not by the direction of the claimant who now seeks relief, but by an order proceeding from an authority above him. If there is a distinction to be found in the case favorable to it, I think it must be in these respects.

Mr. ALCORN. I did not state in what I said that this was a case in which securities were involved. I did not understand that there were securities.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not understand the Senator to say so; but my own understanding, to begin with, was that it was such a case, and I made the statement I did in order to describe it properly.

Mr. ALCORN. It belongs to a class of cases which I was illustrating. The statement of the Senator is based upon the report, which I have not read, but I heard him read it, I think, with sufficient distinctness to understand the point he makes. If the point which the honorable Senator makes in this case is good, it is good in a court of equity, and in a court of justice this party can be relieved. When the Government sues him upon his bond, he sets up in his answer that the Treasury Department, whose orders he was required to obey, detailed, without his authority and without his consent, a soldier from the line, and that the money was placed by the authority of that Department, under his order; and therefore he asks to be relieved. A court of equity is the place for him to go to in order to present this case. If he yielded when he should not have yielded the custody of the funds to one who was not authorized to receive them, then he is responsible, for he failed in the discharge of his duty. He was responsible upon his bond, and it was for him to see to it that no one took custody of the funds save and except one who was responsible to him or to the Government. But now it appears that under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury a soldier was detailed and placed in custody of these funds without the consent of the petitioner. If that be true, then I say a court of equity will relieve him from liability. Let him go there and test the facts of this case where both sides of the question will be heard and where the court will scrutinize and analyze the testimony and make application of the law to the case.

This belongs to that class of cases which I mentioned awhile ago, and I oppose the bill on that ground. I have no doubt of the good faith, of the honesty, of the integrity of the petitioner here; but it is because he is just that character of man, it is because there is no question as to him, I would here oppose this bill. The amount is small; I am glad it is so, and I the more heartily oppose it on that account.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.
Mr. ALCORN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Morton, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Spencer, Stockton, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Windom—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Cameron, Dennis, Gilbert, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Pratt, Sherman, West, and Wright—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boggs, Brownlow, Carpenter, Conover, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Harvey, Johnston, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Scott, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, and Thurman—30.

So the bill was passed.

HYGEIA HOTEL AT FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. CAMERON. Before the Senate proceeds with the regular call of committees for business this morning, I ask to be allowed to bring up a bill which I reported the other day, and which was postponed by an objection from the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] which he has withdrawn. I urge it because it is to erect a building at Fortress Monroe, which must be commenced at once to be used during the coming season. It is the bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia. There is no opposition to it.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to give me his attention for a moment. Under the rule the hour this morning belongs to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. On the Calendar are from that committee two bills, one of them correcting errors in the Revised Statutes. That bill should pass so as to be bound up with the statutes which are to be bound at once. I do not think it will take any time; and therefore, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me, I will call up this bill and the other, which merely relates to the distribution of the statutes, as I am urged daily by the committee of the other House to get action upon them, and there is really a serious objection to delay. I do not believe it ought to take five minutes to pass both bills.

Mr. CAMERON. If the Senator had not interposed his objection, we should have been through with this bill. It was up the other day, and there was not a word said against it except an objection on the part of the Senator from Vermont, which has been withdrawn. It has only to go through the form of reading, and it is necessary, in order to be useful this year, that the bill should be passed at once.

Mr. CONKLING. I will not stand in the way of the Senator; but if his bill takes any time, I hope he will allow me to proceed.

Mr. CAMERON. Thank you, sir.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to grant permission to Samuel M. Shoemaker, owner of the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, to enlarge the hotel in such a manner as may be compatible with the interests of the United States, upon the terms and conditions set forth in joint resolution of the second session of the Fortieth Congress, House of Representatives, No. 266.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand the motion to be to take up the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was asked and granted.

Mr. BAYARD. If the bill be before the Senate, I ask the honorable Senator who has it in charge to give some explanation to the Senate as to the extent of this invasion of public property for private benefit. The truth is that here is a very questionable exercise of power by Congress in delegating to the Secretary of War or any other member of the Cabinet discretion as to what portion of Government property is to be relinquished for individual benefit. It seems clear to me that we have no right to delegate a power which rests in our own discretion. A discretionary power, under general principles, cannot be delegated, and in this case it occurs to me that we ought to have a defined statement of the interest which the Government proposes to relinquish; and if it shall be certified to our satisfaction that the relinquishment is favorable to the Government, then I have no objection to join in doing what is reasonable or just or accommodating to a citizen, provided there is no loss to the public. But I am very clear that we ought not to delegate, and I am very clear that we have not the power to delegate, such a discretion to any executive officer. If this property which is to be affected belongs to the people of the United States, and if it is to be taken from them for the use of any individual, it ought to be done by a defined act of Congress for which we shall be responsible, or at least responsible to the extent of our share in the Government. I do not consider that this is within a safe principle, and I submit to my friend from Pennsylvania that it would be well that the extent of this proposed lease or proposed grant for individual private use of land which belongs to the people of the United States should be defined; and we should know precisely the extent of our release of the public right before we acquiesce in it. I think the bill should take that shape.

Now, Mr. President, this is entirely analogous in principle to the common action of almost all the committees of this body; I speak of two upon which I am assigned for duty, the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Private Land Claims, and I believe the Committee on Claims also follow the rule, that they do not grant relief which is to be at public cost to any man unless the measure of that relief is defined and restricted by the bill proposed. This is not for money, but it is for the use of public property, which is the equivalent of money, and therefore I think that the bill proposed by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania—I suggest to him that he should so modify it—should contain a definition and restriction of the amount of public right which is to be granted to this individual, as proposed by the Senator, and that measure should be defined by Congress and not be defined by a member of the executive department.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, the principles enunciated by the Senator from Delaware are certainly correct; and if he had been here the other day when the report was read, he would have found that the interests of the Government were perfectly cared for. The case is simply this: Fortress Monroe is one of the most important fortifications belonging to this country. There is always a large garrison there, and there is always a great number of ships belonging to the United States in the vicinity. There is also an artillery school there. All of these carry to Fortress Monroe very often a number of persons who can get no accommodations while there unless some individual is authorized to put up a building for their accommodation. Mr. Shoemaker, the owner of the building, was authorized several years ago by the Government of the United States to put up a hotel. Since then the number of visitors to the place has very much increased, and the buildings are not sufficient for the persons who go there.

I did not suppose there would be any objection to the bill, and I pledged myself that it should not occupy time. I will only say further that the bill is perfectly guarded; the buildings will be put up under the direction of the Secretary of War, because he is the proper person to see that they are well done, and they will be removed whenever the Government of the United States thinks proper to say they are not needed there. It is an accommodation to the United States Government and a great accommodation to the public who go there, and especially it is going to be a very great accommodation to the people of the South who go to the sea-shore to protect themselves from the severe heats of the summer.

I trust there will be no objection to the bill. I am sure that my friend the Senator from Delaware, having laid down his doctrine and put it in a condition to be printed, will be satisfied, and we can all vote for the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I was not in the Senate when this bill was taken up, and do not know what its provisions are. I should like to have it read. I understand it is a short bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I think that bill ought to be amended by a provision, if it is not already substantially contained in the bill, that any license granted by the Secretary of War shall at all times be subject to revocation without the payment of any damages by the United States; and I move a proviso to that effect.

Mr. CAMERON. I will accept that, although it has been guarded before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that this bill already contains a provision that this may be done upon the terms and conditions set forth in the joint resolution of the second session of the Fortieth Congress, House of Representatives, No. 266. I looked at that joint resolution the other day, and it provides as one of the terms, which are here referred to, that whenever the United States want to use the land or require the buildings to be removed, it shall be done without any claim whatever of the proprietor or any allowance to him, so that the amendment is scarcely necessary.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator is quite sure that is in, there is no necessity for the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am quite sure; but I will look again.

Mr. THURMAN. I was not aware what were the provisions of that resolution. I have no objection to their enlarging that hotel. I should rather they would do it than not; but that provision ought to be in the bill if it is not already in.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of Mr. Shoemaker, which will show the conditions on which the bill is based.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE HYGEIA HOTEL,
Old Point Comfort, Va., November 12, 1874.

GENERAL: Having become the purchaser of the Hygeia Hotel, situated on the United States Government lands at Fort Monroe, Virginia, sold by special commissioners appointed by the circuit court of Elizabeth City County on the 9th day of April 1874, and being desirous of making some improvements in the said hotel, I respectfully ask permission to tear down the old dilapidated building now standing on the lot marked a, b, c, and d, on diagram and ground-plan herewith of the premises, on the north side of the two-story portion of the main building, and erect in their place a two-story frame tin-roof building, commencing at the northwest corner of the two-story portion of the present main building, thence running northward 56 feet 3 inches by 22 feet, thence eastward about 130 by 22 feet, as indicated on sketch by red dotted lines; also an ice-house about 30 by 30 feet. I also ask permission to occupy more of the United States Government lands on the east side of the present lot, commencing at the northeast corner, running eastward 40 feet, thence southward on a line parallel with the present lot to the water's edge, as shown by dotted red lines on sketch, on which I ask permission to erect a one-story frame building to be used as a bowling-alley.

Hoping this may meet with your most favorable consideration, I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. M. SHOEMAKER,
Owner of the Hygeia Property.

Brigadier General A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Chief of Engineers United States Army, War Department, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CAMERON. Now, I ask—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. CAMERON. Let us take the vote, then, on this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move this amendment to correct the error in the number of the reference to the authority. The House bill reads, "Numbered 266." On looking at the statute we find that the resolution is numbered "46," which contains all the proper limitations. I move to amend by striking out "266" and inserting "46," and then the bill will be right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below.

The bill (H. R. No. 3750) for the relief of E. Boyd Pendleton—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 2385) for the relief of John Aldredge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 2633) for the relief of Duncan Marr, a loyal citizen of Montgomery County, Tennessee—to the Committee on Claims.

DISTRIBUTION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President—

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to appeal to the honorable Senator from Maine. Inasmuch as I gave way to other Senators the whole of the hour that belonged to the committee which I represent, I appeal to the honorable Senator to allow me to take up the two bills of that committee which I think will occupy but a few minutes, to the end that I may retrieve the error that I have committed in allowing the hour to be consumed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it will be satisfactory to the Senate, I have no objection that this unfinished business shall be passed over informally, retaining my place on the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The District bill will be passed over informally.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for the consideration of the bills to which I have referred.

The bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of State to furnish for the use of the Senate one thousand copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for the use of the House of Representatives three thousand copies of the same, to be distributed to the members of the present Congress. It also authorizes the Secretary of State to make arrangement with persons engaged in the business of selling books to keep on sale the Revised Statutes of the United States; but in any such arrangement it shall be provided that the same be sold at the Government price to all purchasers; and the Secretary may allow to any such person keeping the Revised Statutes for sale such part of the 10 per cent. above the actual cost as he may deem just and reasonable.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the honorable Senator who reported the bill whether the indexes for these statutes have been prepared?

Mr. CONKLING. They have been, as I understand, prepared under the direction given by the previous statute. The statutes are about to be printed and bound complete with the index; and it is deemed quite important to have, not this bill but the other which corrects errata in the laws passed at once, to the end that it may be published and bound with the statutes, the index being a part of the statutes, as I understand.

Mr. BAYARD. I can understand the entire inefficiency of the edition without the index; but it also occurred to me to ask whether the errors which have been discovered in the Revised Statutes, or to speak more correctly, the discrepancies between the laws which were intended to be revised and codified and the laws which were published as the result of the codification, have been corrected in this present publication. The Senator is aware of the very trenchant criticism which has been bestowed, and in many cases most justly, upon the revised code as presented. Alterations which were neither authorized nor intended by Congress have appeared in the new code. Changes of duties upon imports, affecting to a very large extent important interests of the country, have appeared there, and have sub silentio been incorporated into law by the adoption of these Revised Statutes. The honorable Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] the other day drew the attention of the Senate to an exceedingly grave change in the naturalization laws, by which the law of the country upon that most important subject was importantly changed.

I wish to know whether the Revised Statutes which, either through error or from other cause have been made to differ from the authorized law of the land, have now been reduced to conformity with that law. The object of the codification and revision of the law was simply to place in compendious shape the laws as they stood with all the repeals express and implied appearing upon the face of the statute. The result of the codification and revision was to change materially the statutes of the United States on important subjects, and I desire to know whether in the publication now to be authorized by Congress the law as it was and as it was intended to be promulgated by Congress is to appear, or whether the alterations which were made without authority by the revisers of the laws are to take the place of what was the public law of the land. Some amendments have been proposed. I am not aware of what is the present condition of the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from California. He pointed out a very important change in the naturalization laws, and I have seen and heard produced statements showing important alterations in the tariff laws.

This ought not to be repeated twice. If we intend to amend the law, let us say so. If we intend merely to restate it in its former vigor, let us say so; but do not, under the name of revising and codifying the law, change your law without debate and without notice to the country. What I have said is intended to draw attention to the fact, in order that the proposed publication may restrain the changes thus made, as I believe, without the intention of Congress, and certainly without the authority of Congress. I desire to know from some one connected with the matter whether the present publication will contain the laws as they were intended by Congress or the laws as they have been altered without authority by the revisers.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to inquire whether it is the intention to incorporate in the revised statutes the corrections made at the present session, so that the corrections shall be contained in the same volume.

Mr. CONKLING. That is exactly what we are driving at, although the bill now pending does not relate to that. This debate is springing up now on the first of these bills.

Mr. THURMAN. Is that contemplated?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly it is. The pending bill simply provides for the distribution of the statutes and putting them on sale. The bill which will follow this in a moment, is one to which these questions more properly apply. The very purpose of the committee of the other House in urging me to secure the passage of these two bills, is that they may go forth to the end that everybody may have the whole law before him.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand the Senator from California offered an amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. That is provided for the bill on page 7:

Section 2916 is amended by inserting in the first line, after the word "alien," the words "being free white persons, and to aliens."

On referring to the original volume I find that that word "alien" should be in the plural. There is no word "alien" in the section, and I am afraid this clause here may not be operative.

Mr. CONKLING. The reply the Senator from California makes enables me now for the first time to understand exactly the Senator from Delaware. His inquiry relates to the amendments which have been offered in one or the other House of Congress.

Mr. BAYARD. They relate to alterations of the statutes.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I apprehend the Senator, and if he will pardon me, I wish to answer him. The very thing on which the committee which originated this bill has been laboring is that of which the Senator now inquires; and the next bill consisting of errata is the assembling together of all those errors to which he refers as far as they have been able to discover them, so that the very purpose of the process in which we are engaged is to provide for such alterations as the Senator from Delaware refers to.

Mr. THURMAN. It is quite obvious from what has just fallen from the Senator from New York that the proper place to consider the suggestions that have been made in regard to any errors which have occurred or any alterations that have been made in the Revised Statutes will be on the next bill, and not on this.

Mr. CONKLING. Not on this bill, but the next.

Mr. THURMAN. This bill provides simply for distribution.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senator to the provisions of the existing bill. It provides for furnishing to the Senate of the United States one thousand copies and to the House of Representatives three thousand copies for distribution to the members of the present Congress. I do not understand that any part of these four thousand volumes are to be distributed to the committees of either House or to the library of either House. They all go to the members. Some other provision is made, I suppose, or exists already in law, for providing the various committees of the Senate and of the House and the Senate library and the House library—

Mr. CONKLING. And the Departments.

Mr. THURMAN. And the Departments with the proper volumes. Then this is simply for distributing to the members of the Senate and the members of the House four thousand copies of these statutes. For what purpose? Certainly not that each one of them may retain his quota, for he is to make some distribution of them.

In the first place, here is a little mathematical difficulty in respect to the Senate. The Senate, when full, consists of seventy-four members. A thousand copies would give each member thirteen and leave a surplus of thirty-eight, so that what is to be done with these thirty-eight copies is a matter not provided for by the bill, unless you amend it so as to give some Senators fourteen and others only thirteen copies. That is a little matter to which I first call attention. The same difficulty exists, although the surplus would not be so great, in the distribution to the members of the House. I do not know whether it ought to be precisely in that form, whether or not the arithmetic ought to be right.

What is a more material matter; why give to each Senator thirteen copies of these statutes? To distribute around? If they are to be distributed, let the Departments distribute them. We have no franking privilege. It is very true that any lawyer would be very glad that we should send him a copy and pay the express charges; any library in any of our States would be very glad if we did the same thing; but why not leave the distribution of these statutes to the Department of State? Why give thirteen copies to each Senator and ten to each member of the House? What good can come of that, but to give us annoyance and trouble? It seems to me that two copies should be sent to each Senator and two copies to each Representative and Delegate.

Mr. CONKLING. What for, if I may inquire of the Senator? Why should two copies be sent to each member?

Mr. THURMAN. Because he may need one copy here and he may need one copy at his home. If he discharges his duty he will need two copies.

Mr. CONKLING. Why should he not buy them?

Mr. THURMAN. Why should he not buy the stationery with which he writes bills, as to that matter? The Senator asks why we should not buy them when he proposes to give each one of us thirteen copies. Why give us any at all?

Mr. CONKLING. That is the question which I press on the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. I think all the States give to their lawgivers copies of the laws. I know we do in the State of Ohio, and always have done so.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I am shocked at his profuseness and prodigality, objecting to a Senator having thirteen copies to send to public libraries and State institutions and the like; and yet actually proposing out loud, audibly, here in the Senate, to take two copies and keep them himself in order that he may have one here and one at home. There is a reckless regard-lessness of expense about that latter suggestion of the Senator, in the presence of which I take my seat utterly confounded. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator should not have left his seat unless his wit was more pungent than it is this morning. [Laughter.] I advise him to keep his seat until it is brightened up a little. The Senator knows very well that a sufficient number of these laws contributed to the members of the House and of the Senate are intended for their own use in order that they may discharge their public duties. That is all right; and the more they study the laws the better it will be for the country. I am in favor of giving them all the facility they can have for studying the law.

Mr. CONKLING. In that view, I am willing the Senator should have two copies. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly; and the truth about it is, if the Senator from New York supports some measures that he has supported in times past, he ought to have four copies; and even then I fear he would not know what the law is. [Laughter.]

But, sir, I am quite serious about this matter. Why should this distribution be made to members of the House and members of the Senate? That they may send off to some favored persons or some favored institutions eleven or twelve copies of these laws. There is no reason for it that I can see at all. You have laws already which provide that copies of all laws of the United States shall be furnished to the various State libraries. You have a law already in force, I believe, under which each Senator can designate certain institutions of learning to which documents published—and I believe it includes the laws, perhaps it is not specific, certainly documents—may be sent. That we have already; that we have acted upon; but whether we do this or not, let the Department of State, which has the custody of the laws, distribute these laws; but I do not see any reason for sending this number of copies to the members of the two Houses.

Mr. CONKLING. This matter is not large enough I think to detain the Senate long, but perhaps I may be pardoned for stating very briefly the reasons moving those who prepared this bill, so far as I know. In the first place, the honorable Senator says that a thousand, in place of some fractional number, is named in the bill, and that when you divide a thousand by the number of Senators here, when the Senate is full, which the Senate is not now, you have some fraction left over. I do not doubt that. The Senator says it, and I know how eminent he is as a mathematician; but I know also that it is not customary in fixing the number of documents to be printed to fix a fractional number. On the contrary in unnumbered cases a thousand has been stated in the order, and this calculation of the Senator from Ohio, true as it may be, is rather belated, if it is to reform the custom of the Senate, because for years, indeed from time immemorial, the practice has been to take a round number without reference to a number into which the whole Senate as a divisor would go so many times and leave no fraction over.

As to the motive and reason for giving for distribution to the members of the two Houses some copies of these Revised Statutes, the Senate will remember that the publication, the printing, of this work is under special provisions which do not contain the arrangement to which the Senator has referred under which copies of documents in the ordinary form go to State libraries, institutions of learning, and elsewhere. This publication stands upon a footing of its own. It brings in, in new form, in new terms, with new pages to be cited, the great body of laws. It will be some time before, through the ordinary channels, this volume will find itself upon the shelves of lawyers or within reach of courts. Therefore it has been deemed wise that every Senator may be able to send to the law library of his State, to send to such places of deposit as he may think will conserve the convenience of the greatest number, a few copies of this body of laws in advance; and I suppose there was the less hesitation in so providing because of this fact: Under the statute as it stands, providing for this work, the Secretary of State is to cause to be printed a certain number of copies. The composition taking place, the arrangements being made for printing and binding, the added cost of these four thousand copies is to consist wholly in press-work and paper, so that it being much less expensive than it would be to print afresh four thousand copies, the whole question being whether the edition to be printed at all events should be enlarged to four thousand or not, I suppose the House committee which originated this bill felt the less hesitation in answering this public convenience.

That is all, Mr. President, I have to say about that, and I hope the Senate will vote, and let us proceed to the more important bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator from New York whether there is any provision made in this bill to have these corrections made in the text of any future issue? I suppose it is too late to make the corrections in the text of this edition?

Mr. CONKLING. It is stereotyped.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It would be very well to have a provision that they should be made in the text of future editions.

Mr. CONKLING. Quite true; but if my honorable friend will pardon me, under existing laws no future edition is issued. In other words, before a future edition is ushered in there will be further legislation. By that time, it may very well be that changes will take place in these statutes, and other errors may be discovered so that the Senator will see that it would be hardly worth while to amend the bill now and send it back to the House for the purpose of providing for that.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask now that the other bill may be taken up.

ERRORS IN REVISED STATUTES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. On line 161, page 7, I move to strike out the word "alien" and insert "aliens." I find that this is not an error in the print but is in the engrossed copy that comes from the House. I make this motion from the fact that there is no word "alien" in the line referred to. The word is "aliens," in the plural; and I do not desire that there should be any chance of error.

I am sorry to have to move an amendment which will, if adopted, send the bill back to the House of Representatives simply to add an "s," but the objection to the bill as it stands is as strong as if it were some other word which was not in the section, and therefore I ask that the word "alien" may be made "aliens."

Mr. CONKLING. If the words which conclude line 161 and the only word in line 162 are carried into the law as it stands now, does the Senator doubt what the effect of these words will be?

Mr. SARGENT. I think it raises a doubt. As a judge I would decide that where the law uses the word "alien" it should be by proper intentment "aliens;" but still I think there is a doubt about it, and it is a question of so grave importance to my people that I do not want to leave a doubt.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me put my question in another form. If this section be enacted as it stands, these words must certainly go into the statute somewhere. Can there be a doubt where they would go?

Mr. SARGENT. I think so, because there is no word "alien" which they are to follow, in the line mentioned. I will read the line as it stands:

The provisions of this title shall apply to aliens of African nativity and to persons of African descent.

It should read:

The provisions of this title shall apply to aliens being free white persons, and to aliens of African nativity, and to persons of African descent.

The only reason for the amendment is that these new words are to come in after a word which is not to be discovered in the line in which they are to be placed. I do not say that a fair-minded judge, a person of acumen, who was familiar with the intention of Congress by looking at our debates, might not say that this should be construed as if the word "alien" were plural; but I do say that at first glance perhaps it would be held by a narrow-minded judge after examination that on construction the two statutes were incompatible and that this did not amount to an amendment.

Mr. HAGER. I notice that in the statute the word is "aliens," in the plural. If it were "aliens" in this bill, it would conform to the statute. Whether it be necessary to correct it or not, it occurred to me that the courts would put that interpretation upon it. No doubt they would in this case construe the word "alien" to be "aliens," inasmuch as the word does not occur in the line except once, and then in the plural, and here it is in the singular. The courts would, I think, construe that word in the singular as if it were in the plural. Therefore I hardly think it is necessary to send this bill back to the House of Representatives, although I agree with my colleague that it is a very important amendment to the existing law. The intention is to restore the law as it was anterior to this revision. This bill, I think, will effect that purpose in the form in which it is by the interpretation of the courts. I have no doubt that the courts would so construe it; and I suggest whether it be absolutely necessary under the circumstances to send the bill back to the other House.

Mr. CONKLING. This ought not to be done unless it be absolutely necessary; and although the engrossed bill does omit the "s," doubtless it was an error in copying. If the amendment is made, of course it sends the bill back to the House; and speed is of the essence of this legislation in order to give it full utility.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from California to allow the bill to pass, and to ask the House to make the correction in the enrolled bill.

Mr. CONKLING. That I think is a good suggestion.

Mr. SARGENT. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. CONKLING. That avoids the necessity of expressing any opinion about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee who reported this bill, and which I found on my table this morning for the first time, whether the object of this bill is simply to correct errors in the Revised Statutes, so as to set the law back precisely to what it was before the Revised Statutes were passed, or whether it goes beyond that and introduces new legislation. My impression on looking at the bill is that it introduces new legislation. I would ask, for instance, whether sections "300 A" and "300 B" in this bill are in the existing law now, or whether they are not new legislation?

Mr. CONKLING. That is not new legislation. It is the existing law.

Mr. THURMAN. Just as it is there? Then why are these sections in this bill? Can the Senator tell me that? Were they dropped out of the Revised Statutes? If that is the case it is well enough to put them back; but how they came to be dropped out I really am at a loss to understand. I have the impression, unless the Senator has carefully examined it, that this is new legislation, and legislation of a very important character. If the Senator has examined the matter, of course I have not a word to say.

Now I want to know of the Senator why section 74 of the Revised Statutes is omitted?

Mr. CONKLING. What is that?

Mr. THURMAN. The thirty-fourth line on the second page of the bill is this:

Section 74 is struck out.

Section 74 is in these words:

The mileage or traveling allowance to the officer or other person executing any precept or summons of either House of Congress shall not exceed ten cents for each mile necessarily and actually traveled in the execution thereof.

Why is that stricken out? There was a provision inserted in an appropriation bill in reference to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and possibly it included the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, fixing a salary of $4,500, and that he should receive no other perquisites, emoluments, or fees whatever.

Mr. CONKLING. That antedated the enactment of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. THURMAN. That may be so, but it was a temporary provision which was placed in that appropriation bill; and that it has been so considered is seen from the fact that the same provision is repeated in an appropriation bill now pending in the House of Representatives or one of those which have already passed at this session. I do not think that that has been considered as a permanent provision of the law; and, if not, then this seventy-fourth section ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the rule in reference to legislative provisions in appropriation bills is that they are just as much legislation as if they were in any other law for all future time, provided they say that hereafter such and such shall be the rule; but where "hereafter" or "thereafter" is omitted, they are then merely temporary provisions, and affect only the appropriation to which they are attached. I understand the fact to be that the Sergeants-at-Arms of the House and Senate do not now receive, and have not since that original provision received, any remuneration in the way of mileage for the service of process. The amount allowed now is the actual necessary expenses of the individual who is sent to execute process, but it has ceased to be a perquisite of the Sergeant-at-Arms. He is not allowed to take any money on account of it. By this section in the Revised Statutes the old system is revived, whereby the pay of the officer could not be limited at all; his drafts on the contingent fund might be very great, especially at a session where there are many investigations, and there would be chances for constructive mileage and for very large perquisites indeed.

It seems to me, therefore, that it is perfectly proper to strike out this section, and let the matter rest on the provision as to actual expenses, which are audited by the auditing committees of each House, and do not go to increase the salary? If the provision is repeated in regard to these mileages in any subsequent appropriation bill it has escaped my attention, and it certainly would be unnecessary, because I know it was intended to make a permanent rule.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from California is entirely right that a provision of a permanent nature in an appropriation bill is as much a permanent law as if enacted in any other bill. That is undoubtedly true; but it does not depend entirely upon the phraseology; it depends upon the whole context of the bill whether or not the provision relates simply to the appropriations contained in that bill and is therefore temporary in its character, or whether it is a permanent law of the land. I have not examined the provision; my attention was called to it by some one, I forget who now, and I have not looked at the law, but I was told that that provision which was inserted in an appropriation bill is inserted again, which led me to suppose that it was of a temporary character or otherwise it would not be inserted in an appropriation bill at the present session. If the committee have examined it and find that it is a permanent provision of the law, then it is all right enough that the seventy-fourth section should be stricken out. I have no knowledge on that subject, and of course must be governed by what the committee have done. If they have carefully examined the subject and know that that is the case, this bill is all right in striking out the seventy-fourth section.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from California withdrawn?

Mr. SARGENT. I propose when the bill shall pass to ask the Senate that in enrolling the bill the letter "s" be added to "alien," and have the same request made in the House, if I may procure some member there to make it, which will obviate the necessity of sending the bill back to the House in the formal method, which causes delay.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I move to amend by striking out the last four lines on page 7. I shall say nothing on the subject-matter of this amendment further than to present the subject to the Senate and ask for the yeas and nays.

By the existing law all persons, without distinction of race, nativity, or color may, with certain qualifications of residence and character, be naturalized. That is the law now. It is proposed by the part of this bill which I move to strike out to limit the capacity of naturalization to persons of white and of African descent, excluding entirely Asiatics who may desire to become naturalized and possess the requisite qualifications. I think that is contrary to the whole tendency of legislation and of government in this country for the last twenty years; and if the revisers of the statutes have produced any change more enlarged and progressive by their revision than the law was before, I would not now, at this stage of the history of our Government, go back to the invidious distinctions which this amendment creates. As I said, holding these convictions strongly, I desire to have the question made fairly to the Senate and taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. SARGENT. If that really presented this question fairly to the Senate, I should have no objection to meeting the Senator on the proposition either in debate or by a vote; but it does not. A change was made in the statutes, not by legislative discretion but by a blunder, a blunder of the most obvious character. It resulted in an accident by which there is an important change in the law. Now, to insist that an accidental change of that kind in the law, without the intelligent assent of either House of Congress, without the idea of any member of either House that this important change was being made in the law, shall stand, on account of that mistake, as the law of the land, is to advance a proposition which is not, as the Senator says, fair, but entirely unfair. If that proposition is true, then we ought to examine every one of these errata from the first to the last line of this bill; and if it shall be found that by similar mistakes and errors the law has been improved, or has been changed so that in the mind of a majority of Congress it is an improvement, we ought to reject it. That is not intelligent legislation. I understand that the provisions of this bill, and we have the guarantee of the committees that the provisions of this bill simply restore the law as Congress intended it should be at the time they passed the Revised Statutes. Let that be done and it is fair. Less than that is unfair. When that is done, if the Senator desires to bring forward a bill which shall enable Asiatics to be naturalized, I shall be prepared to debate that question with him. Before, however, that debate comes I most earnestly hope that that Senator would take a trip to the Pacific States, that he would pass through our towns and villages there, that he would see in some of the back streets of our cities the condition of the population there which is to be brought up in large numbers to our polls. I should like to have him investigate upon the spot. I assure him that if he has these ideas strongly, he will return without them.

I do not care to continue the argument as to the policy of the law pro or con. I simply say that it is unfair and unjust to insist that a mistake shall have the force of legislation. I would not resist the introduction of any intelligent legislation and I would not resist the consideration of any proposition at any time for a change in the laws, however I might vote upon it; but I do say that an error of law, an error in changing the law, which the Senator himself never voted for, which I never voted for, which he never knew until I called his attention myself to the fact that this error had been made, should not be allowed to become the permanent law of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. The amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Connecticut is in my opinion more entirely untenable than the Senator from California says it is. Now I beg the Senator from Connecticut to observe for a moment what we are engaged in. Congress by act directed three commissioners to do a certain thing. It was not legislative; it was not judicial; it was ministerial. It was to daguerreotype in miniature all the laws of the United States exactly as they stood. The duty which these commissioners were directed to discharge, I might compare with the duty of an engraver set, as engravers several times have been, to reproduce in miniature one of the large pictures hanging in the Rotunda. It was the business of the artist and of the commissioners alike to reproduce exactly in all their lineaments the original which they were set to copy, making no change whatever except by reducing the size. That was the beginning of all this. The commissioners having, as they thought, performed their work, another person not called a commissioner, a person employed by the joint committees of the two Houses, was directed to traverse the work, to verify it, to discover if he could any lack of truthful imitation in the reproduction. He did his work. Then the committees of the two Houses traversed again what he and his predecessors had done, and at this point the lead in the work was taken by the committee of the House, and not by the committee of the Senate; and that committee, and afterward the House, devoting many sessions set apart for the consideration of this to the exclusion of all else, went over step by step, for the purpose of verifying the work that had been done.

Despite of this and the attention given also by the committee of the Senate afterward, certain defects yet remain. Time has revealed them. Time, I say again, as I warned the Senate when we acted upon this legislation, will undoubtedly reveal other defects, despite all these repeated processes of correction. One of the defects now revealed is that at which the Senator aims in his amendment. Certain words which stood in the law, which were part of the law, which were operative words, which the commissioners originally and all who followed them, including the two Houses of Congress, were directed to preserve, to reproduce unimpaired—certain such words, it turns out, were dropped.

Now what is the function of this bill? Simply to put them back, simply to correct this deviation from the statute. Therefore it is a great deal more than the Senator from California says, it is more than the case where in a single instance by a single act of legislation the two Houses of Congress inadvertently fell into an error. It is the case where a whole course of legislation required one single thing, to wit, a truthful and absolute reflex of the whole body of law as it stood; and in attempting to do that, all concerned, including the two Houses of Congress, fell into an error. Now we come with this bill, the purpose of which is to correct that error; and what does the honorable Senator from Connecticut propose? To hold up for examination the merits of the original provision; and when we are attempting to verify and correct a purely ministerial proceeding of codifying the laws, the Senator wishes to go into the broad questions of the merits of those laws which we proceeded to codify.

Mr. President, if I were dealing with a man far less acute than the Senator from Connecticut, I need not say to him that the East is not farther from the West than is the one thing from the other of these two. To codify laws is to reproduce them just as they are, good, bad, or indifferent. It is a dishonest codification if it is anything else. To consider the merit, the demerit, the value, the particulars of all existing laws with a view to their change and improvement, is a wholly different thing. I abstain from expressing all opinion, as I begged the honorable Senator from California to do, as we must be economical of time, touching those who should or should not be included in the naturalization laws of the country. I abstain from it because I repeat, and I beg the Senator from Connecticut to listen to me when I repeat—if he thinks I am right to withdraw his amendment for I think logic requires him to do it,—that we are now simply engaged in making a truthful completion of that work in which commissioners, committees, and Congress have been engaged, which has no more to do with the merits or the defects of the laws as they exist than the painting of a portrait truthfully has to do with the beauty or the deformity, the hue or the age of the original from which it is painted. If the portrait is true it is a "counterfeit presentment." If this codification is true and honest, it is a reproduction of the laws as they stand, and not a production of the laws as the Senator from Connecticut thinks they ought to stand and as he is abundantly able to make them stand when we are considering a bill appropriate for that purpose.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, it is obvious, after what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from California and the Senator from New York, that the real question after all cannot be taken upon the amendment which I have proposed. That question would be whether the Senate would deliberately exclude from the operation of the naturalization laws all Asiatics, a third of the human race or more. But as it is presented, Senators obviously are about to vote upon the considerations set forth in the remarks just made by the Senator from New York without regard to their judgment upon the question on which I would like to have an expression of the views of the Senate; and therefore as it is impossible to obtain on the proposition which I have made such an expression upon the real subject-matter of my proposition as I desire, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask permission to have the word "aliens," in line 161, page 5, of this bill, inserted in the enrollment instead of "alien."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that.

Mr. SARGENT subsequently offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to correct a verbal error in the bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States, by adding in the enrolled bill an "s" to the word "alien," line 11, page 6, of the engrossed bill.

Mr. SARGENT. That is the same request that was made verbally and assented to by the Senate a few moments ago, and I want the request made to the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3737) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan;

A bill (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876;

A bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4685) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use his discretion in the selection of material for the construction of a public building at Atlanta, Georgia.

NATHANIEL P. HARBEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GORDON. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to have the bill (S. No. 522) for the relief of Nathaniel P. Harben, of Georgia, acted on. The Committee on Claims reported the bill and have since reported an amendment, which I hold in my hand, and I think it will lead to no discussion whatever. The amendment is to refer the case to the claims commission.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no objection to that with this exception: I think it is hardly fair, as there are a number of cases involving questions of similar character to that which the Senate has refused heretofore to give time to consider, that one single case should be selected, and undoubtedly this case if its nature were stated would lead to some debate.

Mr. GORDON. Very well, I will not press the request now.

Mr. SCOTT. I will join with the Senator from Georgia and others at any time in asking sufficient time from the Senate to consider all these bills, and I shall urge it.

Mr. GORDON. I withdraw my application for the present.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DENNIS presented a petition of conductors and street-car drivers of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a law defining the number of hours that shall constitute a day's labor for street-car employes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON. I present the petition of John Withers, of Texas, praying the removal of his political disabilities. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill is already before that committee, and I ask that this petition be attached to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE presented the petition of P. U. Murphy, of Mobile, Alabama, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was not able to be present in the Senate this morning when reports were called for. I ask consent now to be allowed to submit two or three reports from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive the reports, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] instructing that committee to inquire into the expediency of repealing the act of June 1, 1870, authorizing subsidies to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to report the same with a substitute. The substitute merely is a resolution directing the committee to inquire into the law. This resolution was not adopted instructing us to make an inquiry. It was sent to us. We think that the proper form is such as I submit. I ask its present consideration. There will be no debate about it, I suppose.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire and report whether the United States or any Department of the Government is legally bound to now carry into effect any contract made pursuant to the act of June 1, 1872, respecting additional mail service between San Francisco, China, and Japan.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4530) further supplemental to the various acts prescribing the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections, to report the same back, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who have charge of subjects of that character.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1995) to amend an act approved June 18, 1838, entitled "An act to require the judge of the district courts of East and West Tennessee to hold a court at Jackson, in said State," reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PEASE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hiram W. Love, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1302) to refer the claim of Hiram W. Love, of the State of Iowa, to the Court of Claims.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A bill (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876.

The bill (H. R. No. 3737) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 4685) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use his discretion in the selection of material for the construction of a public building at Atlanta, Georgia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan.) It is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I rise to say little or nothing in regard to that proposition, although it seems to me eminently fit that it should be made. It is simply, as I understand, to give time for a certain class of persons who hold a certain class of securities to present them. I do not understand that it is anything more than that. But I wish to make a few observations in the nature of an appeal to the Senate upon this bill. We have now been some three days upon the bill. Certain objections have been made to the bill. Those have been fully considered by the Senate, and, so far as I know at the present time, all objections to this bill have been overruled by the Senate. It stands, therefore, in that position to-day. All the objections of a fundamental character to this bill which have been made on the one hand or the other have been considered and overruled by the Senate. Now, it is agreed that something must be done; some bill must be passed at this session. This is more likely to accomplish results than anything else which it is probable we can get. If these objections are not repeated again and no disposition is made to prolong the discussion, this bill may receive the consideration of the Senate, and pass from it in the next few hours at furthest. I submit, therefore, whether it is not fair on the whole that it should have that consideration at the present time, and that what has been acted upon should not be renewed again.

I am emboldened somewhat to make this appeal to the Senate from this consideration: The time of this session is fast running out. Fifteen days, including the present, are all that are left to us—days of work in this session—and of the twelve appropriation bills three only have been considered and passed by Congress. Nine of these bills yet remain to be considered by the Senate in these fifteen days—a shorter period than I have ever known so many bills to be crowded upon the consideration of the Senate.

One word more on this subject. I think I have a right to appeal to the Senate to vote upon this bill; vote upon its merits, and then if it is voted down, very well. This bill has devolved a great deal of labor, not a welcome labor, not labor that has been sought by this committee; but it has devoted a great deal of time to it. If it turns out to be inadequate it can easily be corrected of course; but as some legislation must take place, it seems to me that the best thing the Senate can do is to accept the bill in its present condition, repeating what I said before, as all the fundamental objections to it have been considered and overruled by the Senate.

Now I wish to appeal to my honorable friend from Indiana who sits near me [Mr. MORTON] who yesterday felt that he would be constrained to move the consideration of a subject that is committed to his charge. I can understand that my honorable friend feels in that way; but I appeal to him not to attempt that as against this bill. If he should move to lay this bill on the table and the motion should succeed, then we are to have this whole subject in some other shape and at a time when it will be in my judgment impossible for us to give it consideration. What is not done this week in the way of general legislation must yield to the imperative and absolute necessities of the appropriation bills which will be upon you in the next fifteen days. As my honorable friend gave notice on a former occasion that at the close of the bill he would proceed with his matter, he will have general consent doubtless to take it up; but now I hope that he will not feel constrained by anything that was said yesterday to interrupt the progress of this bill. Let us consider it to-day to the end; and I hope we shall be in a condition to conclude it before the Senate adjourns to-day. I wish to add one other thing; and that is, that I will ask the Senate to continue its session until this bill is closed.

Mr. MORTON. I ask the Senator whether he intends to pursue the bill after to-day?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; I intend to ask the Senate to continue the session of to-day until this bill is disposed of. I have no expectation or desire nor do I believe that the circumstances of the business of the Senate and of the country will admit the pressing of it one moment after to-day. With these observations I hope that we shall have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. MORTON. I gave notice last night, feeling that it was my duty to do so, that this morning I would make a motion to lay this bill on the table with a view to proceed to the consideration of the resolution in regard to the Senator-elect from Louisiana. The Senator from Maine makes an appeal for me not to do so. Now, with the understanding that this present bill is not to be pursued after to-day and that he will not interpose any appropriation bill on Monday, I shall refrain from making the motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There will be no appropriation bill in a condition to be presented to the Senate on Monday.

Mr. MORTON. I hope to have a general understanding that on Monday the Senate will without objection proceed to the consideration of the resolution in regard to Mr. Pinchback.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. As suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] last evening, I desire to modify my amendment. I send up the amendment, as modified, to be read by the Clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment, as modified, is to insert at the close of section 94:

Provided, That claims presented and allowed under the sixth section of an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1874, shall be presented for exchange, as provided by the seventh section of said act within four months from the passage of this act, and if not so presented the privilege of thus exchanging shall not be exercised by any holder of any such claim; and the sinking-fund commissioners of the District of Columbia are prohibited from issuing any bond, as provided in the seventh section of the act hereinbefore referred to, after the expiration of four months from the passage of this act: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to in any manner pledge the faith of the United States to the payment of any debt or obligation of the District of Columbia, or of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, other than is provided for by the seventh section of the act hereinbefore referred to and the amendment thereto as to the fifty-year bonds therein referred to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If no further amendment be offered, the question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. THURMAN. My friend from Delaware not now in his seat [Mr. BAYARD] had some amendments to offer to this bill. In his absence I will offer one for him. I move to strike out of the fifty-second section, on pages 100 and 101, the paragraph commencing with the word "and" in the sixteenth line, and ending with the word "exemplary" in the twenty-third line.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the words proposed to be stricken out.

The CHIEF CLERK. The words proposed to be stricken out are:

And every person, in whole or in part, owning or renting or permitting the occupation of any building or premises for the sale of such article, or having knowledge that such article is to be or is being sold or habitually drunk therein, shall be liable, jointly and severally, with any other person in this section made liable, in the same or different suits, for said compensation and damages, which may be exemplary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know that I am particularly strenuous about this proposition; but I will ask the honorable Senator from Ohio whether he does not know that this is very like the law of his own State.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir; such provisions were in our laws, but they will not be in much after this winter, I think, for the people have condemned them in the most emphatic manner.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This proposition is in the nature of holding dealers in intoxicating liquors responsible for the damages incurred by that practice. I do not deem it of importance enough to make any observations about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. When this bill was under consideration before the holidays, I proposed to amend the section creating a board of excise, and submitted then to the Senate some remarks in opposition to the general scheme proposed by the bill for regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. I shall now propose, having read the bill somewhat carefully as to the sections, to strike out the whole of them from page 87 to line 48 on page 102, being "chapter 7 of the board of excise."

Mr. President, this subject is one of great difficulty. Legislation in regard to it varies in almost every State of the thirty-seven. I am perfectly aware that while intelligent, careful, and conscientious legislators may all concur as to the end to be reached, they differ widely in their methods and ways of reaching it. I am very clear as to the proper mode of dealing with this question by law. I am not now referring to the domain of morals, I am not now referring to this as a simply social question; but law has its domain, morals have theirs. The question too often is made to take rather the shape of sumptuary legislation, which has by almost all civilized nations been long since abandoned as impracticable, inquisitorial, and utterly inefficient for the objects in view. There can be no doubt that it behooves the State, for the purpose of police regulation, to treat the sale of intoxicating liquors with more care and with greater stringency than are generally used in framing laws relative to the sale of other commodities; but yet the principle remains that you are dealing with property, that you are attempting to apply rules which are for the regulation of property in accordance with the safety of the community. A strictly regulated, well-defined system of license, by which the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be confined to those who have made their business a source of large revenue to the State, by which the number of those will be lessened, by which the revenues of the State will be increased, tends rather to discourage the widespread use or abuse of intoxicating drinks.

I am aware that there has been in many of the States of the Union the very dangerous, and I think the very fallacious, attempt to mingle moral lessons with legal restrictions. Sir, the two schools are entirely apart. There may be an inferential result from the character of law proposed; but morals per se are not within the domain of laws of this character, and the attempt to mingle the two will, I think, be found maleficient and the cause of evil.

The bill as now proposed by the committee contains many features calculated to make the law not only odious but to destroy the self-respect of all the citizens who shall embark in the traffic which is proposed to be legalized by this bill; and both of these to an extent that, I think, make it exceedingly dangerous, and lead in this community, not to the revenue, which they desire to obtain, not to the discouragement of intoxication which we all desire to aid in, but will lead to concealment, will lead to hypocrisy, will lead to illicit sales and to the defrauding of the community of the revenue which it could gain and properly gain by a moderate license law. Such a law is now in force in this District. I do not mean to say that it could not be improved; I doubt not that it could, and that its provisions could be made more stringent, that the license fees could be increased, and the effect reached by way of causing those who go to the expense of taking out these licenses to become watchful that they are not defrauded of their more exclusive right to sell by the illicit sale of others all around them.

My amendment is to strike out chapter 7, relating to the board of excise, contained upon pages 87 and those following until page 102, for the purpose of allowing the present laws of the District regulating this subject to be kept in force. If Senators will glance over some of the provisions of this bill, they will see how highly objectionable they are from the extent to which inquisition is permitted in the establishments of all persons who shall take out licenses for the sale of alcoholic or fermented drinks. At page 92, for instance, there is a provision that—

The members of said board, (of excise,) its secretary, and any person expressly authorized by the board, shall be allowed at all times to freely inspect any place or premises licensed or that may be the proper subject of a license hereunder, and also any article hereinafter mentioned which may be kept or found at such place. And any member of said board, or person by it authorized, may at any time inspect any place licensed, or that requires a license, and whatever is sold or kept for sale or to give away thereat.

Observe, sir, the consequences of such permission. Inquisition is not confined to the members of the board of excise, but they may delegate that authority to any one else. Hostile and scandal-loving men may seek and obtain authority to visit the place of business of any one against whom their enmity has been excited by day or by night, in garret or in cellar, in parlor or in bed-room. There is no place left for privacy and for domestic and private right. Why, sir, it seems to me to state such a proposition is to insure its condemnation by any one; it is degrading the character of the men who accept licenses subject to such nocturnal or daily examination. Sir, such examinations are hateful; they are not in consonance with the theory of our Government in any way. If the inspection is to be permitted of a man's premises in any portion of them, that appropriated to the dwelling of his family or of his guests as well as that appropriated for the public carrying on of his business of hotel keeping or restaurant keeping, so that he is to have no privacy and his rights as a citizen are to be subject to inspection, hostile, unfriendly, and scandalous inspection, it seems to me such a proposition is abhorrent to any just and fair mind.

Well, sir, let us look further at some of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What section is that from?

Mr. BAYARD. It is section 48, on page 92, from line 33 to line 41 inclusive.

As I desire to assist my friend from Maine in making his bill as nearly unobjectionable as possible, perhaps I may offer now, and ask that the question be put by the Chair, an amendment to strike out that authority of inspection to be found upon page 92, contained between lines 33 and 41. If my honorable friend agrees with me in believing such a proposition injurious to private right and beyond the proper domain of legislation in authorizing the examination of premises so licensed, I shall be very glad.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understood the Senator's proposition to be to strike out the entire chapter.

Mr. BAYARD. I did propose that; but it may be that I may be successful in procuring certain modifications of it, and I would rather the more restricted amendments be put before the more general one be discussed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should be very glad to hear any criticism from any quarter as to the details of that subject. I can understand that there may be a great variety of opinion as to many of these details, and the provision to which the Senator now refers I think very properly falls under criticism, for I agree with him that it is pretty stringent. But I should hope that there would be no desire to strike out the whole subject. In its offensive features, or extreme features, it is open to criticism, but, as a whole, the chapter is undoubtedly wholesome. There ought to be a wholesome restraint put about the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors. The only object the committee could have was to provide such wholesome restraint.

I am aware, Mr. President, if I am not trenching upon the honorable Senator's time, for I do not wish to make a speech—

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather hear the Senator.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am aware that in many respects there are provisions in this branch of the bill which are more stringent than is common to the whole country and which may be offensive to the general sense of gentlemen here; but the subject itself I hope my honorable friend will not think it necessary to assail. Therefore I invite most certainly criticisms upon the several points in this general provision, and will co-operate and concur, if there is anything that should be deemed impolitic or excessive, in striking it out; but the system itself I hope will be retained in the bill. I hope my honorable friend will not feel called upon to go any further than that, because I say to him, upon some consideration of the subject, that the present system of licenses in this District is not, I think, what it ought to be. It is loose and irregular.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not suppose it is what it ought to be, but I believe it is a great deal better than what is proposed to take its place. However, as no motion is before the Senate, and as I stated my amendment as a proposition, without asking the Chair to submit it, I will withdraw it, and ask that section 48 be amended on page 92 by striking out all after the word "for," in line 33, to the end of the section in line 41. That simply excludes this power of inspection by day or by night of the premises of any person who has taken out a license under this bill. I ask that the amendment be indicated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 92, commencing in line 33, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

And the members of said board, its secretary, and any person expressly authorized by the board, shall be allowed at all times to freely inspect any place or premises licensed or that may be the proper subject of a license hereunder, and also any article hereinafter mentioned which may be kept or found at such place. And any member of said board, or person by it authorized, may at any time inspect any place licensed or that requires a license, and whatever is sold or kept for sale or to give away thereat.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand the amendment is now confined to that.

Mr. BAYARD. It is confined at present to that. That is my present motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not care particularly about that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to strike out the words just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. On page 95 of the bill, commencing in line 62, it reads:

Any person (except druggists or apothecaries for the purpose and in the manner aforesaid) who shall have or keep any article included within either of said wine and beer licenses or said liquor licenses, or who shall sell or give the same away to any person within said District, or who shall allow the same to be drank upon any premises under his control, or where he sells or aids in selling any such article or drink, as a business or occupation, in whole or in part, without such license so to do, shall, by reason thereof, be deemed to have committed a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable for such crime, &c.

It is very plain that that language is much too broad and that it will embrace within its penalty any person who merely entertained his friends at his table and gives them a glass of wine or spirits or fermented liquor. I think if in line 65 the words "or give the same away" were stricken out, the clause would be relieved in part from the criticism I have made upon it. Therefore I submit that motion to the Senate, in line 65, page 95, to strike out after the word "sell" the words "or give the same away;" so that the clause shall read:

Any person (except druggists or apothecaries for the purpose and in the manner aforesaid) who shall have or keep any article included within either of said wine and beer licenses or said liquor licenses, or who shall sell to any person within said District, or who shall allow the same to be drank upon any premises under his control, &c.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think that language is susceptible of the construction put upon it by the Senator from Delaware. The Senator should bear in mind that this regulates the dealing in liquors, and it applies simply to persons engaged in their sale. It provides that a man shall not sell or give away except within the limitation of his license; that is all. It does not invade the domestic circle, nor does it inhibit the giving of the article away to persons or a private gentleman keeping it in his own house, in his own cellar, in all varieties. It has no reference to that at all. It has reference, I will say to my honorable friend, simply to persons who are dealing in it, that in the premises licensed for such a purpose they shall not sell nor shall they give away except within the terms of the license.

Mr. BAYARD. My honorable friend will perceive that he has drawn this bill entirely in all the clauses in the disjunctive. It is:

Any person (except druggists or apothecaries for the purpose and in the manner aforesaid)—

Now, those words, "any person," would include the honorable Senator or myself, or any one else, except these two classes—who shall have or keep any article included within either of said wine and beer licenses or said liquor licenses—

That refers to the articles included in this liquor license—or who shall sell or give the same away to any person within said District, or who shall allow the same to be drank upon any premises under his control, or where he sells or aids in selling any such article or drink, as a business or occupation in whole or in part, without such license so to do, shall, by reason thereof, &c.

So that as it stands now there is nothing to prevent these penalties from being applicable to any person, not being a druggist or apothecary, who shall sell or give away certain articles included in this license.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will turn to the next page, page 93, commencing with line 89, he will see the explanation is there made of what it refers to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly. By no possibility could it fall within the interpretation my honorable friend from Delaware puts upon it.

Mr. BAYARD. Then if it be in some degree cured by the language following, it has no value where it now is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But it has the greatest possible value, because persons might to a certain extent be within the principle of all the mischief intended to be remedied by this bill by giving away indirectly.

Mr. BAYARD. Then let us cure it by inserting before the word "person" the word "licensed," so as to read "any licensed person."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to that. The Senator may make it just as explicit as he pleases. It will be seen that the language referred to by my friend from Kansas covers the whole thing:

But nothing herein shall be deemed to include having, drinking, or giving or receiving any article to drink at the private residence or in the domestic circle of any person, &c.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Delaware will perceive that before the sentence is closed the whole matter is cured before you reach the semicolon. It is where such article is given away.

Or where he sells or aids in selling any such article or drink as a business or occupation, in whole or in part, without such license so to do.

Mr. THURMAN. In what line?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Lines 69 and 70.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the Senator would define the difference between the words "in the domestic circle," as distinguished from the words "private residence."

Mr. BAYARD. I do not understand how this matter can interfere with the revenues of the District or with the regulations for its government. I submitted a motion to strike out the words "or give the same away" on lines 65 and 66. As that is not in the line of business and is not under the head of license, I do not see what harm is to come of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend will allow me, the suggestion is this, that under the pretext of giving away dealers may do a large business. In order to remedy the mischiefs that are sought to be controlled, it is provided that they shall not deal in it in that way. It is to meet one of the frauds that may be practiced upon the law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think that the whole difficulty might be remedied by incorporating in the amendment of my colleague before the word "person" the word "licensed."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I make no objection to that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That would prevent any licensed person from giving it away, as suggested by the Senator from Maine, and committing a fraud.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to that. That is the bill now as I understand it; but if my honorable friend thinks that will strengthen it any I am perfectly willing to modify the clause in that way.

Mr. THURMAN. "Licensed" to give away?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir; he takes a license to sell and must follow his legitimate business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Whether he gives or sells, he has license.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It does not apply to an unlicensed party, but to a man who has a license to sell.

Mr. ALCORN. Then I suggest that you will have these men undertaking to throw trammels around licensed dealers, and you will give men who are not licensed the liberty of giving away what they choose. You are offering a premium to men to avoid the license.

Mr. BAYARD. I confess I cannot see what premium can be offered by a man giving away property that costs considerable money, at any rate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will suggest to my colleague that there is a law here which prohibits selling to minors. Now, a man having a license, while he is precluded from selling to a minor, might, if the clause stands as it is, give away to a minor; in other words, pretend to give away and receive privately pay for it.

Mr. BAYARD. That would be a sale.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I know; but the law would be evaded in that way.

Mr. BAYARD. All these pretended covers, these attempted frauds, are met and rejected by courts of justice every day. Where a stringent license law exists and persons are indicted for the sale of intoxicating drink, and by any evasion they seek to get rid of that and receive an equivalent for it, the courts invariably throw the defense overboard and insist upon conviction. I have seen it done fifty times in the course of my life when courts would not permit the law to be evaded, and would instruct the juries that no such evasion should be successful; as the matter of selling the cracker and giving the glass of spirits, saying that the sale was of the cracker, a perfectly innocent matter, and the spirits a mere gift. All those attempted evasions are ruled out of court every day and the party convicted.

Now, sir, no man is going to follow the business of giving away commodities so highly taxed by this government already as to make their use one of the luxuries of life, expensive enough at any rate. It seems to me that the effect of this law as it now stands would be to put some private citizen, unlicensed, not dealing in the article at all, in danger of a malicious prosecution at the hands of some one who would be justified by the letter but not by the spirit of the law.

The truth is, Mr. President, it will not do to be strapping down men's individual habits in this way. My objection to the whole of this section is that it is based on the theory of controlling the individual habits of men. It is what I have heard termed "moral inspection," that is to me utterly odious and which I never saw productive of any good. I am in favor of a stringent system of license which shall regulate the sale of intoxicating spirits, which shall bring revenue to the State, and by its very expensiveness shall discourage the constant use of intoxicating spirits. I do not propose under color of regulating this traffic and legalizing this traffic by license issued that there shall be a system of moral inspection by one man over the habits of another. This law as it stands now seems to me open to the objection that it would render liable any private individual not concerned in this traffic who should choose to give to whom he saw fit any of the commodities mentioned in this section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does my honorable friend understand that this section prohibits that in any of its language?

Mr. BAYARD. I certainly do. Let us look at it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I mean as a common dealer.

Mr. BAYARD. It does not apply to dealers alone; that is the point precisely.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator can do as he pleases; he is not within the inhibitions of this law by any sense whatever or by any possibility.

Mr. BAYARD. If that be the case, there would be no objection to it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It does not touch anybody except somebody who is licensed to sell.

Mr. BAYARD. Then insert the word "licensed" before the word "person."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have not the slightest objection to that.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I move to insert the word "licensed" before the word "person."

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 62, page 95, before the word "person" it is proposed to insert the word "licensed;" so as to read:

Any licensed person, &c.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us see how that is. You license a man to sell wine, beer, or liquor. Then, if this word "licensed" is put in before "person," you forbid him to keep any wine, beer, or liquor. I think that is going to be the effect of it. I invite the attention of my friend to that. Suppose the word "licensed" be put in; then it will read:

Any licensed person (except druggists or apothecaries for the purpose and in the manner aforesaid) who shall have or keep any article included within either of said wine and beer licenses or said liquor licenses, or who shall sell or give the same away to any person within said District, or who shall allow the same to be drunk upon any premises under his control, &c., shall be deemed to have committed a misdemeanor.

Mr. ALCORN. That point I made awhile ago.

Mr. THURMAN. Then it is, if you please, a law licensing a man to do this very thing, to keep this grog, to sell the grog, and then, if you put the word "licensed" in, you provide that he shall be guilty of misdemeanor for doing it.

Mr. BAYARD. If he shall give it away.

Mr. THURMAN. But you put in the word "licensed"—

Any licensed person—

Omitting the parenthesis—

who shall have or keep any article, &c.

The effect, therefore, will be, first, to give him a license and get his money, and then punish him for doing the thing that he is licensed to do.

Mr. SHERMAN. The word "licensed" must not be put in.

Mr. THURMAN. O, no; it must not be.

Mr. BAYARD. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no possibility that this provision will affect any man who is not a dealer. Every man who does not deal in liquor is certainly outside of the provisions or inhibitions of this law. It is expressly so provided on the next page.

Mr. THURMAN. It ought to be "any unlicensed person."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But that you do not mean. I submit to my honorable friend from Delaware that the supposition upon which he went is fallacious, and that therefore no amendment to cover the point raised by the Senator is necessary in this section.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. If I understand this section of the bill, it is to prohibit anybody from selling or dealing in this article who has not a license.

Mr. THURMAN. The word "unlicensed" ought to be inserted.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. You may say "unlicensed," but that is merely superfluous language. This bill provides that any person who undertakes to sell or deal in this article without a license and contrary to law shall be punished. That is the meaning of this whole provision; and this we secure as far as we can. This is a very difficult subject to legislate upon, to prevent people drinking whisky, either inside or outside of law. The section provides:

But nothing herein shall be deemed to include having, drinking, or giving or receiving any article to drink at the private residence or in the domestic circle—

That is the meaning of it—

where no such article is bought or sold at the same place and no evasion of this act is attempted.

So that this subsequent clause shows that what we contemplate in preventing people from giving away liquor is that it shall not be done at an establishment of this kind where it is sold. That is the whole meaning, and if the words in the bill do not convey that meaning they should be there.

Mr. THURMAN. There is no necessity for any provision in the bill at all against giving away liquor in any form or shape. In the first place it is not proposed to prevent anybody except liquor dealers from giving away liquor. It is not proposed to prevent my friend from Maine from giving away a glass of wine to a friend who calls on him.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; but Morrill reasons would prevent me doing any such thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. The section is only intended to apply to persons who are licensed. Now, if they are licensed, and if they see fit to give away their liquors, I do not see any harm done. I should like to know where the harm is. The only question about giving away is in the case of unlicensed persons. Some States have provided against giving away because of tricks resorted to by unlicensed persons to really sell liquor under the pretense of giving it away, as the old trick of selling the cracker and giving away the liquor; but, as was very properly said by my friend from Delaware on my left, [Mr. BAYARD,] every court has held that that is a mere trick, an evasion, and that it is really the liquor that has been sold. Nowhere in the United States has any man escaped punishment by the trick of giving away liquor and charging for a cracker of no value a sum of money. So that there is no necessity really to provide for it in any respect. In respect to this particular clause under consideration, the word "unlicensed" ought to be inserted before the word "person." As it now stands the section embraces all persons, licensed and unlicensed, except druggists and apothecaries.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact that in lines 69 and 70 the words are used "without such license so to do?" The mistake has arisen from the fact that those words should come in after the words "any persons," in line 62, or between the words "who" and "shall" in line 63.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Kansas is right about that. The mistake has arisen because those words were so far off from their antecedent.

Mr. INGALLS. That is the great trouble with this whole bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Really I would like to know as a matter of curiosity who did devise some of the provisions of this bill. I am quite sure that my friends of the Senate committee could never have done it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend has touched a subject of which he knows very little, I am afraid.

Mr. THURMAN. I want the Senator to hear me to see whether he will father this provision—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am the putative father of this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well; whether the verdict of the jury is right in finding you to be so or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say that this provision is not peculiar to this bill. This provision of the bill is taken from the license law of the city of New York. There is a sufficient degree of freedom, I think, in the sale of liquor in the city of New York so that this should not alarm anybody here in the city of Washington.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, I want the Senate to pay a little attention to section 49. Let us begin at the beginning.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On what page?

Mr. THURMAN. Page 92, section 49. This is a chapter constituting a board of excise and regulating its powers and duties, and providing generally on the subject of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors and wine. Section 49 begins by saying:

There shall be three classes of licenses, the same to be required and given, respectively, with due regard to the public convenience and welfare of the people of said District, namely:

First. Those for which no fee is chargeable.

That would not determine anything by itself; but below that we find what that first class is:

First. Under the first class shall be embraced all licenses not embraced under the definition of either of the other two classes; and said first class will, among others, embrace all licenses that may be required for such matters, persons, or things as hacks, cabs, drays, omnibuses, junk-shops, pawnbrokers' shops, bowling-alley, livery-stables, billiard-tables, peddlers, bill-posters, intelligence-offices, street-stands, and the like.

This board may require licenses for all these things, but shall charge no fee whatever for the license. That is all plain enough. The second class of licenses is wine and beer licenses and the third class liquor licenses, and for the two last classes, that is the wine and beer and the liquor licenses, fees are to be chargeable. Then we come to a definition below of what is a wine and beer license and what is a liquor license:

Secondly. Under the head of wine and beer licenses shall be included all licenses for the keeping or sale of lager-beer, root-beer, and such ale and fermented drinks as shall not be materially stronger than the lager-beer of commerce.

Is not that a funny test? I should like to know if a man is indicted for violating the provisions of this bill in regard to the sale, how the jury are to find whether the beer that was drunk was "materially stronger than the lager-beer of commerce?"

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. By calling experts.

Mr. THURMAN. I heard of calling an expert once upon this very subject of lager-beer. A man was indicted in Saint Louis under the Missouri statute against selling intoxicating liquor, and the seller said it was not intoxicating liquor, it was lager-beer. They called experts to prove whether lager-beer would intoxicate, and one old Dutchman testified, "I drink sixty glasses a day and it don't intoxicate me, but I suppose if a man made a hog of himself he might get drunk on it." [Laughter.] I should like to know how you will get your experts here. You would have to furnish them liquor right in defiance of your bill. You ought to have an appropriation for liquor in order that they may try it or let the jury themselves try it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am inclined to think that in the country in which my friend lives it is not different from almost any other, and they will find plenty of experts on the streets here anywhere.

Mr. THURMAN. Plenty of experts unquestionably there are, but where will you get experts of that particular beer, experts at that particular shop, experts who can tell whether that particular glass which the man sold and which has vanished down the throat of some thirsty fellow was "stronger than the lager-beer of commerce." How do you find that out? The beer has gone to its destination, to its long home. [Laughter.] I should like to know what kind of experts, unless you cut the fellow open and have a chemist to investigate his stomach, will settle such a question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will tell my honorable friend what my experience about that is in Maine. We have the Maine law there; but we have had all these things tried there. Whether lager-beer will intoxicate depends not so much upon the beer as on the fellow who drinks it. If his head is a little weak, he will surely get tipsy. One man testifies, "Why I drank a pint and I was tipsy." Another fellow says, "I could drink enough of it to drown myself, but I could not get drunk on it." That is one of the tests. There are plenty of these experts all around. There will be no difficulty in finding plenty of men to tell the jury what the effect of it would be on them; and they will return a verdict according to the testimony.

There is another test, and that is the chemical test: What is the percentage of alcohol in lager-beer? What effect will that have? Will that intoxicate? That again depends on the subject, the man who takes it. If his head is weak and his stomach weaker, as some people's are, he will be affected by it. And so of cider. I submit to my honorable friend that while there may be some difficulty in finding a jury to convict, there is no difficulty in finding plenty of experts to tell exactly what the effect will be. I will say to my friend that a pint of lager-beer would set me whirling.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Ohio had continued the reading of this section, he would have ascertained that the board of excise—

Mr. THURMAN. I was coming to that.

Mr. INGALLS. The board of excise are—

To fix and declare some practical test of the greatest strength, or of the largest alcoholic ingredients, having reference to the intoxicating power.

The only practical test of the effect of alcoholic liquors, or the intoxicating power of alcoholic liquors, is in their effect upon the animal organism, either human or otherwise; and therefore the board of excise are here authorized to establish a practical test of the intoxicating powers of the liquors that are offered for sale by these licensed agents. I presume, therefore, that they will be authorized to hire either professional or habitual drunkards for the purpose of ascertaining precisely what the strength of the liquor is which is offered here in the city of Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. That would be an excellent thing for the old toppers, because they would be allowed then to drink at the public expense and be paid a per diem—

Mr. INGALLS. They might be hired for a salary.

Mr. THURMAN. To be sure. That is the strongest recommendation this chapter in the bill has, that it will give employment to a set of old fellows who are very seedy, and they will not have to wait to be asked to be treated. But let us see what kind of a thing this is. It is a maxim of philosophy as well as of law that impossibilities are not to be required. Let us see what this provision is:

Under the head of wine and beer licenses shall be included all licenses for the keeping or sale of lager-beer, root-beer, and such ale and fermented drinks as shall not be materially stronger than the lager-beer of commerce, and also wines generally—the board of excise to fix and declare some practical test of the greatest strength or of the largest alcoholic ingredients, having reference to the intoxicating power—in what shall be embraced in a beer license.

"Some practical test." What kind of a practical test? I know there are a great many instruments, their names ending in "ometer," to find out almost everything, to find out whether water has been put in milk, to find out how much alcohol there is in spirit, and the like. I suppose it is contemplated that something of that kind is to be done. I do not know, I cannot tell how many chemists are to be employed for this purpose; but I do know that any such provision as this destroys the practical efficacy of your bill. There is no reason in the world for this division into wine and beer licenses as one class and liquor licenses as another.

Here is another curious thing about it, when you come to describe the class:

Under the head of liquor licenses shall be included all licenses for the keeping or sale of rum, whisky, brandy, gin, or other distilled or alcoholic drinks, and all licenses for the keeping or sale of porter, stout, and for such strong beers as the test to be from time to time established and applied by the board shall exclude from said second and place within this third class of licenses.

That is, a liquor license which authorizes a dealer to sell rifle whisky, which authorizes him to sell the strongest possible intoxicating liquor, shall not include the weakest beer. If a man wants the weakest beer to sell, if a hotel-keeper wishes to keep the weakest possible beer for the benefit of some customer who wants it, then he must get two licenses; he must get a beer license of the second class and he must get a liquor license of the third class, and although the liquor license authorizes him to sell alcoholic liquors of whatever strength and the strongest possible malt liquor, even to brown-stout, yet it shall not cover the case of the weakest small beer. There is no sense in that. This classification is one that has no merit in it, in my judgment, and will only lead to the destruction of the practical efficacy of the bill.

In fact, Mr. President, all the provisions in this bill in regard to the liquor traffic in my judgment might be well left out and their place supplied by a very few simple regulations upon the subject. There are laws already existing on the subject. If we strike out this section I understand those laws will remain in force. There is no necessity therefore, as it seems to me, for these provisions. Indeed, it would be better, in my judgment, to strike out this whole chapter about the board of excise. There is no necessity for having it. Here is a board to raise revenue; you have three commissioners, and it is their duty to levy and execute taxes, while they also provide for such licenses and for such taxation under the name of license as you may think fit to allow; but do not establish another department of this government to be called a board of excise. You will only complicate it. It will only be mischievous in its practical effect, and only injure the prospects of the bill or render the law a failure in practical effect if enacted.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I will call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the objectionable part of the section that he refers to. I am as liberal on this question as any man on this floor probably. There is no fanaticism about me in regard to this liquor question; but we know that licenses are granted in every State of the Union, probably, except the State from which my honorable friend from Maine comes and the State of Massachusetts, and one or two of the adjoining States. We have them in my State; the Senator has them in his State.

Mr. THURMAN. No.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. No licenses for the sale of liquor?

Mr. THURMAN. No.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Then you have prohibition?

Mr. THURMAN. No.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I thought you had a license system from which the State derived revenue.

Mr. THURMAN. No.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. We have it, and therefore to some extent I have regulated my action on this subject. In Maryland we have a license system as tolerant as this.

Mr. THURMAN. Allow me to say a word lest I might be misunderstood. The constitution of Ohio prohibits any license for the sale of intoxicating liquors to be granted. The constitution of the State declares that no license for the sale of intoxicating liquors is granted, but the General Assembly may provide by law to restrain the evils resulting from such traffic; I believe that is the expression. Then we have a statute prohibiting the sale of all spirituous liquor under a certain quantity, I think a quart, but I do not remember exactly the quantity. The statute has been in force ever since 1852, and has been from that time to this a perfect dead letter generally. It may be executed in some places, but practically throughout the State there is free trade in liquor.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. The Senator was criticising the second clause of this part of the bill under the head of wine and beer licenses. The object of the classification is to discriminate in the amount that shall be paid for licenses. There is no difficulty about that. I do not think in a system of this kind we ought to charge as much for licensing a man to sell beer as we do for the sale of brandy or whisky. The Senator's objection to this particular section is principally that the board of excise may fix and declare some practical test of the alcoholic strength of beer. Strike that out, if the Senator thinks it objectionable.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to striking out that clause.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I do not care about that test. If that makes the section appear ridiculous to the Senator's mind, let it go out; it amounts to nothing really. Let him move to strike that out, and it will be satisfactory to us.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no motion pending, and I want to appeal to my honorable friend from Ohio not to evolve his wit on this bill. If he tells all he knows and does not know about the statutes on temperance, I am afraid the end of this session will find this bill pending. I beg, therefore, to be excused from hearing anything on that point. Let this go out if the Senate choose; it is not at all important. I ask, Mr. President, if there is any question pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is that? I thought it had been acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to insert before the word "person" the word "licensed."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That was withdrawn by my honorable friend.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I have an amendment to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. THURMAN. I will offer an amendment, if the Senator from Maine will accept it, on page 96, after the word "attempted," in line 93, to strike out the period and add—

Nor shall it include any society or association not of a business or commercial character.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to that. It is already included, in fact.

Mr. THURMAN. I want it clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. Section 50, beginning on page 97, provides:

That upon any complaint being made in writing to said board of excise by any person in said District that any person having any said beer license or liquor license has violated any provision of this chapter in any particular in said complaint mentioned, or that the place licensed has become a source of crime or vice, dangerous to the safety or morals of the people of said District, or the haunt of disorderly, vicious, or criminal persons, it shall be the duty of said board of excise (if there be no good reason to regard said complaint as wholly unfounded) to summon the licensee or person affected thereby before said board to answer said charge at a time and place therein named, stating in such summons the substance of said charge, and the same may be served by posting on the licensed premises, when the licensee cannot conveniently be found. Said board shall make just rules of proceedings on trials, and shall hear in a fair and summary manner testimony that may be offered under oath for and against any such charge, and if the same has been in its opinion sustained, at the conclusion of the trial said board may either give its decision forfeiting and annulling said license, or may require the present payment in advance of an increased license fee for the residue of the term of the license, (not exceeding that herein authorized as an original fee,) as a condition of allowing such license to longer continue; but upon any such conviction of any licensee upon a second charge, whether of the same kind or not, and also after such forfeiture, such licensee shall be deemed an unlicensed person and his place an unlicensed place, and the license shall be forfeited and annulled and the bond shall be put in suit. The police board shall provide for the service and return by its subordinates of any such summons; and on application to a justice of said supreme court for a subpoena requiring any person to appear and testify on any such trial before said board of excise, it shall be the duty of any such justice to sign such subpoena, in a form which said justice or court may approve, and any such justice may punish disobedience to the same, or a failure to attend, or a refusal to answer any proper question before said board on such trial, as he might punish for a like contempt of a like nature committed by refusing to obey a legal subpoena or to testify in any trial before himself. Any person feeling aggrieved by the action of the board of excise may bring its proceedings and answer to the petition before the said court, or a justice thereof, for review, in the same manner and to the same effect as is authorized in regard to the proceedings of the board of health, and the decision of the court or justice shall be upon the same basis and limited in the same way, and determine finally whether the license in question is forfeited or not.

This section is open to an objection that I think can reasonably be made to almost every section of the bill, and that is that it employs about four words to do the work of one. In the next place, the object of the section, to punish violations of the license granted, is fully met by the action authorized by a preceding section upon the bond which is required to be given by the licensee before the license shall issue. That bond stipulates in a certain sum of money, and a very full sum, for an action upon any breach of any condition of the license.

What necessity is there, after you have compelled the licensee to give this bond, after you have given the Government the right of action on the bond for any breach of the license whatever, that you should create a new tribunal and authorize it to frame laws of its own and methods of procedure of its own, which may or may not be consonant with the laws that now exist? Why not let the trial for breaches of the duty of the licensee take place according to the laws of the land, in which the rules of testimony as adopted in other cases are applied, and in which you are not called upon to meet a new-fangled system of proceeding prescribed by this section? If a place where liquor is sold has become dangerous to the safety or morals of the people, or the haunt of disorderly, vicious, or criminal persons, then that place has become a nuisance, and it can be abated under the common law; it can be abated under many other laws now prevailing in the District of Columbia.

I suggest to the honorable Senator that the whole of this section is not only entirely superfluous, but it is cumbersome and troublesome. It is of no use for the performance of his duties by the licensee. Therefore I move to strike out section 50.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to strike out section 50.

The amendment was rejected; the ayes being 12—less than a majority of a quorum.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer an amendment to come in on page 72, after line 126 of section 34:

And in relation to gaming-houses and gambling, and the seizure, confiscation, and destruction or disposal of all the tools, implements, and articles used for gaming.

I hardly think that this amendment needs any explanation; it is merely to give authority to the board of police to make regulations in respect to the seizure or confiscation of tools and implements used in gambling-houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not believe that provision is adequate as a totality and there ought to be a law—perhaps it is in this bill somewhere—which shall positively prohibit, instead of providing for the regulation of, gambling-houses, &c. It may be that something of the kind is in the bill. I should like to have the Senator from Maine state how that is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this bill does not contain any prohibition of this character, it ought to do so. Instead of providing regulations, such as the amendment of my colleague proposes, conferring power to regulate them, the bill ought to provide a positive prohibition against such things being tolerated under any circumstances. But if the Senator from Maine says, as I understand him to have said, that there is a prohibition of that character, then I should like to ask my colleague what office this regulation clause is to perform. If you are to prohibit gambling absolutely, as you do not prohibit the sale of liquors, then there is no occasion for regulations on the subject of keeping such houses.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have looked through this bill, I think, enough to see that there is no criminal code in it. There is no definition of any offense in the bill that I see, to be punished by law. I suppose it is left to the law as it now stands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law as it now stands, as I understand it, leaves this matter to the Metropolitan police.

Mr. SHERMAN. So I understand.

Mr. THURMAN. There is a law punishing the keeping of gambling-houses.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all, but I understand it is left to the Metropolitan police and unless they act there is practically no prohibition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Secretary be kind enough to read the amendment and its connection again? I am unable to see, running through the bill hastily, any provision prohibiting the keeping of gambling-houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment and the clause of the section to which it is attached under the head of "nineteenthly."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in section 34; so that in this respect it will read, when adopted—

That the regulations of the board of police (subject to said supervision) shall, among other things, contain appropriate provisions in effect not inconsistent with this act, and on the subjects following, and they may be abrogated, or amended new ones added, by the board from time to time, namely:

First. Relative to the time and manner of exercising authority and discretion by any subordinate of the board, except as herein otherwise provided.

Then it goes on with a series of municipal regulations touching subjects which are not wrong in themselves, street regulations, and all that sort of thing. Now, to provide that this board may make regulations touching gambling-houses, with only authority to enforce those regulations by a mere municipal fine, to be recovered by an action of debt—because I doubt whether you could punish a man criminally for not obeying the orders of this board, for criminal law must emanate from the supreme authority—it seems to me is totally inadequate. If we are to authorize them to do anything on the subject of these affairs, they ought to be required to abolish them as nuisances, and of course if they made a mistake the parties injured could appeal to the courts. But whatever they are to do about gambling-houses and other vicious places of that character, it seems to me they ought to be required to do peremptorily, and we ought to say that they should abolish and abate as a nuisance any gambling-house, or house of prostitution, or a variety of places of such character, which never ought to be tolerated under any system of law. Instead of their having authority to make regulations about such things, they ought to be required to suppress them, it strikes me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend will allow me to interrupt him, my impression about that whole thing is that it is left entirely under the criminal law of the District as it stands.

Mr. SARGENT. On page 7, section 7—and I would call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to it—I find this provision:

That the authority of making, publishing, amending, abrogating, and promulgating ordinances—

That is to say the power of making ordinances—

shall belong exclusively to said commissioners; and they may exercise the same, in the aid of the powers hereby conferred, to check vice and immorality, and to enforce obedience to this act.

I think there is power given to the board of commissioners to pass ordinances covering all the different kinds of vice and immorality to which the Senator referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly; but then the question that I submit to my honorable friend from Maine and to the Senate and to my colleague is, that aside from matters of municipal regulation, the infraction of which you punish not as a crime but as a breach of a by-law, so to speak, by an action or whatever else, when you come to a matter of crime and are to punish a person as a criminal by imprisonment, for instance, instead of by an action, you cannot do it by authorizing this board of regents or anybody else in this District to make a thing a crime that the statutes have not declared to be a crime. That is my point.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no pretense that they have any such power as that, and therefore it was that I said that must be left to the interpretation of the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appreciate the force of that. I was now replying to my friend from California who seemed to imply by what he said that this authority to the commissioners to make regulations of this character, by-laws, so to speak, to be enforced by an action for penalties no more than $250, &c., as it is limited was sufficient. I think it ought not to be the sole legislation in respect of gaming-houses and other places that are vicious in themselves, as distinguished from the ordinary affairs of leaving ashes on the sidewalk and things of that kind.

Mr. SARGENT. Where does the Senator find the provision which limits the penalty that may be prescribed by ordinance for immorality, to an action and to a fine of $250?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it not in the seventh section?

Mr. SARGENT. If so I do not find it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see:

Whoever shall violate any legal ordinance made and promulgated hereunder shall be liable for the penalty so fixed for any violation thereof; and such penalty may be recovered in a civil suit in the name of said District, as said commissioners may authorize.

I suppose that the learned gentlemen who drew up this bill and spent so much valuable time upon it were impressed with the idea I have just suggested, which is not by any means a new one, that when you are to proceed against a man under criminal law for a crime, you cannot make any act of his a crime by authorizing a board of regents or anybody else to say so; the law must say what is a crime and what is not. The regents may make a regulation for the violation of which they may enter a civil suit and recover a particular sum; and my simple point is that in some way we ought to provide in connection with this scheme a provision which shall make it the duty of those administering affairs in this District to enforce a statute which operates of itself against crimes of this character.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My understanding is that there is a law in the District against gambling. Of course it will be the duty of the commissioners to make rules and regulations for the enforcement of that law; but they would not be authorized to make a law.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to making this matter more specific and making the power of the board more specific; but I should like to call attention to the fact that on page 8 this provision follows that which has been read by the Senator from Vermont:

But in any instance, any said penalty may be regarded as in the nature of a fine, and the same may be enforced and collected as any other fine, in the police court.

That is to say, a civil action may be maintained to recover the amount, or it may be treated as a fine and be enforced by imprisonment, as for instance it is in my State, and I presume it is so in this District, where for every two dollars of fine one day of imprisonment is inflicted until the amount is consumed by the imprisonment. I presume there is some such method of enforcing penalties in the police court here. This would give the power of prosecution for the violation of an ordinance prohibiting immorality, to enforce the penalty as a fine, to be collected in the same way that fines are collected in the police court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. THURMAN. If the idea of that amendment is that these people can provide for seizing private property and confiscating it without any judgment of a court whatever, I am opposed to it; but I suppose all the rules and regulations which are made by the board of police are subordinate to such ordinances as may be passed by the commissioners. Is not that so?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Entirely so.

Mr. THURMAN. And subject to abrogation?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think an amendment should be adopted providing for the confiscation of property without any judgment whatsoever or judicial order for its confiscation. That is too much power to put into the hands of a police board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THURMAN. I have an amendment to offer to section 25, on page 55, in the school clause. Before I offer it, however, "to return to our mutton," I want to inquire of the Senator from Maine, who reports this bill, why under this bill it is perfectly lawful to sell or give away cider, which I believe is mainly produced in New England, when you cannot sell a glass of beer or wine?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope you will not go back to the liquor.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to know how that is; whether he put that in in order to catch the New England Senators. [Laughter.] It is a little curious indeed that nobody can sell without a license a glass of beer, but any one may absolutely destroy the stomachs of the people, to whom he sells, with the worst kind of cider, without any penalty whatever for it. But now to leave that subject of liquor and go to another, the twenty-fifth section of this bill provides as follows:

That, except in cases of the pecuniary inability so to do, and in cases of the mental or physical incapacity of children so to learn, it will be the duty of every parent, guardian, and of other person having the care or control of any child in said District, to cause, to the best of the authority and means of such person, said child to be reasonably instructed, (in reference to its capacity,) either in said free public schools or privately, at least in reading, writing, spelling, geography, elementary arithmetic, and the elements of English grammar; and unless any such child has received from said board of education a certificate of having attained such amount of instruction, it will be the duty of such person to cause, to the best of the authority and means of said person, such child to attend such public schools, or some good private school or instruction, during such school-attending age for a period of at least fourteen weeks of each year, eight of which shall be consecutive, from its sixth year to its eighteenth—

but two evenings of attendance of any public or good private evening school shall be the equivalent of one day's attendance at a day school. Any certificate from the board of education, under its seal, touching any matter within the sphere of its duty, or any transcript from its records or register, signed by its president and certified by its secretary as correct, or as being a true copy, shall be regarded as prima facie evidence of any facts such certificate may state and as to the qualifications, age, residence, attendance, or non-attendance at any public or other school of any child or person named, or as to any facts required to be stated in any register mentioned in this chapter.

Now I pause for a moment to say that that introduces what is called compulsory education, and it introduces it in respect to both sexes and requires that compulsory education from the age of six to the age of eighteen, twelve years, although many people have been of the opinion that it is not wise to send a child of six years of age to school but that school education ought to commence much later. But, however that may be, here is a provision for compulsory education for twelve years of all the children of either sex between six and eighteen years of age in this District. How is that enforced? One would suppose that it would be enforced by the punishment of the parent or the guardian who omitted to send the child to school. That would be the natural supposition, but on the contrary the punishment is upon the child.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will my honorable friend state his amendment?

Mr. THURMAN. When I read the rest of the section I will propose the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Suppose you propose it, and then state the reason for it.

Mr. THURMAN. My amendment is to strike out the whole section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What section are you on?

Mr. THURMAN. I move to strike out the whole of section 25. I have read the provision for compulsory education. Then comes the provision to punish, not the person who fails to send the child to school, but to punish the child by prohibiting any person from employing any such uneducated child within this District, making it an offense to employ the child. I think it is bad enough for the child to have no education, to be ignorant, but to deprive it of employment strikes me as being inhuman. I move to strike out the whole section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to strike out section 25.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. THURMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish the Senate to understand this matter; a number of Senators have come in since I made the motion.

The twenty-fifth section of this bill requires compulsory education of all children, of either sex, from the age of six to the age of eighteen, and then provides not for punishing the parent or guardian who shall fail to send the child to school, but for punishing the child by making it unlawful for any person in this District to employ a child who is not certified by this board of education or some member thereof to have attended school and in one instance to have made the proper progress as required by this law. Why, sir, it is monstrous enough that the child should be in ignorance; but to deprive the child of even employment that may give it its daily bread on account of the fault of the parent or guardian does strike me as one of the most disgraceful provisions I have ever seen in a law; but I am opposed to the whole section from beginning to end.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Well, I move to strike out that which is offensive to my friend. There is no more wholesome provision in the whole chapter on schools than this section. It is not very onerous any way. It is to require all children here within certain ages to attend a school of some kind. It may be a private school. That answers it. But they shall go to school; they shall not be vagrants; they shall not lounge around the streets without attending school; but if they show that they attend a private school, that answers the purpose.

The objectionable feature to the Senator from Ohio is the provision that if this class of children—and it is designed of course to reach a portion of vagrant children—do not attend school, they shall not be employed and nobody shall pay them wages. The object of that, the moral discipline intended to be enforced in that way, is to require children to go to school, and that is supposed to have more power over them than any ordinance that could be made or any force which could be used by the parents. It will take away all excuse for the children not attending school. It may be a little stringent, and I am inclined to think it is rather novel. I have no objection therefore, if it will obviate the objection to the whole section, to let that clause be stricken out.

Mr. THURMAN. Then you leave the section without any sanction.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; we still make it the duty of children—

Mr. THURMAN. But inflict no penalty for its non-performance. It amounts to nothing.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The rules and regulations that the commissioners make will provide for that. If striking that clause out will satisfy my honorable friend, let it go out.

Mr. THURMAN. No; that will not satisfy me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Well, I have a right to amend the section before it is stricken out. I move to strike out all after the word "chapter" in line 28 to the end of the section.

Mr. HOWE. It seems to me instead of perfecting his section the Senator from Maine will really cripple it, mar it by that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It does mar it in some sense; that is to say, it takes away the moral force to that extent, but it leaves the section still making it the duty of all children to be educated.

Mr. HOWE. And yet striking out the last part of the section will leave everybody at liberty to bribe the child not to go.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the precise thing the Senator from Ohio objects to.

Mr. HOWE. You are not going to make it any more satisfactory to the Senator from Ohio or more satisfactory to yourself by striking out the latter clause.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I was trying to make it satisfactory to the rest of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be withdrawn and let us try the question on striking out the section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to strike out the twenty-fifth section.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a motion to strike out the latter clause. I think as the section is worded it would punish the temporary employment of a child. For instance, I employ a vagrant boy on the street for a day or a week as a matter of charity. Is he to be punished? The first clause I think could be enforced by regulations of the commissioners which they have ample power to make under the first section. I move to strike out the latter part.

Mr. THURMAN. I rise to a question of order. I moved to strike out the whole section and on that the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can move to strike out a part.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it in order now to move to amend the section?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order to move to perfect the words proposed to be stricken out; and that motion takes precedence.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let us take the vote on striking out the latter clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moves to strike out that portion of the twenty-fifth section which will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out all after line 28.

Mr. HOWE. Are the yeas and nays ordered on this amendment?

Mr. THURMAN. The yeas and nays were ordered on my motion to strike out the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the original amendment of the Senator from Ohio farthest from the Chair, [Mr. THURMAN.] They have not been ordered on the amendment of his colleague, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. HOWE. I was under the impression that the yeas and nays were called for on the amendment to the amendment; but being up, I will say that I shall not vote for the amendment to the amendment. I think then you would vote for the most anomalous piece of legislation that I ever heard of. The section as it stands says two things: First, that it is the duty of a child of a certain age to attend school; and, secondly, that employers shall not hire a child not to go to school. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] shakes his head. That is the way it strikes me.

Mr. SHERMAN. The part I propose to strike out simply punishes the employer of a vagrant child—that is all it does—without any relation to its going to school.

Mr. HOWE. It can scarcely be called a punishment of the Senator from Ohio for hiring a vagrant child when the law simply says he shall not pay the child. The peculiarity of the section as it stands is that it does not say you shall not hire the child, but if you hire him you shall not pay him.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it says no such child—

Shall be employed, or furnished with employment, or be paid wages by any person in said District for work done by any such child during any portion of the day, when, according to the regulations of said board, the public schools are open.

Mr. HOWE. Precisely; but suppose you do hire him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then you are subject to the penalty.

Mr. HOWE. What penalty? The penalty of not paying him?

Mr. SHERMAN. O, no.

Mr. HOWE. That is all the penalty I see there.

Mr. THURMAN. It says he shall not be employed or furnished with employment or be paid wages. He cannot be lawfully furnished with employment.

Mr. HOWE. Suppose you do employ him or furnish him with employment, what becomes of you?

Mr. SHERMAN. You are prosecuted for a violation of the ordinance. The law goes on to provide—

But it shall be a good defense to any prosecution under this clause.

Because there is a general provision in the bill to authorize prosecutions.

Mr. HOWE. Is there any prosecution provided for in this section?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; because a section of the bill authorizes a prosecution for any violation of any clause of this bill, and the board of regents has power to fix a penalty. Then this goes on to provide in case of such prosecution what the evidence shall be.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope this section will not be stricken out. I do not think if Senators understood the exact condition of it they would see anything peculiar in this section. It applies, as I understand, to only the period of fourteen weeks during the year. Very many of our States have this provision and have had it for years. Very many States that have not a provision similar to this are taking steps to require education at least for a certain portion of time. Is it too much to require that every child during a given age shall receive at least fourteen weeks' education during the year? If it is not too much, then is it improper to say that the individual who endeavors to prevent that child from securing fourteen weeks' education in a year shall be prevented from so doing? In my own State the great difficulty is that our manufacturers—those persons who employ children—have been unwilling that those children shall go to school during the number of weeks required by the law; and if you go into many factories you will find children that ought to be at school undergoing training and preparation to assume the duties and responsibilities of men and women in supporting the government are employed in the factories and growing up in ignorance. This being the case, it has been found absolutely necessary to provide by law that manufacturers for a certain number of weeks in the year shall not employ these children.

This section provides that if these children do not attend during the day, they may as an equivalent attend an evening school. It does not seem to me that this Senate wants to say that no provision shall be made for educating all the children in this District. It occurs to me that it is a necessity which we ought to insist upon. If, as my friend from Ohio says, six years is too young an age, strike out "six" and insert "eight;" but do not let us say that they shall not be required to attend school during a certain portion of the time in the year, and that manufacturers or business men or individuals who may wish to employ them in any capacity of life shall not be prevented from employing them during this limited period. It is not a hardship on these children. It is the greatest boon you can confer upon them. They at this early period of their existence are not prepared to judge for themselves. I hope this section will be retained in the bill.

Such a provision has been earnestly recommended recently in the State of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether it has been finally adopted there or not, but it was recommended by the executive of that State but a short time ago and very earnestly, after he had been to some of the New England States which had this provision. He looked and examined into its working and felt the value of it, and he went back feeling that there was nothing that he could do which would be of so great benefit to the children growing up in that great State as to recommend to the Legislature to adopt a provision similar to the one which is contained in this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, no man on this floor is more devoted to the cause of education than I am, I am quite sure. I have proved that by my work. I bestowed the largest portion of six years of my life in administering the common-school system of the State of Ohio; and I do not yield to any man in the desire to see the children of this country educated; but at the same time I do not believe that this section would be productive of good. So far as my experience goes, parents avail themselves of the opportunities of education that are afforded. I do not know any place in which education is more general than in the State of Ohio. We never have found any difficulty there in inducing parents to send their children to school. The only trouble has been to provide a sufficient number of schools for them. Parents are so ambitious of seeing their children educated and seeing their condition bettered in the world, that I know of no place in America where parents are not willing to send their children to school if opportunities are afforded them to do so.

I do not think compulsory education is a desirable thing here. That there may be places in the world where it is, I will not gainsay. But though compulsory education might be a desirable thing, this section does not provide for it. It first provides that it shall be the duty of parents and guardians to send children to school fourteen weeks in each year for twelve years; but there is no sanction whatsoever, except the provision that the punishment shall fall on the child, that the child shall not be employed unless it brings a certificate not simply that it has attended school for fourteen weeks in the year, but also that it has made the "reasonable attainments" which are required in this bill. If the child cannot do that, cannot come fortified with a certificate that it has attended school fourteen weeks in the year, and not only that but has "made the reasonable attainments aforesaid," it cannot be employed; and what are these "reasonable attainments?" Attainments in reading, writing, spelling, geography, elementary arithmetic, and the elements of English grammar. Unless it comes fortified with that certificate, everybody is prohibited from employing that child up even to the age of eighteen years. Why, Mr. President, it will not do at all.

The Senator who has this bill in charge and my colleague see that this is an enormity to visit the punishment upon the child instead of on the delinquent parent or guardian.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend quotes me. I desire to say that that is too strong. I do not concede that it falls upon the child. The child owes service to the parent. In all these cases the child is put to service by the parent, oftentimes against his will, and in most cases it is so. Therefore it falls on the parent and not on the child.

Mr. THURMAN. Not at all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The law steps in before a negligent parent to insist upon it that the child shall have an education, and takes away the service from the parent to that end. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. THURMAN. An orphan child owes no service to its guardian for the benefit of the guardian. That is very certain. The wages obtained by a child under guardianship belong to the child; they are simply to be administered by the guardian; and we know in practice that the wages which are obtained by these children, up say to the age of eighteen years, do not all go to the parents, even where the children have parents.

Seeing that, the Senators have proposed to strike out this latter clause which visits the punishment upon the child. Very well, suppose it is stricken out, then the section stands making it the duty of the parent or guardian to send the child to school, but without any sanction whatever to that provision of the law, without anything to enforce it.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I would call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the sixth disqualification in regard to suffrage on the next page. It deprives a man of the elective franchise who fails to send his child to school. That is punishment enough on the parent, I should think. If you strike out the section proposed by the Senator from Ohio it will leave that punishment for the parent.

Mr. THURMAN. What page is that?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. On page 130, in enumerating the disqualifications for suffrage.

Mr. WEST. There is no franchise in the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Yes, there is; it is in voting for some officer; it requires a registration of voters—

Sixthly. Must not during the past year have omitted to do his duty as in this act contemplated in regard to educating or sending any child to school.

Then he is not to be registered as a voter.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very glad the Senator has called my attention to that. Here is a limiting of suffrage in a prodigious way. There is a small smack of know-nothingism in this that had escaped my attention entirely.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I had intended to refer to that.

Mr. THURMAN. The voter "must, if coming of age after the 4th day of July, 1876"—which is pretty close upon us—"be able to read and write the English language, unless disqualified from so doing by physical incapacity." That knocks out a good many Germans in this District from voting, and a large amount of American citizens of African descent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am sorry my honorable friend has started anything so far ahead as 1876. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN. A single word. The Senator from Ohio has referred to the provision as to wages as a punishment of the child.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it not?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not so regard it.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes; it provides—

No child within such school-attending age, and who has not a certificate from the board of education of having made the reasonable attainments aforesaid or of having attended fourteen weeks during the then current year * * * shall be employed.

Mr. WASHBURN. Very true, Mr. President; but if I understand the meaning of that language, it is that if a child has made these attainments the board may give permission although the child has not attended school fourteen weeks in the year; but if the child is ignorant and has not made these attainments, the board must require that the child attend fourteen weeks. The outside is the requirement of fourteen weeks. If the child has attended for fourteen weeks, although it has not made the attainments which are referred to here, there is no difficulty in employing it during the rest of the year.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I regret very much that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] should have given us such an account of the inhuman conduct of the manufacturers in Massachusetts to show the necessity of the passage of such a law as this for compulsory education to keep them from preventing children from having a proper education. It is fortunate for us, however, that we are not called upon now and here to make laws in reference to the State of Massachusetts. They have their laws there, and they probably are suitable to their people. This law is not aimed to control rich manufacturers anywhere. The effect of it will not be to operate on that class of children who are fortunate enough even to be in the employment of rich manufacturers.

Year after year, since I have been here, have you appropriated $30,000, $40,000, and $50,000 from the Treasury in the middle of winter to keep the poor children in this District from starvation. Now when you vote to compel them to go to school, vote first to fill their bellies. To compel the wretched children who are begging for their parents in this District to go to school or make them or their parents suffer the penalties of this bill, is simply an absurdity. It is cruel and inhuman.

Education is undoubtedly a necessity in this country. It is undoubtedly true that we cannot hope that republican institutions shall for any length of time continue in this country unless we educate the people; but a compulsory system of education which omits altogether any reference to the circumstances of those who are compelled to go or of those who have charge of them or may be dependent upon them, is certainly an absurdity. It is requiring what cannot be done, and punishing where there is no fault and no crime. Mr. President, not long since I met in the streets of Washington a poor boy ten or eleven years of age covered with rags, his feet bare in the middle of the coldest days in the winter. On the statements of those who were kindly charitable to inquire, I found that the boy had a widowed mother and five or six brothers and sisters over in what they call the Island. He was a white boy with a strong Virginia accent. Where those people came from I do not know, nor their history. Those who were charitable enough, I know, did attend to that little case. Is that boy to be made to go to school fourteen weeks without clothes and without shoes or stockings?

Your compulsory system is not for the rich. It is not for those who can afford to pay for their education. It is for the poor; and this system would apply to the poor boys who cannot provide for their wants, the wants of their parents and the wants of their starving brothers and sisters, and who require the pittance they earn simply to sustain life. This boy, assisted by a few charitable people, was started as a newspaper boy and from begging around as a newspaper boy he advanced until he finally got into another little business, and the last I heard of him he was driving a cart on the public works. You want him to go to school. What are you going to do with the brothers and sisters he supports? What is his mother going to do when she waits for him to come back and bring the half-dollar he has earned in the day?

I say the bill in this respect will do more wrong, it has more faults, as applied to the condition of things now in the District of Columbia than any bill I have ever seen introduced in Congress. I am opposed to the whole compulsory school system here from beginning to end. I agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] in regard to the advantages of education. I was glad to hear him say he had spent six years of his life in trying to improve the school system of the State of Ohio; but I say the people who want to improve the school system in the District of Columbia have got to go to work in a different way. They have got to put their hands into their own pockets and Congress must put its hand into the public pocket and go to work and keep the people from starvation while you are engaged in educating them. It is a poor way to make a child learn his A-B-C's with nothing in his stomach and with bare feet. Charity of that kind always fails of its object. It should begin with giving the necessities of life. We have been doing that already. There is a vast mass of people who have been thrown into this District, a large number more of colored than white, by the results of the war. We had to take care of them here. They were called the wards of the public, and democrats as well as republicans all through the war voted to assist those people when they could not assist themselves. Now, before you compel them to go to school, you have got to say that you will take care of them so that they can go to school. We must not forget those relations which poverty has between parent and child. On whoever this system falls it may fall so heavily, that when isolated cases come before you you will feel yourselves the impropriety of the passage of such a law.

As I said before, I am in favor of education. I do not know that I am in favor of compulsory education anywhere. I would much prefer that those good preachers of New England should go out and preach the doctrine of education and should go to hovels and with their hands assist all those whom they are able to help, have them to send their children to school, take them to school and have them taught for nothing, take them to public schools. I would much prefer to have it done in that way than done under a law whose penalties are so rigorous that the courts can have no mercy, no gentleness, to these distressed people whose case I have painted to you.

I trust that the Senator from Massachusetts and other gentlemen who are advocating this bill on humanitarian grounds will consider the condition of this District, and that they will feel that it is not wise for us to force people here to do what they cannot do, to dissolve the tie of parent and child when they are helping one another, simply to effect a system of education by force of law and by penalties.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Mr. President, it is manifest that there are very serious objections to the twenty-fifth section of this bill. Extremists cannot meet in the District of Columbia and expect to have their notions carried out. This is the great compromise ground for the whole country. New Englanders may think that certain things, particularly upon the liquor question and upon this school question, will satisfy them and their people. I do not object to their doing just what they think proper in their own sections, but here we meet upon different ground. We meet here upon compromise ground. Men of extreme opinions and men of moderate opinions meet here, and we must settle those things somehow or other. In legislating for this District, that has been the case hitherto and will be in all time to come. We should not attempt to pass a bill of this kind where particularly on its main features there is so much antagonizing opinion. At the same time, where numbers are so close, we must compromise upon all questions of this kind.

This bill, besides the twenty-fifth section, provides ample facilities for public schools; all opportunities are afforded; and I think the friends of the measure, the friends of a government in this District, those gentlemen who are in earnest about the establishment of a government here, may well omit this entire section.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to say to my friend that he certainly has not read this section. This section does not apply to the case so finely pictured by the Senator from New Jersey at all. It says:

That, except in cases of the pecuniary inability so to do.

When a person can show that he is pecuniarily unable to send his child to school and furnish clothing, the section does not operate at all. It is only intended to compel those who have the means to educate their children to use those means to a limited extent; that is all.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend from Maryland allow me one moment to state a fact that has just come to my knowledge?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. It is from a person perfectly well acquainted with the affairs of this District and one of its officials. According to his estimate there are ten thousand children in this District for whom there are not school accommodations, for whom there is no school room; and yet we know that the school board is behind. We had to appropriate a large sum of money at the last session in order to pay its debts. How can you enforce this section under such circumstances?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I admit that the whole of this section is not as objectionable as the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] has implied. It is the latter part of the section that is so entirely objectionable to him and to those gentlemen who think with him, and it is objectionable to me; but I say it is manifest that unless there is some yielding, some compromise on this question, the bill will not pass. This question of enforced education is an original one here. It is a subject of contention between people and between States and between sections. The South is liberal on that question. The people of the Middle States are entirely different from the people of the North. They may be more advanced than we are. That is our trouble, our misfortune, if it be so; but still our people do not think as they do. In this condition of things, when the public mind here is not prepared to receive enforced education, why undertake to peril a bill for the government of this District by it when one is so necessary? Why not leave this advanced opinion to the future—a few years hence at all events? When we cannot do all at once, let us do the best we can. Being opposed to this section, yet if all the section is retained by the Senate I shall vote for the bill in the hope that it will not be as bad as I think it will be in its execution; for when you have miserable laws and bad laws are passed, and sometimes you are obliged to vote for them to get good ones, you have the consolation of this fact always resting on you, that they are never executed, or at least very seldom, in a civilized community. They become a dead letter on your statute-book. Therefore, for the purpose of avoiding diversity of sentiment and consolidating strength on this bill, I hope this twenty-fifth section will be stricken out.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator from Ohio nearest me [Mr. THURMAN] moved first to strike out section 25. His colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] has proposed an amendment to that motion by moving to strike out a portion of the section. At a proper time I shall move to strike out section 26 as well as section 25, and my reasons for voting in favor of all these amendments I will give in as few words as possible.

I confess I was not aware that this bill contained a scheme of compulsory education. It seems to me that this is but another illustration of adopting a coercive system and relying upon coercion as a principle in our government instead of the voluntary system on which I think the philosophy of that government rests. It is the interference coercively by the State with that which I believe to be the natural duty of the parent that I object to.

I have no boasts to make of my services in the cause of education, but I can only proclaim myself most sincerely the friend of the cause of education. I appreciate its blessings; I appreciate its importance; and I endeavor, so far as my individual life is concerned, to carry into effect the professions that I make. But I do object to the State taking the place of the parent. If you remove the responsibility from the parent, if you interpose the power of the State instead of the duty of the parent, you take from the parent that sense of obligation which is the very best security for the education of the child.

What is the object of this compulsory system of education, which shall place all children in the District from the age of six years up to eighteen under the police control of the officers of the District; that their mental and intellectual regimen shall be measured by the certificate of a board of education; that the discretion and control of the parent, instructed by his sense of duty, instructed by the love for his children implanted in his breast by the God of nature, shall be overruled, and disregarded, and made subordinate to the certificate of a board of education of the District of Columbia?

Mr. President, I resent it as a parent myself. Among the chief blessings which have met me in life is the presence of children who look up to me for protection and whom I feel bound by every tie to protect and guard and educate. If these feelings be mine when I can contemplate some board of education or its police agent entering my family, asking me what I have done with this little one or that, whether I have taught them mental arithmetic or whether I have taught them English grammar or any other branch of common education—if I feel resentment at such inquisition into my affairs, shall I not give my humbler neighbor, perhaps my poorer neighbor, or any neighbor, rich or poor, high or low, black or white, credit for the same feeling which I have myself?

Sir, I tell you that these inquisitorial, prying, coercive regulations are wholly contrary to the spirit of our institutions, and I regret to see them gaining in force or in credit in this country. I do not care whether I shall stand by myself or whether I shall stand with the great majority of the people of this country at my back, I shall, so long as my conscience is so clear as it is upon this subject, object and protest against this invasion of the domestic and family circle and the rights of the poorest or richest citizen of this land.

Talk about the education of your children! Here is what? Their intellects are to be trained by law in writing, spelling, geography, elementary arithmetic, and the elements of English grammar; and this, forsooth, that education may be encouraged, and we and the nation may not be disgraced by illiterate or vagrant children! I would rather have one lesson of truth, of modesty, of self-subordination, of self-denial, and have those qualities by which a community shall be built up, than I would have this attempt to interfere and give mental education to children and punish those who do not give it as well as the child for not receiving it.

This occasion is too short for justice to be done to a subject so great as this. But if this bill had nothing in it but this provision, it would never receive my sanction, however beneficent its other provisions might be. I trust it will be stricken out.

I want to say further that I do not regard this District as a ground for making experiments of systems all over the country. I admit that Congress has exclusive right of legislation in this District; but it is not the ground for experiments from any quarter of the country. There ought to be, in my opinion, a consideration for the wishes and the feelings of those for whom we make laws. I have no idea that such a law as this would be desired by a tithe of the population of this District. For this reason alone, even did I approve of the proposition, I would not vote for it. I do not believe in the justice or the policy of enforcing laws upon a people against their will. I know the attempt will be unsuccessful; it will simply lead to evasion and to hypocrisy, which are much worse than open disobedience.

As I said before, I was not aware that this bill contained any such proposition as that of compulsory education and police regulations of the families of citizens of this District in regard to the education of their children. I can well understand that if schools here are established at public cost the attendance upon them may be regulated by public law, and must be; but to compel parents to send their children to public or private schools is an act of coercion destroying that free discretion and duty which by a higher law than any law you can make has been established in the hearts of parents toward their children and of children toward their parents.

I hope that not only section 25 will be stricken out, including the portion moved by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] but that also section 26 may be stricken out; and upon that when the question comes I shall ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. MORTON. I should like to have that amendment stated. I do not know exactly what it is.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN and also the entire section proposed to be stricken out by Mr. THURMAN.

Mr. SPRAGUE. To my mind the enactment of this clause in the bill is of no account whatever. We must judge of the working of a law where it has had application and favorable consideration. The country will look to New England for the proper understanding of a law where in New England such a law has operation, because it is conceived that there favorable circumstances attend it. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] has touched the key of this whole question. The compulsory laws in New England are a dead letter. This fact is evident, and the statistics will show it, that notwithstanding the lavish expenditure of money, the building of edifices of an extravagant character, and the whole attention of the people being directed to the system of education, owing in each of those States to the enormous centralization of values, leaving in their circumference and surroundings people without power and without the means of procuring an education, and the circumstances attending the factory system to-day, in proportion to the population, there are more unlettered people than there were in the time of the Revolution. The law respecting New England, where you would look for favorable application of this system, is a dead letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The question being put, a division was called for; and the yeas were 27 and the noes 18.

Mr. CAMERON. This is a very important question; the country should know how their representatives vote upon it; and therefore I ask for the yeas and nays. I take it for granted that all who are in favor of the education of the poor will support this section and not vote to strike out any part of it.

Mr. THURMAN. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to strike out the section. The question has just been taken on the amendment moved by the other Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to strike out a portion of the section; and on that the Senator from Pennsylvania asks the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOREMAN. I understand the motion is to strike out the latter clause of the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Pennsylvania asks for the yeas and nays on the proposition upon which the vote was just taken by a division.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question then on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. THURMAN. I appeal to the Senator to withdraw that call. The yeas and nays have already been ordered on the amendment offered by me. It is only wasting time to take them twice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania persist in asking for the yeas and nays?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, sir.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Ohio nearest, [Mr. SHERMAN,] to the twenty-fifth section of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Boreman, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Scott, Spencer, Washburn, West, and Wright—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Brownlow, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Oglesby, Pratt, Robertson, Schurz, Waileigh, and Windom—23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to strike out the twenty-fifth section, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. Before that vote is taken I wish to give some official figures. I have here from a speech delivered by the Delegate from this Territory at the last session these figures which are taken from the official reports:

Children of school-age in the District of Columbia.....	25,935
Seats provided for the same in public schools.....	11,910

Without public-school benefits of school-age.....	14,025

Of this number 6,759 are in attendance upon private schools, leaving 7,266 for whom there are no school accommodations; and now you propose that those seven thousand and odd children, now perhaps eight thousand, when they ask for employment and cannot present the certificate that this bill requires, shall be refused employment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that statement is calculated to mislead. I suppose those figures show the total number of children of school age first, then second the total number of children who have attended school, not the average daily attendance but every single child who has been to school once during the year is put down as having attended school. I suppose the fact will turn out to be, if this city is like others, that with the number of seats provided there will always be seats for a great many more children than attend on each day, although the total result may show that if all the children attended school every day there would not be seats enough for them. There are sickness and vagrancy and the ten thousand things that always make a percentage of children absent themselves from school. Therefore in a district anywhere in Ohio where you have a hundred children of the school age, if you have seats for seventy, and ninety of them attend school, you will have seats enough, because it will happen from the ten thousand accidents that occur that the total number or anything like the total number will not attend on any given day. That figuring, therefore, as against this section in my opinion is entirely fallacious.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understood that by the vote just taken that part of the section which prevented children having employment unless they went to school was stricken out of the section.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. So that it does not follow, as I understand the Senator from Ohio to intimate, that unless they have schooling they are to be deprived of employment. It seems to me that a statement that there are from ten to fourteen thousand children here that have not got school accommodations shows the importance of our passing this section so as to express our opinion to these commissioners, if it only amounts to a declaration, that they should make provision for the schooling of the children.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Wright—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Oglesby, Pratt, Robertson, Schurz, and Windom—21.

So the amendment of Mr. THURMAN was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to insert on page 7, section 7, line 4, before the word "vice," the word "gambling."

Mr. THURMAN. Before we leave section 25 let me offer an amendment to it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I have an amendment to offer to section 25 that I hope will be accepted. I line 17 I move to strike out the word "sixth" and insert "tenth," and the word "eighteenth" and insert "fifteenth." It requires now compulsory education from the sixth year to the eighteenth. If my amendment prevails it will be from the tenth to the fifteenth year. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would suggest "eighth" instead of "tenth."

Mr. THURMAN. Well, I will put it at eight.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I accept that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 25, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "sixth" and insert "eighth," and to strike out "eighteenth" and insert "fifteenth;" so as to read:

From its eighth year to its fifteenth.

Mr. PATTERSON, (at five o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope my honorable friend will not do that.

Mr. PATTERSON. We shall not get through this evening.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly we shall. I hope there will be no disposition to adjourn until we get a vote on this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina insist on his motion?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 19, noes 26.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I wish the Senator from Maine would look to the thirteenth line of the one hundred and thirty-fourth section, on page 182, where provision is made as to the Second Auditor auditing the accounts.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That should be the Fifth Auditor.

Mr. HOWE. I move to strike out "second" before "auditor" and insert "fifth," and then to insert "First Comptroller" instead of "Second Comptroller."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My advice is that the accounts should be audited by the Fifth Auditor instead of the Second. The Senator from Massachusetts will know better about the proper Comptroller.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It should be the First Comptroller.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; I agree to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to strike out pages 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, and 132, being sections 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 72. These sections provide a form of registration and election and are to be used only to elect three out of the eight members of the board of education. It is a mere shadow of the power of election. If the substance is not in the bill, the shadow ought not to be here. I think that is very obvious. If when we get into the Senate a motion is made and carried by which there shall be an elective officer left in the bill, it will be very easy to replace these sections; but as the bill stands it is simply electing a minority of a board who have no power in controlling the action of a board and electing a minority of a board which less than any other named in the bill ought to be elective, because the commissioners of the board of education ought not to be elective officers.

Mr. THURMAN. The motion is to strike out chapter 11.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. I propose to submit again in the Senate the amendment I offered yesterday providing that two of these commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this District, and if that amendment be adopted then this election machinery will be required.

Mr. SARGENT. If that be agreed to, we can non-concur in this amendment when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we are in the Senate now I understand. The bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And has been for hours.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MORTON. I desire now to renew the substitute I offered yesterday for section 3, providing for the election of two of these commissioners.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be read.

Mr. MORTON. I suppose we all know what it is.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out the third section of the bill and in lieu of it to insert:

SEC. 3. There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and two to be elected by the qualified voters of the District, to be known as the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the members first to be appointed and elected respectively shall be so for the terms following, in the order of their appointment, namely: first, one for six years, to be elected; secondly, one for four years, to be appointed; and, thirdly, one for two years, to be elected; and each member thereafter appointed or elected shall hold for the term of six years, except that all vacancies are to be filled for the residue only of an unexpired term. But in case of a vacancy in the appointment made by the President occurring during the recess of the Senate, the President may fill the same by appointing a member, who shall hold his place only until the end of the next session of the Senate. No member appointed for the full term of six years shall be eligible for reappointment or election. The member first confirmed for six years shall during his term be president of said board; and the succeeding president, from time to time, shall be that one of the other two members first appointed or elected whose term is nearest expired, or, after such terms have expired, shall be that member appointed or elected for six years whose term is nearest expired; but in case of there being no president under this rule, or of the inability or neglect of any president to act, said board of commissioners may elect one of their own number president pro tempore. The president of said board shall preside and preserve order at its meetings, and the salary of each said member shall be at the rate of $4,500 per year. Each member of said board shall, before he enters upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath, before one of the justices of the supreme court of said District, to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him by law.

Mr. MORTON. Upon this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. To be consistent with my action of yesterday, I suppose I should submit a motion to reduce the "two" to "one." I submit the same amendment to the amendment that I did yesterday.

Mr. MORTON. O! let us take a vote upon this.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves to amend the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. My motion is that the number to be elected shall be one, and two be appointed. The Clerk has the amendment in form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the first part of the section by striking out "one" where it occurs and inserting "two," and by striking out "two" and inserting "one;" so as to read:

There shall be at the head of said department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, two of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and one to be elected by the qualified voters of the District.

Mr. SARGENT. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DENNIS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] on this question. If present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) I withhold my vote for the moment, because I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY] on the bill itself, and I do not know which way he voted on this amendment. If he voted against the way I did yesterday, I should feel that the pair covered this also. I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. MERRIMON, (when his name was called.) The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] was called out an hour ago, and I agreed to pair with him.

Mr. MORTON, (when his name was called.) On this subject I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] If he were here I presume he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, (having voted in the affirmative.) I do not know but that I ought to withdraw my vote. I had not intended to be paired any longer than yesterday but I was paired yesterday with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] on this point. I will therefore withdraw my vote for the present.

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I find that I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. MERRIMON. The Senator from Oregon is in his seat now, and besides I understand from him that he is paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. HAGER.] I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL. On this question I am paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. HAGER.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Scott, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Ingalls, Pease, Ramsey, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hager, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Robertson, Schurz, and Sprague—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] as amended.

Mr. MORTON. Yesterday, after the amendment offered by the Senator from California had been adopted providing that one of these commissioners should be elected, I voted against it because I intended to renew my amendment in the Senate and again take the sense of the Senate upon having two commissioners elected. I am satisfied that with a full Senate my amendment would carry; but many Senators are absent, several who would vote for the amendment if here. Now, as we cannot procure the election of two commissioners by the people, I think it for their interest that they should at least have representation on the board, although they will be in a minority. I will therefore now vote for the amendment as amended; that is, providing that one of these commissioners shall be elected by the people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DENNIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. HAGER.] If here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, (when his name was called.) Understanding that the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] if present, would vote "yea"—being so informed by the Senator from Indiana, I vote "yea."

Mr. MORTON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Morrill of Vermont, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, Wadleigh, and West—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hager, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Robertson, Schurz, and Sprague—27.

So the amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to amend the bill in the same place by inserting the words which I send to the chair, to have two of the commissioners elected and one appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out of the first part of the section the following words:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, to be severally appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and two to be elected by the qualified voters of the District.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I rise to a question of order. Did we not just vote on that same proposition as presented by the honorable Senator from Indiana?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; you have not. You amended that proposition. The proposition to put this into the bill has never yet been voted upon. You have a chance to vote on it now.

Mr. STEVENSON, (at five o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 21, noes 28.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SCOTT. I have been voting steadily for an elective commissioner here upon the ground that the citizens paying less than one-half, as I think, of the expenses should at least have that much representation. I am unwilling to see this bill pass without giving to the citizens of the District some opportunity of representation in the board of commissioners; and as there seems to be a pretty settled determination to deprive them of all representation, I shall vote to give them two commissioners if they cannot have one.

Mr. SARGENT. I am influenced by the feeling stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I thought they should have a minority of this board, and I thought also that there should be the principle of election in the board. I have voted steadily and have made motions to produce that result. Failing in that, however, I shall certainly vote for two now.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the provision for two to be elected and inserting one. I think that will go in now by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to make it read:

That there shall be at the head of said department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, two of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and one to be elected by the qualified voters of the District.

Mr. SCOTT. There is one question of time that I should like to understand. We have voted upon this several times already; and unless I can see some indication of a change in the manner of voting, I shall have to vote against it, because I do not propose to go through this operation half a dozen times.

Mr. STEWART. This will be adopted now.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not believe in useless forms of legislation; and as this will be the third time we have been brought to this vote, unless I can have some assurance that those who have heretofore voted against electing one will change their course, I shall vote for electing two.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question being put there were on division—ayes 23, noes 22.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask that the question be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Clerk will state the question.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment to the amendment, if it prevail, will making the pending amendment read:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, two of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and one to be elected by the qualified voters of the District.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Not knowing how the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] would vote on this question, I withhold my vote, being paired with him. I should vote "yea" if at liberty to do so.

Mr. MORTON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. DENNIS. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY.] If he were present I should vote "yea."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Ingalls, Pease, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hager, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Robertson, and Schurz—28.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is obvious that we are playing at cross purposes about this business, and we are in the hands of the Philistines. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; let us try the next vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, debate is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the yeas were 28.

Mr. HOWE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. I was paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] on the question of suffrage and on the final passage of the bill. I do not know whether the pair would bind me on a question of adjournment under these circumstances.

Mr. BOREMAN and others. I think not.

Mr. MORTON. I hardly think it would. I shall vote against the adjournment.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the question of adjournment I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The yeas and nays were taken; and were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Pease, Saulsbury, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and West—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Cragin, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Windom—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hager, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, and Wright—37.

Mr. MORTON. Before the result of the vote is announced I give notice that, in accordance with the understanding, on Monday morning I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution in regard to the right of Mr. Pinchback to a seat in this body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the vote announced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, (at six o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) Twenty-eight Senators have voted in the affirmative and nineteen in the negative. So the Senate stands adjourned till Monday at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 13, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order. But I am willing that it should be waived for a few moments simply for matters of unanimous consent.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. CESSNA, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4686) to amend the act entitled "An act for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington 8th May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain," approved June 23, 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

Mr. WELLS. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report, and ask that it may now be passed, a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use discretion in the selection of material for the construction of a public building at Atlanta, Georgia.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use discretion in the selection of material for the construction of the public building authorized to be erected at Atlanta, Georgia, by act of Congress approved February 12, 1873, and repeals all acts or parts thereof inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Mr. WELLS. This bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Supervising Architect.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4685) was read three times, and passed.

Mr. WELLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIE P. EVANS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, presented an adverse report to accompany Miscellaneous Document No. 13, part 2, second session Forty-third Congress, relative to the claim of Marie P. Evans; and moved that it be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN S. CHAPMAN.

Mr. SHELTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3543) for the relief of John S. Chapman; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BANNING, SUMMERS & CO.

Mr. SHELTON also, by unanimous consent, from the same Committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4687) for the relief of Banning, Summers & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NORMAN H. RYAN.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3737) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan, and that it be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Norman H. Ryan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $736, in full for services as store-keeper of the bonded warehouse of E. W. Dutcher, at Amboy, Illinois, from the 18th day of April, 1865, to the 15th day of October, 1868.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed.

Mr. RANDALL. There ought to be some explanation given.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. There is a report from the committee accompanying the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be read.

The Clerk commenced reading the report of the committee; which is as follows:

The sworn statements of the petitioner and of Robert Little, the then collector of internal revenue for the third district of Illinois, show that Norman H. Ryan was duly appointed and commissioned by the said Little as store-keeper of the bonded warehouse (Class A) of Elisha W. Dutcher, at Amboy, in said district, on the 27th day of June, 1867. The compensation of that office was fixed under the regulations of the Department, as shown by the following communication:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
"Washington, August 9, 1867.

"SIR: Your recommendation of four dollars per diem as the salary of Thomas H. Ryan as store-keeper of E. W. Dutcher's bonded warehouse is hereby approved.

"Respectfully,

"THOMAS HARLAND,
"Acting Commissioner.

"ROBERT LITTLE, Esq.,

"Collector Third District, Freeport, Illinois."

The collector's certificate of appointment, dated June 27, 1867, is also filed, and the collector's statement that the appointment was duly approved by the Commissioner in a letter of advice to him.

It is shown by both of the above-mentioned affidavits that the said Ryan continued in charge of said warehouse as store-keeper under that appointment and commission, without intermission, until and including the 14th day of October, 1868, when the warehouse was permanently closed; and that for the period between the 18th day of April, 1868, and the final closing of said warehouse—one hundred and eighty-four days, at four dollars a day, $736—he has received no compensation. The regulations of the Department provided that the salary of such store-keepers should be paid monthly to the collector of the district by the owner of the warehouse. But in this case, as shown by the affidavit of the petitioner, the owner of the warehouse and distillery became insolvent in January, 1868, and has since remained so; and the affidavit of Collector Little states as follows:

"That said Elisha W. Dutcher permanently closed his distillery connected with said warehouse on the 25th day of January, A. D. 1868, leaving a large quantity of wines in said warehouse, on which the Government tax was unpaid, and which were exposed to theft on account of the insecurity of said warehouse. That to protect the Government interest it was necessary that said wines should be constantly guarded. That, affiant still being collector, said Ryan, at the special instance and request of affiant, did continue his custody of, and faithfully and honestly guarded, said wines from said 25th day of January, A. D. 1868, until and during the 14th day of October, A. D. 1868; and that said Ryan, for such service, from the 18th day of April, 1868, to the 15th day of October, 1868, has not been paid, to affiant's knowledge."

The permit for the removal of the remaining wines, when the taxes were finally paid, dated October 13, 1868, signed by Robert Little, collector, certified by the assessor, and addressed to N. H. Ryan, store-keeper, filed with your committee, shows ninety-three barrels held in bond until that time. The affidavit of the petitioner further shows that there were in bond at the time he assumed charge of the warehouse as store-keeper, one hundred and thirty barrels and two hogsheads of spirits, parts of which were removed at various times on collector's permits; and that there were besides received into said warehouse in bond four hundred and twenty-five barrels of high-wines, which were removed from said warehouse on the 4th day of August, 1868, by the United States marshal, on a writ of replevin in favor of parties who paid the tax thereon.

These facts sufficiently show the value and necessity of the service rendered by the petitioner as store-keeper after the insolvency of the distiller and closing of the distillery; and as the Department finds no authority for paying him therefor out of the Treasury, your committee believe it the duty of Congress to afford him relief, and for that purpose they report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. RANDALL said: I will not insist on the whole report being read, if the gentleman from Illinois will answer me one question. Has this man performed certain service for which he has never been paid?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Certainly; that is the fact.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will not be here on Monday, and ask unanimous consent to introduce some bills for reference.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the regular order.

RELIEF FOR LOYAL CREDITORS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the question is on the passage of the bill which comes over as unfinished business from yesterday; the bill (H. R. No. 2636) for the relief of certain loyal creditors whose moneys were confiscated by the confederate congress; on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 44, nays 145, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Barber, Begole, Bradley, Cessna, Stephen A. Cobb, Crooke, Crutchfield, Donnan, Dunnell, Field, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, John W. Hazelton, Hodges, Hynes, Lamport, Loughridge, Maynard, James W. McDill, Morey, Myers, O'Neill, Page, Parsons, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Rusk, Schell, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Charles A. Stevens, Christopher Y. Thomas, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Whiteley, John M. S. Williams, and William Williams—44.

YAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Barrere, Biery, Bland, Bowen, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Caldwell, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Conger, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Crouse, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Duell, Durham, Eames, Eldredge, Finck, Fort, Foster, Garfield, Giddings, Gunter, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hoskins, Howe, Hunter, Hutton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kelley, Lamson, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lowndes, Luttrell, McKee, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packer, Hosea W. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, Pratt, Randall, Ray, Richmond, Robbins, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Ross, Henry B. Saylor, Milton Saylor, Sener, Sheets, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Spear, Sprague, Stone, Storm, Strait, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Vance, Waddell, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—145.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albright, Banning, Barry, Bass, Beck, Bell, Berry, Blount, Bright, Bromberg, Bundy, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Curtis, Davis, DeWitt, Dobbins, Eden, Farwell, Freeman, Frye, Glover, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Hendee, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Houghton, Hubbell, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lansing, Leach, Lofland, Lowe, Lynch, Magee, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McLean, Negley, Nunn, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Read, Ellis H. Roberts, William R. Roberts, Sawyer, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sloan, Small, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Charles R. Thomas, Waldron, Wheeler, White, Whitthorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Wolfe—100.

So the House refused to pass the bill.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. My colleague, Mr. BELL, is detained from the House on account of sickness; if present he would vote "no."

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. MARTIN, was detained from the House yesterday and is detained to-day on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I change my vote from the affirmative to the negative in order to be able to move a reconsideration.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say—

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I only wish to ask to have this bill recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. No; we had better dispose of it now.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

MORGAN RAID.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole with a favorable recommendation was House bill No. 2687, making compensation for supplies taken by the Union military forces during the Morgan raid.

The bill authorizes the commissioners of claims to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of claims for horses, and stores or supplies, taken or furnished during the Morgan raid in July, 1863, through Indiana and Ohio, for the Union military forces, whether under command of officers of the United States, or of either of said States, and to make report of said claims as of other claims.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for a vote on that question. I want to see if we are to pay for all that was destroyed during the Morgan raid—

Mr. LAWRENCE. This is not for what Morgan destroyed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suspend business until the House comes to order. [After a pause.] From this time to the end of the session there will necessarily be a great struggle for the floor and for the precedence of measures. The Chair asks the co-operation of members in the preservation of order, so that they may vote intelligently upon the questions submitted to them. His only mode of bringing order is to absolutely suspend business, and that he will do in every instance when order is not maintained.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask that this bill may be read.

The SPEAKER. It has been read twice in Committee of the Whole and once in the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to the further reading of the bill.

The question was taken upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and upon a division there were—ayes 52, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. NESMITH were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 79, noes 71.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 34 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 97, nays 117, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Bland, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, Cason, Caulfield, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Danford, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Finck, Foster, Gunckel, Gunter, Hamilton, Hancock, Hatcher, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hereford, Holman, Lamson, Lawrence, Lowndes, Magee, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, McKee, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Perry, Phillips, Poland, Randall, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Henry B. Saylor, Schell, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Shanks, Sheets, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloss, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Spear, Sprague, Alexander H. Stephens, Stone, Swann, Christopher Y. Thomas, Vance, Waddell, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Whitthorne, John M. S. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Barber, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bowen, Bradley, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Carpenter, Cessna, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Conger, Crooke, Crossland, Crouse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Donnan, Duell, Eames, Eldredge, Field, Fort, Giddings, Glover, Gooch, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hunter, Hutton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Lampont, Lansing, Lawson, Longbridge, Lowe, Luttrell, Lynch, McCrary, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Mitchell, Morey, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Phelps, Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Ray, Richmond, Robbins, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry J. Scudder, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, A. Herr Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Charles A. Stevens, Storm, Strait, Sypher, Taylor, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, and James Wilson—117.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albright, Barry, Beck, Bell, Berry, Blount, Bundy, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Eden, Farwell, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, John B. Hawley, Hendee, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hubbell, Hynes, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Marshall, Martin, McLean, Morrison, Negley, Nunn, Pelham, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Purman, Ransier, Rapier, Read, Ellis H. Roberts, William R. Roberts, Milton Saylor, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Sessions, Sloan, Small, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Charles R. Thomas, Waldron, Wheeler, and Ephraim K. Wilson—75.

So the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALBERT F. YERBY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2688) for the relief of Albert F. Yerby, administrator of Addison O. Yerby, deceased, or whom it may concern.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, called for the reading of the bill; and it was read.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, there were—ayes 52, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. KELLOGG were appointed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the bill will be again read. I think it is not understood.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to debate. This bill is to pay for timber taken down in Virginia.

Mr. KELLOGG. The claimant is a loyal man, and ought to have his pay.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Undoubtedly. They were all loyal men down in Virginia! I never heard of one that was not!

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 58.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, called for the yeas and nays.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose we should now go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills, in what position will these private bills be left?

The SPEAKER. They will come up as the unfinished business when the committee rises.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move then that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill and the Military Academy bill.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey. It seems to me that we should first dispose of the bill now pending.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. FORT in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876.

Mr. O'NEILL. This bill has already been read the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows:

For Army pensions to invalids, widows, and dependent relatives, revolutionary pensions, and pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812, and for furnishing artificial limbs or apparatus for resection, with transportation or commutation therefor; also, for compensation to pension agents and the expenses of the several agencies, and for fees for preparing vouchers and administering oaths, as provided for by the acts of April 24, 1816; July 4, 1836; May 13, 1846; February 20, 1847; February 2, 1848; July 21, 1848; July 29, 1848; February 3, 1853; June 3, 1858; July 14 and 17, 1862; June 30, 1864; June 6 and July 25, 1866; July 27, 1868; June 17 and July 8 and 11, 1870; February 14 and June 8, 1871; February 20, 1872; and March 3, 1873; and all other pensions provided by law, $29,500,000.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the specification of the dates of various acts, so that the paragraph will read as follows:

For Army pensions to invalids, widows, and dependent relatives, revolutionary pensions, and pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812, and for furnishing artificial limbs or apparatus for resection, with transportation or commutation therefor; also, for compensation to pension agents, and the expenses of the several agencies, and for fees for preparing vouchers and administering oaths, as provided for by the several acts of Congress applicable to pensions provided by law, $29,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Navy pensions to invalids, widows, and dependent relatives, and pensions to sailors of the war of 1812, and for furnishing artificial limbs or apparatus for resection, with transportation or commutation therefor; compensation to pension agents, expenses of agencies, and fees for preparing vouchers and administering oaths, as provided by the acts of April 23, 1800; February 20, 1847; August 11, 1848; July 14 and 17, 1862; June 30, 1864; June 6 and July 25, 1866; March 2, 1867; July 27, 1868; June 17 and July 8 and 11, 1870; June 8, 1871; February 20, 1872; and March 3, 1873; and all other pensions provided by law, $500,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions, and the other expenditures under that head, shall be paid from the income of the Navy-pension fund, so far as the same may be sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend this paragraph in the same manner as the one last read, by striking out the dates of various acts, and making the paragraph read as follows:

For Navy pensions to invalids, widows, and dependent relatives, and pensions to sailors of the war of 1812, and for furnishing artificial limbs or apparatus for resection, with transportation or commutation therefor; compensation to pension agents, expenses of agencies, and fees for preparing vouchers and administering oaths, as provided by the several acts of Congress applicable to pensions provided by law, $500,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions, and the other expenditures under that head, shall be paid from the income of the Navy-pension fund, so far as the same may be sufficient for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to ask whether these amendments restore the old fees allowed to pension agents.

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir.

Mr. SPEER. Do they provide any increase of compensation?

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir. The law changing the charge for vouchers was passed at the last session of Congress, and remains upon the statute-book. This bill makes no change whatever in the compensation of pension agents.

Mr. SPEER. Does the bill or either of these amendments change in any way the manner in which pensions are to be paid?

Mr. O'NEILL. There is no change in existing law in any respect; no addition to salaries, fees, or compensation of any kind.

Mr. SPEER. What is the effect of the amendments which the gentleman proposes?

Mr. O'NEILL. These amendments simply strike out the recitals of the different pension laws, so as to avoid surplusage.

Mr. SPEER. Then the amendments do not at all change the effect of the bill as printed?

Mr. O'NEILL. Not in any respect. The design of the amendments is simply to save trouble at the Pension Office. In fact, there has been during the course of years an entire change in the method of keeping accounts in that office.

Mr. SPEER. I am simply asking for information.

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand that.

Mr. GARFIELD. The only reason I see for striking out this recital of various acts of Congress is that there may be recited a law that has been repealed. If so, it might perhaps be claimed that some obsolete pension law had been revived. It is safer, therefore, to make the appropriations to carry out all pension laws in force.

Mr. O'NEILL. In the Revised Statutes the whole of the pension laws are grouped together, so that any recital of the different acts is unnecessary.

I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the Committee of the Whole proceed to the consideration of the Military Academy bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that all general debate on this bill be closed, that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be at once read by paragraphs for amendment.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I would like to know what action the Committee on Appropriations have taken with respect to the assistant professors of tactics; whether they are to receive the same compensation as other assistant professors at West Point.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have in that respect followed the law exactly as it is.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The Committee on Military Affairs agreed to an amendment on this point, and on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. YOUNG] that amendment was made in order upon the consideration of this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will find the provision on that subject on the third page of the bill, which we have not yet reached.

The Clerk read as follows:

For department of instruction in mathematics, namely, repairs of instruments, $50; text-books and stationery for use of instructors, $30; in all, $80.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of line 42, page 3, add the following:

That assistant instructors of tactics commanding cadet companies at West Point shall receive the same pay and allowances as assistant professors in the other branches of study.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this was made in order by a vote of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. This was made in order to the Military Academy appropriation bill under a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote Monday week last. The amendment is recommended by the Secretary of War, by the Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point, and by the commandant of cadets. There are four instructors of tactics, and I believe there are six assistant professors. The assistant professors are officers of the Army, and remain on duty at West Point only four years. The assistant instructors of tactics are detailed, and remain for the same length of time. The assistant instructors of tactics have the same duties in reference to studies that the assistant professors have to perform. They have to instruct the cadets in tactics, and besides that they have to attend to the military duties outside, to the drill of the cadets and to field duties. It has been determined to be proper by the Secretary of War and the Superintendent that these gentlemen deserve the same pay and allowance as assistant professors. I think it is right and proper. This matter was examined by the Military Committee of the House, and they unanimously recommended it to the Committee on Appropriations to be included in this bill. The House on Monday week last, as I have already stated, by two-thirds vote made this in order to this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman from Georgia state how much will be the increase if this amendment is adopted?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. It will be a little over $1,000. It will be about $300 for each of these assistant instructors of tactics.

Mr. GARFIELD. How many are there?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Four.

Mr. GARFIELD. I recognize the equity of the general arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, and will not antagonize the amendment coming from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TREMAIN. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. These gentlemen, too, are under more expense.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. That is true; they are under more expense and have more unpleasant duties to perform.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be placed at its proper place after line 10.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move to add the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Military Academy band shall consist of one teacher of music, who shall be leader of the band, and may be a civilian, and of forty enlisted musicians of the band.

Sec. 2. That the teacher of music shall receive $100 per month, one ration, and the allowance of fuel of a second lieutenant of the Army; and that of the enlisted musicians of the band, ten shall each be paid thirty-four dollars per month, and the remaining thirty shall each be paid thirty dollars per month; and that the enlisted musicians of the band shall have the benefits as to pay, arising from reenlistments and length of service, applicable to other enlisted men of the Army.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order on that amendment, that it is new legislation and therefore not in order to this bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I hope my friend from Ohio will not insist upon the point of order. There is a bill before the House which has been pending for some time on the general Calendar (but which I fear we will never reach) for the increase of this Academy band. It is the only band in the Army now authorized by law. Heretofore and before the war there was a band allowed to every regiment and appropriation made to maintain it. There is now only one band allowed in the whole Army for which there is any appropriation, and that is the Military Academy band. It numbers now about twenty or twenty-five men, and the Superintendent of the Military Academy as well as the Secretary of War informs us that it is impossible to keep it up with the present number at the present pay of musicians. It is part and parcel of the military band of the country.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this is not new legislation?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. O, no; it is new legislation—

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Then I insist on my point of order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I regret it, but if the gentleman will yield for a moment I will ask to have read a communication from the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I reserve the point of order until the communication is read.

The Clerk reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
Washington City, January 7, 1874.

Sir: You will remember that during the present summer I spoke to you of the desirability of increasing the band of the Military Academy, and I desire again to bring the subject to your attention with a view of securing such legislation as will promote the efficiency of this the only band that is authorized by law for the Army.

I understand that at the last session of Congress a bill having this object in view was introduced and passed one House, but failed for want of time in the other. I now inclose draught of a proposed bill indicating the character of legislation that is desirable, and which is recommended in my annual report for 1873, page 21, and I trust that it or some measure embodying the features of this bill may receive the approval of Congress.

If it is not deemed advisable to have passed in its present shape, it might, perhaps, with propriety be incorporated in that portion of the Army appropriation bill relating to the Military Academy.

Very respectfully yours,

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN COBURN,
House of Representatives.

Several MEMBERS. The amendment is all right.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I have also here the recommendation of the Board of Visitors. I promised as one of the members of the Board of Visitors to see to this matter for them, and I hope there will be no further objection to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have a statement here of the effect of the proposed change. Under the present organization there is one leader, who receives seventy-five dollars a month; there are six first-class musicians, receiving each thirty-four dollars per month; there are six second-class musicians, receiving each twenty dollars per month; there are twelve third-class musicians, receiving each seventeen dollars per month—making a total per annum as it now stands of $7,236. Under this organization the band has one leader and twenty-four musicians.

The proposed organization will give them in place of one leader and twenty-four musicians, one teacher of music and leader at $100 per month, ten musicians at thirty-four dollars per month, and thirty musicians at thirty dollars per month; that is to say, one leader and forty musicians at a total cost per annum of $16,080, which will be an annual increase of $8,844.

It is fair to say that the Committee on Appropriations has considered this, and there was a difference of opinion among them as to whether it ought to be inserted in the bill. This, however, was mainly on the ground that it was new legislation; and as we did not ourselves wish to inaugurate new legislation, the committee resolved to let it stay out. If the House desires to make this increase it will give sixteen more musicians than we now have, at a cost of $8,844 per annum.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Against $7,000?

Mr. GARFIELD. I mean an increase of $8,844. The present cost is $7,236. The proposed cost under the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia will be $16,080.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he has not papers in his possession from the War Department, and the Military Academy also, recommending this appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir; the Committee on Appropriations had those recommendations before it. I simply rose to state exactly how the case stands.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I desire also to say that this has the unanimous approbation of the Committee on Military Affairs after investigating the subject. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] will not insist upon the point of order. There is only one such band in the country.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Yes; only one Army band.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists on his objection the amendment will have to be ruled out.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I do insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment is not before the committee.

Mr. FIELD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill these words:

Provided, That the President of the United States be authorized and directed to fill any vacancy occurring at said Academy by reason of death or other cause of an person appointed by him.

Mr. SENER. Is not that new legislation?

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FIELD. It does not increase the expense. It is not new legislation. It merely provides that in the event of a boy appointed by the President failing by physical or other disability to pass the examination, the vacancy so created can be filled.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Has not the President that power now?

Mr. FIELD. He has not. There are now two vacancies existing by reason of his inability to fill them. The expense is precisely the same, and we may as well have this costly academy filled by the youth of our country and allow them to have the full benefit of it. I call for a vote. My amendment does not change existing legislation nor does it add to the expense required to maintain the Military Academy at West Point.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I desire to say to my friend from Michigan that there is nothing in the law to prevent the President doing that now.

Mr. FIELD. The President informs me that he cannot do it. The law is ambiguous, and this amendment will make the duty of the President plain with reference to filling vacancies that may occur among the number of cadets appointed by him at "large."

Mr. GARFIELD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is new legislation.

Mr. FIELD. Who makes the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FIELD. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I insist that this is not new legislation of the character covered by the rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. The appeal from the decision of the Chair is not debatable.

Mr. FIELD. It is frivolous to make such an objection to this proposition, which does not increase the appropriations.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] raises the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FIELD. Certainly I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 94, noes 26.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and Mr. FORT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration, pursuant to the order of the House, the bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876, and the bill (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876, and had directed him to report them back with amendments, with the recommendation that they do pass as amended.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876, with amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876, with an amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. This bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations appropriates $364,740. The amount appropriated in the bill of last year was $339,835. There is an increase therefore in the bill this year over that of last year of $24,905. This consists mainly in an increased appropriation for continuing work on the new hospital for cadets, and a new item of appropriation in the bill this year for the construction of school-houses for soldiers' children and furniture for the same, $8,000. In almost all other respects the bill stands the same as last year. No amendment has been made in the Committee of the Whole except one in regard to the pay of instructors of infantry, cavalry, and artillery tactics, which I understood the gentleman who offered it to say will make but a small increase to the bill. I submit in further explanation of the details of this bill a letter from the War Department, addressed to the Hon. S. S. MARSHALL, member of the Committee on Appropriations, who had charge of this bill in the committee and who I regret is not here to manage the bill himself. I have delayed action on it as long as I thought it was safe to do so, in the hope he would return.

The following is the letter from the War Department :

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January, 4, 1875.

DEAR SIR : Since my conversation with you about Military Academy matters I have written to the Superintendent, and have his reply concerning the museum, the school-house, and the employment of a principal mechanic. I quote from his letter, as follows :

"As to building for military museum: From time to time articles made for military purposes, or models of such articles pertaining to the Engineer, Ordnance, and Quartermaster's, and other Departments of the service have been sent to or procured for the academy for use, by way of illustration, in the education of cadets; also, articles valuable as relics connected with military events, or from personal or other association; that such quantity of articles has thus accumulated as to require room for its proper use and storage not now available. The only room available, and which has not capacity for present wants, is in the academy building. It is proposed, if an appropriation for a building shall be had, to collect in one building what articles suitable for the purpose are now on hand and establish the foundation for a military museum. A collection of the kind does not now exist in this country. The intention is, as far as may be possible, to collect and arrange specimens, and when such cannot be had, models of all kinds of cannon, with carriages, muskets, or other arms, with ammunition for same, manufactured in our country, appliances of the Quartermaster's Department for field transportation of stores and shelter of troops, &c., of the Medical Department for field purposes, and of the Subsistence Department, the different kinds of equipments from time to time used, and in fact a collection which shall illustrate the military history of this country in so far as relates to appliances for War; also to collect as many articles, valuable from personal and historical association, having relation to the military history of the country, as may be practicable.

"A collection of the kind suggested would be of value and interest not only to the military student, but any citizen of our country visiting the academy.

"A building for this purpose could also, by proper arrangement of room, be used for the purpose of lectures, examinations, and other like objects for which there is now no suitable provision, necessity requiring the use of the library or other building, to the detriment of its proper use."

The foregoing are the Superintendent's views. The Secretary is principally interested in the matter, because such a collection of military material would greatly augment the value of the instruction upon the subjects to which the models might refer, and also the interest of the cadets themselves, and would, by adding to their efficiency as military officers, benefit the country at large. He is rather in favor of making the proposed museum at West Point technical in character and particularly devoted to the instruction of the cadets, believing that a national military museum, if established at all, should be located at the capital of the nation. He therefore recommended in his report the appropriation for a museum upon the grounds I have stated above.

In regard to a post school at West Point, the Superintendent writes as follows :

"The post school, at which the attendance this winter has usually been about eighty, has, for want of a better place, been kept for quite a number of years in a room which is part of the basement of the soldiers' chapel. The room is inadequate as to size, badly located as to surrounding buildings, being adjacent to barracks, and not susceptible of good ventilation. The room has capacity for about fifty, and gives no means of separating the very young children just beginning from the older ones. No special effort should be made to establish what is usually called a graded school, but means of making a division of those just beginning from those advanced and older would be very beneficial. It has been my intention, should an appropriation be made, to build a plain building with two school-rooms. The item for the school building does not depend at all on that for a teacher. The building is as necessary now as if a civilian were employed as teacher."

The Secretary directs me to say that if it is deemed inexpedient at this time to make appropriations for both military museum and post school, he deems the latter of greater importance than the former, and thinks the school-house should have preference, as such a building is of present necessity on sanitary grounds as well as expediency, will cost a comparatively small amount, and no further appropriation on such account will be necessary.

I quote literally what the Superintendent says with regard to the hire of a principal mechanic. He seems to regard the employment of such a person as a permanent necessity. But if the suggestion he makes be approved by the committee, the item for the employment of a principal mechanic could with propriety be omitted from the appropriation bill :

"With respect to the item for the hire of a principal mechanic, I would say that the services of such a person have always been necessary here. Heretofore it has been necessary, when such a person has been employed, to charge his services for the particular time specified to the appropriation to which the work he did applied.

"In this connection I would like the attention of the committee invited to the propriety of making one item of the appropriation for repairs and improvements and the hire of mechanics of $22,500 instead of dividing into two, one of which for materials is $14,500 and one for hire of mechanics of $8,000. The total amount for both is no more than sufficient for the necessities of the academy and post from year to year; but it is impossible to always adjust a year in advance, with respect to necessary work the expenditure for mechanic hire to cost of materials on a fixed ratio, when the kind of labor and of materials vary according to the nature of the work. The matter is further complicated by the difficulty of estimating in advance for the labor of enlisted men as mechanics and otherwise, which is always availed of as far as possible and is an important element, but not easily determined for any particular work, owing to the varying necessities of the post and character of the work.

"Should these items above specified be consolidated, there would be no special necessity for the items for a principal mechanic, as a suitable mechanic for the purpose could be employed when necessary. The services of such a person have heretofore been had for about fifty cents more per day than a mason."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. F. BARNARD,
Private Secretary.

Hon. S. S. MARSHALL,
House of Representatives.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF AN AMENDMENT.

Mr. FIELD. I ask unanimous consent to have printed an amendment which I desire to offer in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the bill now pending in relation to the tariff and the increase of the revenue.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COTTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4688) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; which was read a first and second time, recommended to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent for the reprinting of the Army appropriation bill, as I understand the edition is nearly exhausted.

There was no objection, and the order to print was made.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, GLOUCESTER, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4689) to donate condemned cannon for inclosing the soldiers' monument at Gloucester, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4690) relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF JURORS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4691) to regulate the compensation of persons appointed to attend upon grand and other juries, and for other necessary purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to report back from the Committee on War Claims the bill (H. R. No. 4156) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

I will state that the bill has only been completed by the clerks to-day, and I take the first opportunity in my power to ask that it may be acted on by the House. I will state that the committee were authorized to report at any time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GUNCKEL. On Monday I moved that the rules be suspended, and the following resolution was adopted :

Resolved, That the rules be so suspended that House bill No. 3341, entitled "A bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union," shall be reported by the Committee on Military Affairs on Saturday, the 13th day of February, at two o'clock p. m., and be considered in the House, and that the previous question shall be called upon the same at four o'clock on that day.

Mr. DAWES. I am obliged reluctantly to raise the question of consideration as between this bounty bill and the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The bounty bill comes up under a suspension of the rules, and is entitled to be considered in preference to other business; but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. DAWES. I do.

Mr. RANDALL. Between what?

The SPEAKER. Between the bounty and the tariff bills.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The revenue bill is a bill to pay foreign bondholders, and the bill for which I speak is a bill to pay a debt which we owe to our own soldiers.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest that the reports made yesterday from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if he proposes to close debate upon his tariff bill to-day, or whether there are not many long speeches yet to come?

Mr. DAWES. That is the very reason why I want to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPEER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the soldiers' bill goes over to-day, when will it come up again?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. SPEER. Then, if we go into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill, it is a practical defeat of the bill to equalize soldiers' bounties.

The question was put upon the consideration of the bill in relation to bounties; and on a division there were—ayes 96, noes 48. So the House resolved to consider the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to report back from the Committee on Commerce several surveys, and to have them printed for the benefit of the House and the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that; many of these surveys relate to works in his own State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the regular order, and the Clerk will proceed to read the bounty bill.

Mr. DAWES. The question was between the bounty bill and the bill in relation to the revenues of the country. The House has decided to proceed with the bounty bill, and I think they should do so.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] yields to me to ask a committee of conference on a bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman now demanding the regular order will maintain it so that some business may be done. The Clerk will read the bounty bill.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier, including those borne upon the roll: as slaves, who faithfully served as such in the military service of the United States, who have been honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one-third dollars a month for all the time which such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and 9th day of May, 1865.

SEC. 2. That in case of the death, either before or after the passage of this act, of any such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow, if she has not remarried, or, if there be no widow, or she has remarried, then to the minor child or children of such deceased non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier.

SEC. 3. That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, or to his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid under the provisions of any United States or State laws.

SEC. 4. That no bounty under the provisions of this act shall be paid to or on account of any soldier who served as a substitute in the Army, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged, on his own application or request, for other cause than disability incurred in the service, prior to the 19th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to re-enlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and such person did actually so re-enlist, or accept promotion, or was so transferred. And no bounty shall be paid to any soldier discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

SEC. 5. That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically, under oath and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty has been paid under the provisions of any United States or State laws to the non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, by whom or by whose representative the claim is made.

SEC. 6. That the widow, if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow, or she has remarried, the minor child or children of any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, whose enlistment was for a period less than one year, and who was killed or died while in the line of duty, during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or who shall have since died by reason of wounds received or disease contracted while in such service, shall be entitled to receive the sum of $100.

SEC. 7. That in case the bounty due any person under this act shall amount to a sum not less than $100, it shall be at the option of such person to receive from the Government, through the Second Auditor of the Treasury, in lieu of such bounty, a warrant, not subject to assignment, receivable at any of the land offices of the United States in full payment of one hundred and sixty acres of any of the public lands subject to entry by homestead or purchase; and for any lands located with said warrants, patents shall be issued without requiring proof of either residence or settlement.

SEC. 8. That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than ten dollars for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall forever thereafter be excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatsoever against the Government of the United States.

SEC. 9. That it shall not be lawful for any soldier to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other paper, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act. And all such transfers, assignments, barter, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended to be so conveyed by any such soldier.

SEC. 10. That in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of this act shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representative of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive, in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same, and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

SEC. 11. That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, or his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, shall be made, unless the application be filed within five years from the passage of the same.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question before he enters upon the debate.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I should like to explain this bill first, and then I will answer any questions gentlemen have to ask. I would like to explain it just as it is.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Will not the gentleman allow me to ask a conference on Senate bill No. 320, fixing the number of paymasters in the Army?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I will yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state here that for the remainder of the session, if no member insists upon the regular order, it will be the duty of the Chair to do so, because no business can be done if at every moment the business pending may be interrupted by requests for unanimous consent. There must be the regular order.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire first to say that this is bill No. 3341, and that by direction of the committee I shall move to strike out section 6, the provisions of which have been already provided for by a bill introduced and passed on motion of Governor WARD, of New Jersey; and also section 7, which provides for the donation of lands, and which we withdraw in deference to the wishes of gentlemen from the West.

Mr. KASSON. That is just what I wanted to know.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I shall move at the proper time to strike out both sections.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Mr. Speaker, the House has kindly given two hours for the special consideration of a bill to equalize soldiers' bounties. It was reported at the last session from the Committee on Military Affairs, but on the point of order that it appropriated public money it was sent under the rules to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it has quietly rested ever since. Hoping to hasten its consideration, I moved at the last session to suspend the rules and pass the bill, but one member cried out in a loud voice that "it will take four hundred million acres of the public land" and another added, "Yes and a hundred million dollars from the Treasury." No debate was permitted; I was not permitted to deny their statements nor explain the provisions of the bill; and I was not surprised to find that the bill failed to receive the requisite two-thirds vote.

Let me assure the House, in the very beginning, that so far from taking four hundred million acres of public land, we do not take a single acre; and that instead of $100,000,000, it will require from the public Treasury much less than we appropriated a little while ago for the payment of invalid pensions.

And yet it is a bill in which more than one hundred thousand of the brave men who fought the battles of the war for the life of the nation are interested; and not only they, but several thousand widows and orphans of those who died of wounds received or sickness contracted in the service of the country. They beg no charity, seek no gratuity. They ask justice. They believe that the Government owes them a debt, a just debt, more than ten years ago promised, but still unpaid; and all they ask is that the Government pay what is honestly due them.

I beg, therefore, that you will put all prejudice aside and give their case a patient hearing and a fair consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire by way of reminder to gentlemen on both sides of the House to send to the Clerk's desk the platforms of the two great political parties of the country, the platforms on which both the republicans and democrats on this floor were elected. I shall ask him first to read, from McPherson's Manual, plank 8 of the republican platform. It is the boast of the republican party that it has fulfilled every pledge it ever made, and I believe that from the formation of the party down to the present time, it has fulfilled all its pledges with two exceptions; one was the civil-rights bill. We have done what we could in this House to redeem our pledge in that respect. The other was to equalize bounties; and I now ask my republican colleagues on this floor to make good that pledge also.

The Clerk read as follows:

We hold in undying honor the soldiers and sailors whose valor saved the Union. Their pensions are a sacred debt of the nation, and the widows and orphans of those who died for their country are entitled to the care of a generous and grateful people. We favor such additional legislation as will extend the bounty of the Government to all our soldiers and sailors who were honorably discharged and who in the line of duty became disabled, without regard to the length of service or the cause of such discharge.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That was a distinct pledge to equalize bounties.

I now ask the Clerk to read plank 9 of the democratic platform, found on page 210 of McPherson's Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

We remember with gratitude the heroism and sacrifices of the soldiers and sailors of the Republic, and no act of ours shall ever detract from their justly earned fame for the full reward of their patriotism.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The republicans charged that these were "glittering generalities," really meaning nothing; while the democrats claimed they covered quite as much as the republican platform, and as fully included equalization of bounties. But to remove the objection and relieve the question of all doubt, many of the States placed special planks in their platforms, pledging the democratic party to this measure of justice. I ask the Clerk, as a specimen of these, to read from page 158, McPherson's Manual, the sixth plank of the platform of the democratic convention of Indiana, merely adding that the Pennsylvania one is substantially the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

That justice and equality demand that all soldiers who enlisted in the military service of the country during the war of the late rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, shall have a bounty granted to them by Congress in proportion to the time they may have served, whether that time shall have been for three months or a longer period.

Mr. GUNCKEL. With both parties thus distinctly and solemnly pledged, the soldiers had a right to expect a speedy remedy at the hands of the Forty-third Congress. Several months passed and nothing was done. Then there commenced coming petitions from all parts of the country, signed by thousands and tens of thousands (one petition has two thousand names to it) of our best citizens, reminding us of our promises, stating the existing hardship and injustice, and asking for the one and only remedy, equalization of bounties. Even Legislatures were moved to memorialize us on the subject. Witness this one from the State of Wisconsin:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, ask leave to call the attention of Congress to the fact that the bounties paid to soldiers of the late war have not been, but should be, properly equalized. The soldiers having entered the service at the beginning of the war have received, if they served as enlisted men for a period of two years or over, a bounty of $100 at the time of their discharge, and an additional bounty of $100 under a subsequent act of Congress, but they received no local bounty. The soldiers, however, who entered in the latter part of the war received a bounty of $100 per annum and large local bounties in addition thereto.

Your memorialists also ask leave to call attention to the fact that a great many soldiers entering the Army at the early stage of the war were discharged on account of disease, or to enable them to accept commissions, before the expiration of two years, and did not, therefore, receive either the original or the additional bounty.

Justice, as well as the interests of the nation, demands that the bounties should be equalized. Justice, because the class of soldiers first referred to have done as much, if not more, service than the class entering the service at a later period, and should, therefore, receive at least equal compensation. The interests of the nation demand such equalization, because the present inequality, if permitted to remain, would have a tendency to prevent, in case of a war, voluntary enlistment at a time when troops would be most needed, and force the nation to resort either to draft or exorbitant bounties.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully pray that an act equalizing bounties be passed at as early a day as possible.

Approved March 3, 1874.

W. R. TAYLOR,
Governor.

Obedient to these demands, gentlemen have from Monday to Monday introduced bills to equalize bounties, until their number has become so large that if I felt quite sure that all who introduced bills would vote for one upon its final passage I would have more than enough to pass this bill and could spare the House the infliction of this speech.

All these petitions, memorials, and bills, together with hundreds of letters, have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; and I have done what is rather unusual, I have carefully read them all. I have desired to learn every complaint and to ascertain exactly what the evil was, so that a full and proper remedy might be applied. And as I think something of the same kind will help the House to a proper understanding of the subject, I will give a few cases, as specimens of classes, taken from these memorials and petitions.

A petition from Danvers, Massachusetts, states that many enlisted between July and December, 1861, and served nearly two years, but by reason of disability contracted in the service were prevented from serving out the full term, and so received no bounty. Some served within a few weeks and some within a few days of the full term of two years, but never received one dollar of bounty; while others served nearly the full term of three years and yet received but fifty dollars bounty.

A number of Pennsylvania soldiers complain (as indeed do men from all the States) that although they enlisted for and served faithfully for three years, that because they were promoted for gallant conduct in battle, and did not serve the whole time as privates, they have been deprived of their bounties. In some cases men served as privates twenty-three months, in others thirty-five months, but being promoted even in the last month of their service, they lost more in bounty than they gained in increased pay. Practically, they were punished because deserving promotion.

Some soldiers of the Thirty-ninth Ohio state their case thus: They enlisted for the term of three years under the President's proclamation of May 3, 1861, before the 22d day of July, 1861; but by the failure of the officer to correctly date their enlistment and of the United States mustering officer to muster them into the service before August 6, 1861, they have received, and under existing laws, as construed by the Treasury Department, can receive no bounty.

Soldiers from Missouri, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, and West Virginia who enlisted for six or nine months, or any period less than one year, were excluded on a decision by the War Department that they were not volunteers but militia. Some of these soldiers were in the hottest engagements, did the hardest duty, and performed most gallant service, and although they were promised bounty, have never received one dollar.

The surviving members of the First Tennessee Mounted Infantry say that they enlisted in the service and served faithfully until they were discharged, but it so happened that they enlisted between the dates of two calls; that soldiers enlisted before and after received full bounties, but they received nothing at all. The officers held that they were too late for the one call and too early for the other. They say that in their isolated position they knew nothing about these things; they only knew that their country needed their services, and that it was their duty to go into the Army and do the best they could.

Some of the enlisted men of the Fourth Iowa Regiment complain that they were enrolled prior to July 22, 1861, but on account of being ordered beyond the limits of the State of Iowa, were not regularly mustered into the United States service until subsequent to August 6, 1861, and so deprived of bounty.

Many touching appeals come from widows and orphans, who plead that as their husbands and fathers gave their lives (having died since the war, but from sickness contracted in the service) and so all they could give, they should have the bounty promised and believed to be due from the Government, but which for some cause or other is denied them.

And now to show how these inequalities and wrongs have originated and been continued, I will state a case of a Connecticut regiment, which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] attempted by a distinct provision of law to meet. The men enlisted in June, but, without any fault on their part, remained in camp until the 6th of August before they were mustered into the United States service, and so were ruled as not entitled to bounty. My friend's amendment provided that any soldier mustered in before the 6th of August should be entitled to bounty. But the Second Auditor held that as these men were mustered in "on" and not "before" the 6th of August they were not included, and so they were again ruled out, and remain unpaid to this very day.

I will state another very hard case, and I commend it to the notice of the New York delegation.

The United States called for three-years men. The State of New York did not wait for that call. Her Legislature provided for enlisting two-years men, and accordingly thirty-eight New York regiments were mustered into the United States service for two years. They served faithfully and were honorably discharged, but have been denied bounty because they did not come under the call. Should they suffer for the mistake or fault of the New York State authorities? Should the Government of the United States attempt to avoid payment on such a quibble?

Let me give one other case, because a frequent one, and I will close this recital. Take the case of men who, for instance, served one year eleven months and perhaps three-quarters of a month, who were then taken sick, sent to hospital, and being permanently disabled and so of no further use to the Government were then sent home, and have been sick ever since—disabled for life. These men, simply because they did not serve the full two years—because they were physically unable to do so, having been used up in the service and the Government chose to dismiss them to get rid of further support—have been deprived of their bounties.

I have thus given you illustrations of several classes of cases where hardship and injustice seem to have been done and where a remedy is justly demandable from the Government.

But before I speak of remedies, let me ask how came these inequalities, this injustice? The men all claim that these bounties were promised, that it was a part of the contract under which they enlisted, and that they are debts justly due them from the Government. Is this so? And if so, why have they not been long ago paid?

I hold in my hand Raff on Bounties, and in it find some sixty different acts of Congress relating to bounties, together with the proclamations of the President of the United States, orders of the War and Treasury Departments, and a digest of the various decisions of officers thereunder. To these must be added innumerable proclamations of governors, orders of State officers, statements of military committees, and promises of recruiting officers. From this "confusion worse confounded" I think we may get clearly three things: First, that the general purpose of the Government was to pay bounties to all soldiers at the rate of $100 per year, or, as clearly expressed in the act of July 4, 1864, to pay $100 to one year's men, $200 to two years' men, and $300 to three years' men; second, that the common, general understanding of the people and those entering the service was that bounties would be paid at the rate of $100 per year to all soldiers for whatever term they enlisted; third, that by reason of the many fragmentary acts, hastily passed as each emergency demanded, some of them naming special amounts for particular terms of service; and by the strict construction and severe technical rulings of the Departments, many just and deserving cases have been ruled out and bounties refused, which in common justice ought to be paid and at the earliest day possible.

The United States has already paid nearly $400,000,000 in bounties. Compared with this amount it will take but a trifle to pay the remainder, and so cancel the entire debt and relieve the Government from its last obligation. It will have to be done some time. Why not meet it boldly now and dare to do justice to the gallant men to whom we are really indebted for our national existence and all that is near and dear to us as a Republic?

Mr. McKEE. Will the gentleman tell us just how much it will take from the Treasury?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I will come to that in a few minutes, and then I will cheerfully answer any question relating to that part of the subject.

Now, to meet all this inequality and injustice, we have carefully prepared a bill which we think will answer every complaint, reach every difficulty, and meet every reasonable expectation of every soldier in the whole country. It adopts what is well known as the equalization principle. It provides—

That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier (including those borne upon the rolls as slaves) who faithfully served as such in the military service of the United States, who have been honorably discharged from such service, the sum of $8.33 a month for all the time which such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 9th day of May, 1865.

But that no bounties shall be paid to any but such as are really deserving, it provides that no bounty shall be paid to or on account of any soldier who served as a substitute, or who was a captured prisoner at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged on his application or request or on the application or request of parents or guardians or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I observe in the bill the words "including those borne on the rolls as slaves." I do not understand that there were slaves on the rolls.

Mr. GUNCKEL. They were slaves at the time. I think there was a provision at one time early in the war that the money should be paid to the masters. Now it will go to the men. There is no distinction on account of color.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. They were slaves then?

Mr. GUNCKEL. Yes; when first put on the rolls.

Now, the important question is—and I have been asked it several times—what will this measure cost? Satisfied of the justice of this claim, the Committee on Military Affairs have made it their great labor to find out some method of doing the right thing to the soldier and at the same time making as little draft upon the Treasury as possible. We have spent days and weeks upon this work; and we think we have reported a bill which does full justice to all the soldiers, and is yet so peculiarly framed and so carefully guarded that it takes a much less amount from the Treasury than any bill of this kind heretofore reported to the House.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. But I hope it does not do any injustice.

Mr. GUNCKEL. It does not; it does justice to the soldier, and at the same time to the Government. And as illustrating this, I refer to the second section of the bill, which provides that in case of death the bounty shall be paid to his widow if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow, or she has remarried, then to the minor child or children of such deceased soldier. The usual provision is to give to the widow, whether she has remarried or not, and in case of her death to the children, whether minors or not; and if there be no children, then to the father or mother, and if no father or mother, to the brothers and sisters. This change will cut down the cost of the bill several millions of dollars. And it does no injustice. If the widow shall have so far forgotten her husband as to have loved and married somebody else, she has no meritorious claim on the bounty of the Government by reason of her former husband's services. So we see no good reason going beyond the minor children. It is some ten years since the war closed, and most of those who were then children are grown up, married, and presumably able to support themselves without Government aid.

The bill introduced by my good friend Governor WARD, of New Jersey, was a most generous provision, and I think the House did itself credit by passing it. It was a section of our bill, but much more expensive as you passed it. Governor WARD said it would cost $600,000. As we had it, it ought not to have cost more than one-half that amount.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, arose.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I prefer to go on and answer questions when I am through.

We made the bounty $100, you made it $200; we confined it to widows who have remained unmarried and to minor children only. You gave it to the widow in any and every case and to the children, whether minors or not, and also provided for the father, mother, brother, sister, &c., and the result is an extra expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars. I speak of that simply to show how carefully we have tried to guard the bill and avoid any large expenditure of money.

Again, we provide in section 3—

That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, or to his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid under the provisions of any United States or State laws.

And by so doing we cut down the cost of the bill nearly one-half. For the information of the House, I will append a table showing the local bounties paid by the several States:

Now, when were these large local bounties paid? Late in the war, during the last year or two of the war. And how much to each soldier? Why some got $500, some $800, others $1,000, and others still from twelve to fifteen hundred dollars, and this in addition to the Government bounty, while the poor fellows who enlisted early in the war, and from purely patriotic motives, got sometimes neither local nor Government bounty; and I am glad to say that the men who got these large local bounties do not ask anything further from the Government. In all the petitions, letters, &c., examined by me I did not find one from this already much-favored class. We think this deduction just, and as it is one of the leading features of the bill, I will say once for all that I cannot yield for a motion to strike it out.

Without stopping to explain the bill any further, as you have printed copies before you, I return to the question, what will it cost? General Schenck, in the Thirty-ninth Congress, estimated his bill at $30,000,000. Henry D. Washburn, in the Fortieth Congress, estimated his at the same amount. Mr. Krebs, in the Forty-second Congress, estimated a bill similar to General Schenck's at $20,000,000.

Now, I beg special attention to the important fact that three bills alluded to were broader and more expensive than the one here now pending. I think they would have cost a third or a quarter more than this one will, if not amended in the House. And then you should consider that since the time of those estimates many men have gone abroad or have died; many have died without leaving widows or minor children; so that the amount required under the same bill would be considerably less than four or six years ago. If these gentlemen calculated with reasonable accuracy, and I presume they did, I would be safe in asserting that this bill would not require more than $20,000,000.

Mr. WILLARD. Did not the Paymaster-General estimate $100,000,000 for Schenck's bill?

Mr. GUNCKEL. Yes, he did. I was just about to allude to it myself. I have his estimate before me. And let me say right here, that, so far as I know, neither he nor the Comptroller, nor the Second Auditor, has ever made an estimate on the present bill. We examined them all before the Military Committee and prepared our bill afterward; and in the light of what they told us, and what we could learn from all other sources. I shall be willing to admit that they are not very favorable to equalizing bounties at either the War or Treasury Department. With all deference, I fear they have no great respect or sympathy for a private soldier of the volunteer service at the War Department. And at the Treasury Department, naturally enough, they look to the Treasury only—seeking to get as much in and let as little out as possible. We have seen how strict, severe, and technical they have been in construing the old laws; what favor can we expect from them in estimating for a new one?

I hold in my hands the official estimate of J. M. Brodhead, Comptroller of the Treasury, on Judge NIBLACK's bill, dated February 15, 1874, and in it I find this statement:

January 15, 1873, the Paymaster-General submitted to Hon. JOHN COBURN, chairman of House Committee on Military Affairs, an estimate of the amount required to carry out the provisions of H. R. No. 89, known as NIBLACK's bill, the amount being $137,275,105.94. * * * My estimate on the first-named bill (H. R. No. 89) was $101,947,825.00.

A slight difference in the estimates of these two officers of only $35,327,280.00!

Now mark. These two officers, both capable and honest, with the same data before them, doing a work they had often done before, estimate the cost of the same bill and differ $35,000,000! Is it not mere conjecture—guess-work? And are we to deny our soldiers and refuse to pay a just debt because of such guess-work? But let us go a little further. Where do they get their data? From the Adjutant-General. Well, I have here General Townsend's testimony, and we shall see how reliable are the data. I will ask the Clerk to read the portions I have marked.

The Clerk read:

Mr. GUNCKEL. Have you furnished data for the estimate of cost of equalizing bounties to Paymaster-General and Second Auditor of the Treasury?

General TOWNSEND. I have done so in various forms. I have done so in a complete form in 1873 to the Paymaster-General. The statement is found on page 1540 of volume 88 of the Congressional Globe for 1873.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Are the figures given there taken from records or are any of them estimates?

General TOWNSEND. It would be seen by reading the report that some are estimates. For instance, the average duration of service is estimated.

Mr. GUNCKEL. How do you approximate the average duration of service?

General TOWNSEND. By taking the muster-out rolls of several regiments and striking an average between the dates of enlistment and discharge.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That would be a mere estimate; and all that you claim for it is that it is approximation?

General TOWNSEND. Yes. I suppose that the estimate would exceed the reality, for it is safer to overestimate than to underestimate; but I do not think that the basis of calculation would be affected to the amount of $10,000,000.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The work would run over a period of years?

General TOWNSEND. Some of the bounty laws limited the payment to two years. This one of Senator CLAYTON's does.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That would be as to the filing of applications; but would it not be from three to five years before all of these bounties can be claimed and settled?

General TOWNSEND. Certainly it would at least be ten years, even with an increased force.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Examine in the Congressional Globe the statements made by the Paymaster-General and yourself, and say, first, whether a man who enlists and re-enlists is counted once or twice in your estimates?

General TOWNSEND. The statements do not give evidence on their face as to that; but inasmuch as they are filed for the whole period for which bounty is allowed, I believe that both enlistment and re-enlistment are counted in the aggregate.

Mr. GUNCKEL. What do you find to be the total number of enlisted men during the war in the service of the United States?

General TOWNSEND. The total number of men enlisted during the war, deducting certain classes that were to be excluded from bounties, was 2,109,639.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Do you mean to say that there were that many individual soldiers enlisted during the war? Does it include any one man twice by reason of re-enlistment?

General TOWNSEND. Yes; it does include men twice.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Are you sure of that?

General TOWNSEND. I did not prepare the statement in person; but I think it does.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Do you deduct those who resigned with a view to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States?

General TOWNSEND. Those are not deducted.

Mr. GUNCKEL. How many would that class probably embrace?

General TOWNSEND. I cannot guess. It would require a long and difficult research to ascertain the number.

Mr. GUNCKEL. There is a deduction made in that table for bounties already paid; would not these amounts be larger at this time?

General TOWNSEND. They would be very large.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That would be an important element in the calculation?

General TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That calculation is on the assumption that every one entitled to a bounty applied for it?

General TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Here, then, we see how the boasted data upon which all estimates have been based are obtained. General Townsend, who is one of the most intelligent and reliable officers in the Army, does not claim accuracy for the figures given, but frankly admits that some of them are probably incorrect and others mere estimates—attempts to approximate the truth; that the tendency is to overestimate; and that the total given may exceed the real amount in the sum of $10,000,000. Coming down then to the real truth, the Paymaster's figures are a mere estimate upon an estimate of the Adjutant-General; an estimate upon an estimate; a guess upon a guess! And yet it is upon such figures that Congress is to be frightened from doing its duty and paying an honest debt.

If time permitted, I could show you that they are not even good at guessing. Why, what do they do? They take every soldier that was ever put on paper at the War Department, whether in the Army or not, and, as General Townsend admits, those that re-enlisted are counted twice. So they figure up the total number of men enlisted at 2,574,608. Then they make the average time of service to be thirty months. Remember there were three-months men, six-months men, and nine-months men, and that of those who enlisted for one, two, or three years many deserted soon after enlistment, and very many others were killed or sickened and died long before their term of service expired. Who believes there were 2,574,608 men in the service who served an average of thirty months each? And yet that is the basis of their calculation; for they figure what it would cost to pay that many soldiers for thirty months each at the rate of \$8.33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per month, then deduct what has already been paid in bounties by the Government, and hold the balance as the true amount required to equalize bounties. Was ever a statement more unfair?

Why, when one of the former bounty laws was pending a similar estimate was made that the cost would be $200,000,000, and yet they have nearly all been paid under that law, and the actual amount is less than one-third the amount estimated.

Now, sir, I have had a calculation made, not by the Paymaster-General, nor yet by the Comptroller or Second Auditor; but made by an intelligent, reliable gentleman, educated and trained in one of their offices and thoroughly competent for the work. We all know that such work or calculation is not made by the head of a Department or Bureau himself, but by some one in their employ. I have deemed it best to go to the original source without the ordinary circumlocution. I shall not trouble the House to read the statement, but will print it in my remarks, and I venture to say that the only mistake about it is that it is much larger than the actual truth will sustain. For he has taken the data of the Adjutant-General, which the Adjutant-General himself admitted might be $10,000,000 too much.

A MEMBER. What is the total?

Mr. GUNCKEL. The total is $29,728,634.86; but with General Townsend's deduction it would be only about $20,000,000. And mark, that is not to be paid at once. General Townsend said in his testimony it would take ten years to pay the bounties. So if this estimate is correct, it would only take two or three millions per year.

But if this be a debt, a just, honest debt due from the Government to the soldier, what matters it whether it be a little more or less? It is not a question of amount, but of obligation. What matters it whether the national debt be $150,000,000 or $1,500,000,000? What matters it whether $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 be required to pay the pension-list? Whatever the amount, they are honest debts and must be paid. An honest man does not hesitate about paying a debt because it happens to be large; and no more will an honest Government. We are careful to pay the bondholder; let us be just as careful to pay the soldier; and I venture the remark that if the republican party had been half as careful to pay the debt the Government owes these soldiers as it has been to pay according to the letter and spirit of the contract the debt we owe our foreign bondholders, the party would not be in a minority to-day.

Now, to show how the justice of this proposition has been heretofore recognized, I call attention to the vote upon a similar bill introduced and reported in the Thirty-ninth Congress by my predecessor, General Schenck. It deducted local bounties, but was more expensive in other respects than the present bill. Indeed, I think it would have cost one-third more. And yet on the final passage of that bill the yeas were 139 and nays 2. The yeas were Mr. Nicholson, of Delaware, and Mr. Trimble, of Kentucky, neither of whom has ever been heard of since they committed this act of political suicide. And now who voted in the affirmative? Without troubling the House with all the names, I will give those that are members of the present House. They were Mr. Speaker BLAINE, HEZEKIAH S. BUNDY, HENRY L. DAWES, (I am not mistaken, it is really HENRY L. DAWES,) CHARLES A. ELDRIDGE, JAMES A. GARFIELD, (I hope my colleague is not disposed to go back on that creditable vote,) ROBERT S. HALE, SAMUEL HOOPER, WILLIAM D. KELLEY, WILLIAM LAWRENCE, S. S. MARSHALL, LEONARD MYERS, WILLIAM E. NIBLACK, (I am glad to say that my democratic friend, Judge NIBLACK, has always been the soldier's friend; indeed, a bill introduced by him is the foundation of the bill which we report to-day.)

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] whether he thinks any member of this House will vote against this bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I simply know that when I tried to have the rules suspended and pass the bill at the last session, I could not obtain a two-thirds vote; indeed, I got but little more than half of the House. I think it was largely because, under the rules, the bill could not then be explained, and so was not generally understood. I shall hope for better things to-day.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I think we shall pass this bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I sincerely hope so; and if we do, how many, many hearts will gladden at the news! When interrupted I was giving the names of those in the present House who voted for equalization of bounties in the Thirty-ninth Congress. Those not already named were SAMUEL J. RANDALL, PHILETUS SAWYER, GLENNI W. SCOFIELD; and the friends of Mr. FINCK of Ohio, Mr. ORTH of Indiana, and Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, found it necessary to say that those gentlemen were absent, but if present would vote for the bill.

Among the yeas I find the names of several gentlemen now in the Senate: WILLIAM B. ALLISON, of Iowa; ROSCOE CONKLING, of New York; THOMAS W. FERRY, of Michigan; JUSTIN S. MORRILL, of Vermont; and W. B. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts; and the names of some distinguished gentlemen not now in either branch of Congress: John A. Bingham, at present minister to Japan; Columbus Delano, now Secretary of the Interior; John F. Farnsworth, George W. Julian, E. H. Rollins, Thaddeus Stevens, (a worthy example for the Pennsylvania delegation,) Samuel Shellabarger, Robert C. Schenck, at present minister to England; Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, &c.

Now, were all these gentlemen right in voting as they did? If equalization was right then, why wrong now? If the debt was acknowledged just then, shall it be repudiated now?

But a similar bill was again presented to the Fortieth Congress (when my distinguished friends from Massachusetts and Ohio, Messrs. DAWES and GARFIELD, were in the House) and passed without a call of the yeas and nays, and, so far as appears, without a dissenting voice. After these repeated recognitions of the justice of the claim, how can we longer refuse payment?

But, Mr. Speaker, I have already detained the House much longer than I intended. A few words more and I have done.

The House will bear me witness that I have never advocated or voted for any job, subsidy, or scheme of extravagance. If my record is faulty, it is because I have kept too severely to the strict line of economy. But I do not believe in repudiation, and least of all repudiation toward our soldiers. I pay my own debts; I want the Government to pay its debts. The fact that these are old makes the obligation only so much the greater. We have been liberal to the officers; shall we not be just to the privates? For, forget it as you may, it was the private who did the fighting and to whom belongs the real credit for the great victories and grand results of the war.

I close by quoting the words of Hon. George W. Julian, of Indiana, used in advocating a similar bill six years ago:

Equality is equity, and the nation cannot refuse to heed this maxim in dealing with the brave men who protected the law-makers of this Capitol during the war and saved the country itself from destruction. Nor do we accept the plea of national poverty so often urged in the light of the boundless resources developed by our war of four years. The amount required for a fair equalization of these bounties, we are sure, has been much overstated; but whatever it may be it is just, and should be provided for without unnecessary delay. With the soldier there was no task too great, no sacrifice too large, no duty too arduous, no hardship too severe; but with an alacrity that marked their earnestness in the cause, they cheerfully responded to every order, claiming none other shield than the consciousness that their banners were the emblems of liberty, of justice, and of truth. The prayer of these men must neither be denied nor evaded when they only ask the nation for justice.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Let me ask the gentleman a question: Whether, according to the decisions of the Treasury Department, a very large number of soldiers who were enlisted in the service and served for nine months, until the expiration of their service, were prevented from receiving any bounty at all by a technical ruling of the Department; and whether the Second Auditor, Mr. French, does not state that he considers that class of men the most meritorious that went into the service?

Mr. GUNCKEL. The Second Auditor commenced paying them, supposing they were volunteers fully competent under the law. The War Department found out they were not volunteers, but militia, and under some old law the President had the right to call out the militia; and therefore the nine-months men and others who served for less than a year were treated as militia and ruled out. The Kentucky and Indiana men were ruled out on that mere quibble, for it was nothing else.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. But is it not the fact that they were actually mustered in by United States mustering officers, placed under command of United States officers, taken into the field in Virginia and other States, and served just in the same way as other soldiers?

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. And paid by United States paymasters.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Yes, sir. But when it came to this bounty question this point was raised, that if they had not been in the service for a year they were not in the United States service and therefore were not to be paid bounty.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Precisely so; and a bill has been introduced by my friend from Indiana [Mr. CASON] for the relief of Indiana men who did gallant service at New Orleans, and were deprived of bounty on the technical ruling that they were not volunteers but merely militia.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Pennsylvania furnished twenty-seven thousand of that class of men at a time when the demand for troops was very great; when the Army had been defeated on the peninsula, and at the time of the second Bull Run; and they were immediately brought into the Maryland and Virginia campaigns. And the same is true of Ohio and some other States. These men have been deprived of this bounty to this day, and have failed in any way to get any recognition of their services to the country. This bill proposes to reach a class of men, too, who were in the service for a less period of time. The bill is meritorious, just, and fair all the way through. It provides that there shall be deducted from the bounties of the men entitled to the same, any local or other bounties they may have received, and in that way equalized; and that then it shall be ascertained whether they come under the general terms of the law, which provides there shall be paid $100 for one year's service and makes that the basis of the calculation. Nine-months men will get seventy-five dollars.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA.) To whom does the gentleman from Ohio yield.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For how long?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I desire only to make a short statement, and an inquiry for information. I see that the bill provides in paying these bounties for a deduction of any bounties paid to soldiers under existing laws. Now see how that will work. I wish the gentleman to explain if he has thought of it, and has any intention to remedy the injustice that will arise. My State paid an extra bounty all the while, adding to the pay of the soldier every three months ten dollars, making forty dollars a year, as a gratuity in excess of his pay. That is to be deducted in paying the soldiers of my State. They are to have deducted any bounty they may have received, and they did receive a bounty from the State. My State then is to be taxed to make up a hundred dollars a year to the men of other States who did not have either the generosity or the means to pay their boys this little extra allowance. Now, if you are going to pay them all $100 a year, why assess on Connecticut this $100 a year for the soldiers of other States? I think it would be quite equitable to make an allowance to Connecticut of all that it paid in bounties to its own soldiers. The gentleman says that this is a debt due to the soldiers of the country. Connecticut at the close of the war had a debt of $10,000,000, which she has now got down to $5,000,000, because she treated her soldiers generously; whereas some States that did not pay their boys anything extra are out of debt and are going on their way rejoicing. Now, sir, if you are going to pay this extra bounty, I think you should refund to Connecticut, Vermont, and other States which have already paid these bounties that which they disbursed for this purpose.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That is a very long question, but long as it is, very easily answered. These inequalities and this injustice of which I was speaking were mostly in the early part of the war, and the men who are asking simple justice are the men who enlisted early in the war, not for gain, but from patriotic motives.

Now, we provide in this bill that there shall be deducted local bounties. I am glad to be able to say, and I say it in justice to the American soldiers, that in all the petitions and memorials which I have read, not one of them has come from a soldier who received local bounty, because some of them got $800, some $1,000, some $1,200, and even as high as $2,000, in the shape of local bounties. We simply propose to give the poor fellows who early in the war enlisted from motives of patriotism, and who by the technical rulings of the Department have been deprived of what they think is absolutely due to them the bounty which they claim. I will have printed with my remarks a table, showing the local bounties paid by the States, towns, &c., and it will be found to amount to between two and three hundred million dollars. We are not trying to equalize as between States or localities but as between soldiers, doing justice to all alike. Besides, if the House should make the change which the gentleman from Connecticut suggests, it will add ten millions to this bill.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. CESSNA in the chair.) The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will now be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the words "private soldiers," wherever they occur in the bill, insert the words "sailors and marines."

Mr. MYERS. I am warmly in favor of the provisions of the bill now presented to the House, but that bill has an omission which I desire to have corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for debate?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I will yield him five minutes to explain his amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Make it ten minutes.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he proposes to allow any one to speak upon this bill except those who are in favor of it. Will he allow any one to explain amendments which they desire to offer?

Mr. GUNCKEL. It is a question for the House to determine whether they will take one day or ten days to dispose of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has twenty minutes of his time left, and yields five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.]

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I should not do justice to my own convictions if I did not attempt to supply the omission made in this bill. It is scarcely a wonder that the sailors and marines have been forgotten in this bill. In time of peace there are but eighty-five hundred of them. They are abroad most of the time, and cannot reach our ears by the presence of personal petition. But when platforms have to be made they are remembered whether we are speaking of bounties or gratitude to the defenders of the country. When the war was going on many of the naval battles were as brilliant as those on land. The battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac was as decisive on sea as the battle of Gettysburgh by land. Those on the Mississippi and Tennessee Rivers, at Forts Jackson and Saint Philip, and the contest between the Kearsarge and the Alabama, will never be forgotten by the American people. Congress did not forget them, for by the act of July 1, 1864, we enacted that persons enlisting in the naval service or in the Marine Corps thereafter should be entitled to the same bounty as those enlisted in the Army.

Some gentlemen may make objection that the sailor receives prize-money. Not half of the seamen received prize-money during the rebellion; and the average amount of prize-money that was received by the common sailors was not more than fifty dollars a man. Besides there is a gross wrong inflicted by law or usage on our sailors, to do away with which the Committee on Naval Affairs have reported a bill now on our Calendar which I had the honor to present and which I hope will be passed by the present Congress. Sailors on their enlistment have over sixty dollars deducted from their pay for clothing, an injustice inflicted by no other government and which the soldiers and the marines do not have to encounter. The soldier, and even the marine who treads the same deck with the sailor, is allowed his clothing annuily free of charge as a matter of the plainest justice. Therefore if an advantage in the shape of prize-money did sometimes come to our seamen in helping to put down the rebellion, it was more than counterbalanced by this deduction from the pay which their families should have received.

I may be asked how much my amendment will add to the expense of this bill. I feel confident it will not add more than five or six million dollars at the furthest. In December, 1863, the Secretary of the Navy reported to Congress that the enlistments during 1862 were about fifteen hundred and twenty-nine per month, and in 1863 that the average was two thousand a month—thirty-four thousand in all up to July 1, 1863; and remember this bill only allows bounty for the time of service. On July 1, 1864, Congress recognized the bounty principle for sailors, and those enlisting thereafter were declared entitled to receive the same bounty as if enlisted in the Army. We should not forget these men. The argument as to early enlistment without bounty applies just as much to them as to soldiers. Let us do justice to all the men who helped to save the country, seamen as well as soldiers.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Of the class to which the gentleman refers there were about one hundred thousand. It will take at least $100 each, or a little more, to equalize their bounties. Gentlemen can easily calculate what it will amount to. Among all these petitions and memorials I have found one only from persons of that class. I am willing, however, that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] shall be considered and disposed of by the House.

Mr. COMINGO. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I will hear it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two amendments already pending.

Mr. COMINGO. I will ask that it be read for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to have the amendment received and considered as pending.

The amendment was to add to section 1 the following:

And the provisions of this act shall extend to all soldiers who were mustered into the service of the United States and were subsisted, clothed, and paid by the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving that amendment?

Mr. KASSON. I object.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] yield to me?

Mr. GUNCKEL. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has fifteen minutes left.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD.]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This bill is one which if it becomes a law will require the expenditure of from thirty to one hundred million dollars. I understand from the gentleman who has charge of the bill that it will call for about $30,000,000.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I think $20,000,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] would add $10,000,000 more to the bill. Official estimates place the amount which this bill may call for as high as $100,000,000.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That is a different bill from this.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If we are going to make any such expenditure as this we should at least do justice and equity, and not tax one class of the people who have been generous in their treatment of the soldiers in order to pay the soldiers who went from another portion of the country, and who were not treated so generously by their States. Let me give an example. The State of Vermont was represented by its Legislature in extra session, called in April, 1861, at the very outset of the rebellion, before we could see through and before we anticipated the large calls for troops which were made, and when bounties were not needed in order to raise recruits for the war. The first call for seventy-five thousand men had then been issued. Our Legislature, determining to deal generously with its own soldiers, then passed a law that every soldier from Vermont who went into the war for the suppression of the rebellion should be paid by the State seven dollars per month, the money to be paid to the family of the soldier if he had one, otherwise to his order. That law was in force throughout the entire war. More than twenty-five thousand men enlisted from Vermont, served through their term of enlistment, and received for the whole time from the State of Vermont this pay of seven dollars per month.

This bill excludes every one of those soldiers from any participation in this bounty, except as to the difference between \$7 and \$8.33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per month. In other words, it says to the soldiers from Vermont, "Because your State dealt generously with you in the beginning you shall not participate now in this new bounty of the General Government; yet we will tax you soldiers of Vermont to pay bounties to soldiers who went from States which did not pay local or State bounty." That is not equity, that is not justice.

If we are now to attempt to equalize this matter of bounties, to say that the United States shall vote thirty or one hundred million dollars for the purpose of paying bounties to soldiers to whom it has not before paid bounties, then let us not except the men who happen to come from a State which felt called upon in the very outset to deal generously by its citizen soldiers. Let us stand here in this matter as the United States. When the United States later in the war offered a bounty of $100 a year, they did not except those who received pay from their own States or those who received pay from their towns and counties. Gentlemen say that this bill is for the purpose of equalizing that distribution of bounties. Why, then, do they turn round and adopt a different principle, excluding a particular class from the benefits of the act? Sir, if they do that, it will look very much as though States which had not been willing to deal generously by their own soldiers were ready now to come in here and tax the whole United States to do what they ought to have done and did not do.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Was it the generosity of Vermont that induced her to vote bounties to soldiers, or was it a desire to avoid the draft by sending to the South for slaves, or to Canada for aliens, to be enlisted in the Army of the United States?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. We did not do that.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] for three minutes.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GUNCKEL,] after making that insinuation, must allow me a single word more. I said at the outset that the law to which I referred was passed in April, 1861, when Vermont was ready, as she was all through the war, to furnish her proportion of soldiers. Why, sir, Vermont kept ahead of every call; and when the war closed we were ahead to the extent of our quota of a hundred thousand men, and we never sent beyond our own borders to obtain soldiers.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] proceeds I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] when he will be ready to yield to me for an amendment to insert the word "sailors?"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That amendment is now pending, having been offered by the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. MYERS.]

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Speaker, while I am always glad to vote for anything that looks toward equalizing bounties to our soldiers, as I have done several times since I have been here, I do not see how, with this provision for deducting State bounties in this bill, we can do justice to the soldiers in the different States. In my own State, not in the late stages of the war, but when the war first broke out and the echoes of the first guns of the rebellion reached us, we offered ten dollars a month to volunteers; and under the call for seventy-five thousand men five regiments of our own brave boys and men—not men imported from Canada or anywhere else—sprang to the front; and the General Government would take only three regiments of the brave men who first volunteered, not for the bounty, but for the flag and the Union of the States. The others were put in training in camp and one of them was afterward accepted; and after the battle of Bull Run the General Government was very glad to get the other regiment, which was the Fifth Connecticut Volunteers. The Supreme Court has decided that all soldiers who enlisted for three years and were accepted under that call for seventy-five thousand men were entitled to $100 bounty, whether they served the full three years or were discharged before that time for any good cause or for disability to serve longer.

What is the result? When our men had been in camp two months, every man in the ranks was mustered in within the time required; but the mustering officer arrived so late that the commissioned and regimental officers were not mustered in until the day after the time expired, and the muster of the regiment dates from the muster of the field officers of the regiment. On account of that single day fifty or one hundred men of the Fifth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers have been deprived of their $100 bounty from that time to this, to which they were entitled by the decision of the Supreme Court. A bill to remedy that injustice has been passed by the Senate and sent to the Military Committee of this House, who will not report it because they want to put through this general bill. I introduced a bill to pay those men their bounties, to which they were entitled under the proclamation of President Lincoln, in the last Congress, and the Military Committee said it was sufficient for the purpose, and it passed both Houses and became a law. The bounties were refused on a mere technicality; and a bill is now before the committee to pay those men what the Supreme Court of the United States have decided they were entitled to receive.

Now, I say, if you will make this general bill right and strike out this deduction of State bounties I will vote for it; but because our State chose to pay ten dollars a month to her soldiers in the first part of the war and other allowances to the soldiers and their families all through the war, I cannot consent that such payments shall be deducted in any equalization of bounties paid by the United States Government when you are now, long after the war is over, equalizing bounties among the soldiers of the several States on the part of the General Government. I cannot vote for this bill unless you strike out that provision in regard to State bounties, for not a soldier in my State would get a dollar under this bill. There is no justice in it. What the State or the town chose to give the volunteers under State laws you have nothing to do with. All we have asked is to pay our soldiers what you agreed to do under Mr. Lincoln's first proclamation; and you are not willing to do that. You want us now to help pay your soldiers additional bounties in the large States, when you were not generous enough to give them anything while the war was upon us; and you refused to pay our volunteers anything, because our State was patriotic and generous enough to give them State bounties at the time.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill to which the gentleman refers applies to Connecticut troops and other New England troops; and it would require an appropriation of $1,000,000. But it does not equalize bounties at all. Therefore our committee oppose it, as I know the House also would.

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill does not take $100,000 out of the Treasury to pay what is honestly due our soldiers, or one-half of it; and all we ask is what the Government agreed to pay them.

Mr. GUNCKEL. It would take $1,000,000. I have the official figures here, given by the Second Auditor of the Treasury.

I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK.]

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, I am very much gratified at the action of the Committee on Military Affairs in reporting the bill now under consideration. The committee have done me the honor, I believe, to adopt as the text of the bill a measure which I introduced early in the present Congress, and which I have kept before Congress for several years past. I understand that the bill reported is my bill, with two or three amendments which the committee have authorized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] to propose.

I am also gratified by the statement of the gentleman from Ohio (who has examined this question) that the enactment of this bill will not call for the expenditure of nearly so much money as we have been in the habit of supposing for several years past, from estimates of the Treasury Department. I have never believed that it would cost a very large sum of money to equalize substantially all bounties and do justice to soldiers who under existing laws have not received the bounty to which they are fairly entitled.

The gentleman from Ohio is also right when he says that a class of soldiers who have been excluded from bounty under the existing law have reason to complain of the action of the Government in that respect. And if injustice has been done by the rulings of the Treasury Department or the War Department, it devolves upon Congress by appropriate legislation to correct the injustice thus inflicted. This bill we are assured will make such correction; if not completely, it will substantially do so.

It has become a part almost of the common law of this country, especially of the States which furnished the greater portion of the soldiers during the late war, that the soldiers shall be fairly treated in every manner concerning their compensation. It has been so declared substantially by law; so declared in political platforms; so declared in proclamations of the President; so declared in the speeches made by gentlemen who were understood to represent the views of the Government in this respect.

There is but one way in which the soldiers who have been excluded from their just rights in regard to bounty can be fairly treated; that is, by giving them something like an equality of compensation with respect to others similarly situated. But the most remarkable feature in connection with this whole subject is that the class of soldiers who were first to volunteer, who really rendered more important service during the war than any other class, have proportionately received the smallest pay. Those soldiers who volunteered toward the closing years or months or weeks of the war have received proportionately the greatest amount of bounty, though from the necessity of the case they rendered the smallest amount of service.

I trust that this bill will pass in some shape. Even though it may ultimately fail for want of the concurrence of the Senate, let us show that this House is not insensible to the obligations resting upon us as a matter of honor as well as duty.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] raised an objection to the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. COMINGO.] The State of Missouri had eleven regiments of men who under an agreement between the governor of that State and President Lincoln were in 1861 mustered into the service, as other soldiers were, for three years or during the war. They were clothed and fed, subsisted in all respects, paid by the Government of the United States, and mustered in as United States soldiers. We have always believed that under existing bounty laws they were entitled to be regarded as were other soldiers; but through the technical construction which has been placed on those laws, not any stronger or broader in their character than the first section of this bill, these eleven regiments have never received a dollar of money. Yet, sir, they served faithfully and well in the Union Army.

Mr. McNULTA. What was the character of the service rendered by these troops?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Let me say to the House that the service done by these men was of a character very different from that done by soldiers who went farther south. It was believed necessary, on account of the disloyal element in the State of Missouri, that the homes and property of the loyal men should be protected. The loyal men of the State had sent their able-bodied force to the front. This plan was entered into between the President and Governor Gamble, in order that we might get a force for our own protection and security. It is in the memory of the House that the whole State of Missouri was a battle-field and every man there in these three years of service not only had to engage in the battles of the State, but was constantly called upon to defend his own home.

I hope the House will agree to the amendment proposed by my colleague, [Mr. COMINGO,] so as to make this section sufficiently plain to give these eleven regiments bounties, so that the question will not be left to the interpretation of the Second Auditor. They are entitled to it. They were regarded in all respects as soldiers mustered into the service of the United States. Their service entitles them to it; and if there were any troops in the service of the Government who ought to have bounty, it is certainly these eleven regiments of Missouri troops. Nearly all the other soldiers who served for three years have received some bounty. These men have not received a single dollar. The mustering in of these troops enabled them to have the troops from Illinois and other States, which had been sent to Missouri to keep it in the Union relieved and sent to other places.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I think the first section of the bill covers those troops, and no amendment is needed.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I think this first section of the bill will cover them, but I want to have the language of the bill so prepared that when this comes back to the Second Auditor—for as it is now it is no stronger than many other laws from the benefits of which these eleven regiments have been excluded by the technical construction of the Second Auditor—he will be prevented from placing the same technical interpretation upon it and again cutting them out from the benefits of this law. I wish to have it made so plain that he who runs may read. These men are entitled to bounty and they ought to have it. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw his objection and permit my colleague [Mr. COMINGO] to offer his amendment so the House may vote upon it.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The bill already includes them, and I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I recognize fully the claim of these Missouri soldiers, referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER,] who last addressed the House. I believe the bill now before the House very clearly embraces them, and I believe after the declaration of that fact on the floor of this House the Second Auditor will hesitate to put any such construction upon the law as has been intimated.

But I wish to answer, as well as I may, a proposition made by several gentlemen on this floor, and especially by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD,] that this bill is iniquitous, because of the fact it leaves inequality between the different States of the Union. I take it that this is a bill for the purpose of equalizing bounties of soldiers and not for the purpose of equalizing the expenses of the States.

I know of no State obnoxious to the objection urged here. I know in the States where I am familiar in the West there were as large bounties paid as in any other State I know of, perhaps as large as any in the country. Wherever these local bounties have been paid, whether in Vermont or Indiana or anywhere else, they have gone to the benefit of the soldiers, and to that extent in those States their soldiers were better provided for and better paid than the soldiers from the other States. We wish to put them all on an exact equality as to these bounties; not in reference to localities, but as among comrades, among the men who stood shoulder to shoulder in defense of the country; who laid down in the trenches side by side; who were out together on outpost duty joined in a common danger; the men who nursed their wounded fellows and buried their dead—we want that they all shall stand side by side upon exact equality so far as these bounties are concerned. We want that the men of Vermont shall be made equal with the men from Indiana; that the men from Connecticut shall be made equal to the men from Ohio. We want all these soldiers, from whatever State they may have come, shall still be recognized as comrades equal before the law in reference to pay and emoluments. Very many worthy soldiers have been ignored in bounty laws heretofore passed. Very many nine-months soldiers were shot down in line of battle, and their widows and orphans have been deprived of one dollar of bounty. So with other classes referred to by the gentleman from Ohio.

I say again, this is a bill to equalize bounties among soldiers, and I hope it will be passed before we adjourn to-day.
[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States;

The bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

The bill (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of William J. Coite.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1296) to authorize the acceptance in behalf of the United States of America of certain real property occupied by the United States consul at Tunis.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives was requested to correct a verbal error in the bill (H. R. No. 4546) "to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States," by adding in the enrolled bill an "s" to the word "alien," line 11, page 6, of the engrossed bill.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3341) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. SMALL.]

Mr. SMALL. I merely want to say that this bill in my judgment is most unjust in its provisions and will be in its operation. While my State paid her soldiers during the entire war $300 to three-year men, $200 to two-year men, and $100 to one-year men, and town bounties besides, and has provided since the war for reimbursing the towns, New Hampshire soldiers will not get one dollar under this bill, but she will be compelled to help to pay the soldiers of the other States. I protest on behalf of my State against the passage of this bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I have one minute remaining of my time, and yield half a minute to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.]

Mr. SHANKS. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "slaves," in line 5, insert the words "and Indians."

Mr. GUNCKEL. I have no objection to that amendment being admitted as pending.

Mr. COMINGO. I offer the following amendment:

Add to the first section these words:

And the provisions of this act shall extend to all soldiers who were mustered into the service of the United States and were subsisted, clothed, and paid by the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman offer that in lieu of the former amendment?

Mr. COMINGO. I do.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes. I will then return him the floor, that he may move the previous question.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield to the gentleman on the understanding that my right to the floor is not prejudiced.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is fair that the House should fully understand how much will be taken out of the Treasury by this bill. I therefore want the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] to listen to me and see if I state it correctly. He has kindly lent me his statement of the expense of this. I understood it was made by gentlemen who were furnished to him by the Second Auditor to make out that statement.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I said it was made up by men who were in the employment of the Second Auditor—by men who had been in the habit of making up these estimates.

Mr. DAWES. What is their business now?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I do not think I am called upon to say.

Mr. DAWES. Let me state to the House that this estimate as to the expenses seems to have been brought down to $58,752,532.29, and then there are deductions made in another handwriting, which I recognize I think as that of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GUNCKEL.] That is the gentleman's subtraction from the statement which these men made to him. I suppose that without doubt they are according to the gentleman's own convictions. I do not doubt that but these gentlemen who made out the statement for him, who have been in the employ of the Second Auditor and understand the business, have brought it down to fifty-eight millions, and my friend from Ohio has by other means satisfactory to himself brought it down to $29,728,000; or say in round numbers twenty-nine and three-quarter million dollars. He states further to the House that in his opinion it might safely be brought down to $20,000,000. That is the honest conviction, I have no doubt, of the gentleman from Ohio; but I call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentlemen who have been in the employ of the Second Auditor, and are the men who know all about it, and as I understand from the gentleman were employed by him, of course to bring it down as low as their conscience would admit, have brought it down to fifty-eight million.

My friend could not get it from the papers before him above twenty-nine and three-quarter million dollars. He has been able to satisfy himself in his zeal and earnestness in advocating this bill that the amount which this bill would take out of the Treasury would be only $20,000,000. He tells us that it will take ten years to get the whole amount out of the Treasury, because it will be ten years before all the claimants get ready to present their claims. But does he not understand that the Treasury must be ready to meet the demand at once, for they cannot tell how many of these claimants will not be ready within the ten years? So that the best statement the gentleman can present to the House is that the amount will be twenty-nine and three-quarter million dollars. He has reduced the statement of the gentlemen whom he employed to make an estimate from $58,000,000 down to twenty-nine and three-quarter million dollars.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment to enable me to read a telegram which I have received from the Second Auditor of the Treasury?

Mr. DAWES. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I telegraphed to the Second Auditor of the Treasury, asking him how much this bill would draw from the Treasury, and he answers me:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1875.

To Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
House of Representatives:

My attention has not been called to the details of this bill, but the bounty bill which was under consideration by the Committee on Military Affairs at the last session would call for $100,000,000. The committee has the testimony of the Second Comptroller, Second Auditor, and I think of the Paymaster-General and Adjutant-General upon that point. Of the two last I am not sure.

E. B. FRENCH.

Mr. DAWES. I am taking the case as the gentleman from Ohio presents it to the House; and according to his statement there is this $30,000,000 in round numbers to be added to the existing deficit of $35,000,000, making $65,000,000, when the Committee on Ways and Means find the House exceedingly impatient, and reasonably and properly so, in the last hours of the session, to debate a bill that only proposes to bring $35,000,000 into the Treasury.

I ask gentlemen, however they may feel toward the soldiers of the country, to look to the honor of the nation, and not let this Congress adjourn until they meet the obligations of the Government; and I ask them also to put a bill to meet those obligations before a bill that will take out of our depleted Treasury such a sum as this.

Mr. SYPHER. I would ask the gentleman, suppose this bill does take $100,000,000 out of the Treasury, will we not save that amount in the next democratic administration?

Mr. DAWES. Let us save it first.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I move the previous question, and I presume that after the previous question is seconded I shall be entitled to my hour to reply to the assaults that have been made upon this bill; and I want my colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to remain and hear me when I take the floor to answer their remarks.

Mr. DONNAN. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has no time to yield to anybody.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I rise to a point of order. Does not this bill require a two-thirds vote for its passage?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is not this the first day on which the bill has been considered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is being considered under a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote of the House.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 86, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Mr. DAWES. I ask a further count.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. GUNCKEL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 91, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put, being first upon the amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Have I a right to the floor now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the gentleman has the right to the floor.

Mr. GUNCKEL. If I had been told that the gentleman from Massachusetts—I was about to say the Senator from Massachusetts—could be capable of being so unfair as he was a little while ago, I would not have believed it. Now, what has he done? After my two hours had expired he induced me to give him five minutes just before the question was to be taken on seconding the previous question, and then he throws before the House a statement in reference to this bill which is wholly incorrect and calculated to mislead those unfamiliar with the facts. And he gets my colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to help him prejudice the case and injure the bill with a telegram, in reference to an old bill not before the House and different in many particulars from the present one. My colleague, if he had been here and had heard my remarks, would have known that I was careful in giving not only my figures but two written statements in connection with this matter which give him all the facts, and the data on which I made my statement. If he had listened to me he would have found that the statements I presented showed deductions, large deductions, from the amounts estimated as the cost of former equalization bills. What more? I called the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to the facts and figures, and among other things to the testimony of Adjutant-General Townsend, in which was an admission that the estimates were probably too large and would justify a deduction of $10,000,000.

The statement shows, too, on its face, a large deduction by reason of a clause in this bill deducting local bounties, a deduction not anticipated by the gentleman who made the statement, yet fully justified by the facts.

The case simply is, that I take a statement prepared for a general equalization and modify it to suit the pending bill, and as I give all the data, the House can judge whether the deductions are proper or not.

More than that, I also gave him a statement of my predecessor in this House, Mr. Schenck, of Mr. Washburn, of Indiana, who reported a bill to the Fortieth Congress, and also of Mr. Krebs in the Forty-second Congress, justifying my own estimate fully in every particular. And I showed that in the Forty-second Congress the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] voted for a bill which if then passed would have taken from the Treasury from eight to ten million dollars more than this bill will require. And both of those gentlemen were elected to Congress upon a platform which distinctly declared that the republican party was pledged to equalize bounties; and yet because this bill does not happen to suit New England, which spent a great many thousand dollars in local bounties—

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. And you want us to help you pay your bounties.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Well, why should you not? The objection does not come from the South, which must pay her share of this bounty, and yet will get no benefit therefrom. I hope the soldiers of the country will notice it comes from New England and from New York. New York had thirty-eight regiments in the service, and upon a mere technicality thousands of her brave soldiers have been ruled out of their bounty, which was as honestly due to them as any debt in the world. My distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is very careful that the foreign bondholder shall be paid not only according to the letter but the spirit of the law; yet he seems unwilling to pay these poor private soldiers, many of them disabled, scattered all over the country, who are coming to you session after session and making an appeal for simple justice. They ask you to simply pay them what you owe them and have owed them these many years past. And whether large or small, if we mean to be honest, we should pay, and without further delay.

Mr. COBURN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield for five minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COBURN. The objection to this bill is that it does not equalize bounties; that the expenditures that have been made by the States cannot be reimbursed in this way. As my colleague on the committee [Mr. GUNCKEL] has said, this is not a proposition to reimburse the States, but so far as it can do so it is a proposition to equalize bounties to soldiers.

The bounties that were paid toward the last of the war were very much greater than those paid at the beginning of the war. But the House should always remember that the most meritorious soldiers were those that went out in the early part of the war. Members from New England talk about the large bounties that their States and their localities gave to their soldiers. Now, I do not know, I have no means of ascertaining, and I think no one has the means of estimating the amount of local bounties given by the counties, towns, cities, and States. That is a matter that can be ascertained only by a very long and thorough investigation requiring months and perhaps years to get through with it.

I know it to be the fact that in many of the Western States very large local bounties were given. The city in which I live, but a small city, gave bounties to the amount of more than half a million dollars, perhaps a million dollars; I cannot say how much exactly. The various townships gave local bounties. But they are not now asking that any equalization of those bounties shall be made. It is not a question in which the people as a people, or the localities as localities, are complaining or have any right to complain. That was a matter of patriotism; a matter purely voluntary; a matter in which they undertook to aid the Government in their own way. That was a matter that was outside of any legal enactment, and ought not now to be taken into the calculation any more than the money that was expended for the benefit of the soldiers through the sanitary commission. There were hundreds and thousands of methods by which the people throughout the entire North gave bounties and aid and sustenance to the soldiers.

The Committee on Military Affairs, after going over this whole matter and trying to come to some kind of equitable adjustment, thought that this adjustment of local bounties would come as near to equalizing bounties as any other kind of calculation. Therefore they provide in this bill that these local bounties shall be deducted. If gentlemen are disposed to cavil at this matter, as they seem disposed to do to-day, and require that each soldier shall have the same amount of bounty from the beginning to the end of the war, in proportion to the time he served, they will not be able in the lifetime of any soldier to make the calculations necessary to enable them even to approximate to a correct result. What we propose to do by this bill is to give $8.33 a month bounty to every soldier for the time he served, deducting therefrom the amount of State or other local bounty he received.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER,] after which I think I shall call for a vote and yield no further.

Mr. POLAND. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. SPEER. I will do so.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. POLAND. The Senate has passed without amendment the bill of the House for correcting the Revised Statutes. But they have adopted a resolution recommending the addition of the letter "s" to a single word in the enrolled copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution of the Senate will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN SENATE OF UNITED STATES, February 13, 1875.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to correct a verbal error in the bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States, by adding in the enrolled bill an "s" in the word "alien," line 11, page 6 of the engrossed bill.

Mr. POLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the reference to section 2160 be corrected in the enrollment by adding the letter "s" to the word "alien," in the first line of that section.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3341) to equalize the bounties to soldiers who served in the late war for the Union.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, I heartily sympathize with the object of this bill. While I do not believe that absolute equality will be reached by its passage, yet it is a step toward equalizing the bounties due to our soldiers. Hence, although it will not accomplish complete equalization, it certainly deserves, in my judgment, the favorable consideration of this House.

The objection, and the only objection, urged to its passage is that the national Treasury is not able to sustain such a draft upon it as will be made by this measure. Now, I beg to call attention to the fact that though the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] are guarding the Treasury as it is their duty to do, and in that effort are attempting to defeat the passage of this bill, yet both of those gentlemen voted for the Choctaw claim, which would take out of the Treasury four or five million dollars. And there is now pending in the House the Hennepin Canal bill, which, if passed, will take out of the Treasury before that canal shall be completed from ten to twenty million dollars.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I insist that that statement shall not be repeated. I deny its truthfulness. No estimate of the cost of that work has ever gone higher than $4,000,000.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman has a right to his opinion, and I have a right to mine, and I declare my deliberate judgment that less than ten millions will not complete that work. I want to call attention to the fact that by a two-thirds vote of this House a day was set apart for the consideration of that bill. I affirm that the Hennepin Canal and the Choctaw claim, if they should be passed, will take out of the Treasury dollar for dollar as great an amount as this bill will; and I desire that the country shall observe what members of this House go on the record in favor of those two propositions, and yet, when a matter of justice to the men who have shed their blood for the flag of the country is before us, cry out that the National Government cannot afford to pay them. If we can build the Hennepin Canal, if we can pay or twice pay (as I believe the proposition is substantially) the Choctaw Indians, we can afford to do, at least attempt to do, justice to the men whose bravery in the field against a gallant foe and whose sufferings and sacrifices have saved us a capital, a country, and a home.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy the attention of the House but a moment. I would not speak at all upon this question had I not myself introduced a bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served during the rebellion. I did so because I felt there was a wide-spread conviction throughout the country that exact justice had not been done to our volunteer soldiers. In my view, it is the general conviction of the country that nothing short of an equalization of bounties as provided in this bill will close up the nation's account with the volunteers who came forward and saved the Republic.

In a nation like ours, relying as we do upon volunteers for the defense of the Government, supporting as we do so small a standing Army, I do not think it safe or wise to disregard the claims of the men who come forward in defense of the country. Just so long as there is a conviction throughout the land that anything else than exact justice has been done to the volunteers, just so long ought we to labor to remove that conviction and settle our account with the volunteers who saved the Republic.

I do not so much look at the amount that may be called for by the passage of this measure. I have hope and faith in the early revival of the business of the country. I do not believe that we are to be bankrupt, or that we are not able now and shall not be a year hence to meet this demand and the other demands that may be made upon us.

Every mail brings to me a letter from some soldier interested in the adjustment of this unsettled account. There is a general expectation that such a measure as this will be passed. I insist that the party about to go out of power in this House of Representatives cannot well afford to disregard the cry that comes up, not merely from the West and the Middle States, but from New England itself. I thank the gentleman from Indiana for the suggestion that this is a national matter, and that New England has no right to undertake to slough herself off and listen to such words as those of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD.] They are sectional; they are local. Rather let us look upon this as a national balance that we must meet and settle up before we can be justly considered as having squared our accounts with the noble men who saved the Republic.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Mr. Speaker, before calling for a vote I wish to make but two brief remarks. A while ago I said, when speaking of the amendment of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS,] that the sailors and marines numbered one hundred thousand, and that to include them in this bill would add about $1,000,000 to the expense of the measure. I find that the total number of sailors and marines is estimated at about one hundred thousand, a great many of whom have been paid. How many remain unpaid, and just how much additional expense would be involved in the amendment, I do not know.

A single other remark: The bill of General Schenck in the Thirty-ninth Congress deducted local bounties just as this does; and every New England member voted for it. As I have already stated, there were but two votes recorded against its final passage. I now call for a vote.

The first question was upon the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, to strike out sections 6 and 7 of the bill; which was agreed to.

The next amendment was that of Mr. MYERS, which was to insert after the words "private soldier" wherever they occur the words "sailor and marine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on Mr. SHANKS's amendment, as follows:

In the fifth line of the bill, after the word "slaves" insert "and Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. COMINGO, as follows:

And the provisions of this act shall extend to all soldiers who were mustered into the service of the United States and who were subsisted, clothed, and paid by the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the gentleman will yield to have the amendment offered to strike out "or State."

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The SPEAKER. Further debate on the amendment is not in order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DAWES. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and on that demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAWES. I will withdraw my demand if you will give us the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Of course.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DAWES. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 45, noes 46.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 177, nays 40, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albright, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bland, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Bundy, Burdard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Canfield, Cessna, John B. Clark, Jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Stevens, Storm, Swann, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Whitehouse, and Charles W. Willard—40.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Archer, Barber, Barry, Beck, Bell, Berry, Blount, Benjamin F. Butler, Amos Clark, Jr., Freeman Clarke, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Creamer, Curtis, Davis, DeWitt, Eden, Frye, Giddings, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Hendee, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Hynes, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Luttrell, Martin, McKee, McLean, Nesmith, Niles, Parsons, Pelham, Phelps, Pratt, Purman, Ransier, Rapier, Ellis H. Roberts, William R. Roberts, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Sheets, Sloan, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Tremain, Wheeler, White, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—72.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. CLEMENTS stated that his colleague, Mr. MARTIN, who was detained from the House by illness in his family, would if present vote in the affirmative.

Mr. RAINEY stated that his colleague, Mr. RANSIER, was absent by leave of the House on account of illness in his family, and that if present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WHITTHORNE said: I am paired with Mr. SCOFIELD, who if present would vote in the affirmative. I have concluded to vote in the affirmative myself, and therefore will have my vote recorded.

Mr. DURHAM stated that his colleague, Mr. BECK, was still confined to his room by illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. GUNCKEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WALDRON. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Ways and Means a bill for the relief of certain mining, manufacturing, and other corporations in the sixth collection district of Michigan.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I move to adjourn.

NEW HAVEN HARBOR, CONNECTICUT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA in the chair.) Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair lays before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in further answer to resolution of the House of January 21, 1875, in relation to the expenditure for increasing the facilities of commerce in New Haven Harbor, Connecticut.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The House divided on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 99, noes 57.

Mr. CONGER demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were ayes—31, noes 133; not one-fifth of those present.

Mr. MAYNARD demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MAYNARD and Mr. SENER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 35, noes 96. So (one-fifth having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. PACKER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the post-route bill.

Objection was made.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to make a privileged report—a report which the Committee on War Claims is authorized to make at any time. I desire to report from the committee a bill to pay the claims allowed by the commissioners of claims. This bill ought to go through, that it may be acted on by the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a question of order. The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA.) The gentleman from Missouri withdrew it.

Mr. RANDALL. My point of order is that he had no right to withdraw it after the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order. The yeas and nays had been ordered on the motion to adjourn by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote had been taken on the motion to adjourn, and the gentleman who made the motion had the right to withdraw it.

Mr. CONGER. Let me make one remark in regard to the business of the House. I ask gentlemen to hear me for one moment.

Several members objected.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn,

The SPEAKER pro tempore declared that in the judgment of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. O'BRIEN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 78, nays 96, not voting 115; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Bland, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Bufinton, Burchard, Caulfield, John B. Clark, Jr., Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Crittenden, Crossland, Danford, Durham, Eldredge, Farwell, Finck, Garfield, Giddings, Gooch, Gunckel, Gunter, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Hereford, Holman, Hutton, Harburt, Kasson, Kellogg, Magee, Marshall, McCrary, Merriam, Milliken, Monroe, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Orr, Orth, Pierce, Potter, Randall, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Ross, Milton Saylor, Sherwood, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Stone, Storm, Strait, Taylor, Thompson, Tyner, Waddell, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Charles W. Willard, William Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Pierce M. B. Young—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Albright, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Barber, Bradley, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick E. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Carpenter, Cason, Chittenden, Clayton, Coburn, Coogler, Crooke, Cronase, Crutcher, Dobbins, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Fort, Glover, Hancock, Harner, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hynes, Lawrence, Lawson, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McNulta, Mills, Niles, O'Brien, Packard, Parker, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Poland, Rainey, Rapier, Ray, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Saylor, Henry J. Scudder, Sener, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Charles A. Stevens, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thoraburgh, Townsend, Vance, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Whitehead, Whitthorne, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William B. Williams, and John D. Young—96.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Archer, Arthur, Barry, Bass, Beck, Bell, Berry, Blount, Cannon, Cossens, Amos Clark Jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Cox, Creamer, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Duell, Eden, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hathorn, Havens, Hays, Hendes, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hunter, Hyde, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamson, Lampport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Leland, Longbridge, Luttrell, Martin, McKee, McLean, Mitchell, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Nesmith, Nunn, O'Neill, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, James H. Platt, Jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Purman, Kansier, Read, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, William R. Roberts, Rusk, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheets, Sheldon, Sloan, Sloss, Small, Smart, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Wilber, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, and Woodworth—115.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, stated that Mr. LAMAR, of Mississippi, was detained at home by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has been recognized by the Chair. Only one gentleman can be recognized at a time.

REPORTS OF SURVEYS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce various reports of surveys referred by the House to that Committee without printing, and move that they be printed and recommitteed. This is necessary in order that the reports of the surveys may go to the Senate, to be considered in connection with the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Is that the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. STORM. I object.

Subsequently the objection was withdrawn and the order was made.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.] After he has stated the question to which he rises, the Chair will entertain the motion to adjourn.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am instructed by the Committee on War Claims to report a bill making appropriations to pay claims allowed by the commissioners of claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 4692) was received, and read a first and second time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask that the bill be now put upon its passage, and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I object to the bill because the committee have put in claims that have not been passed upon by the commission.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The committee have put in no claims that were not passed upon by the commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that the regular order of business is the business reported yesterday from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; but that can be postponed by a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill of the Committee on Ways and Means, or a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the appropriation bills, or by the introduction of any measure which a committee have leave to report at any time. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] announces that his committee was authorized to report this bill at any time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Pending the consideration of that bill, I have moved that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put that question in due time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I call the previous question on the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose that before we pass a bill like this we ought to have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read before the House is called to pass upon it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I insist on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FORT. I trust the House will not adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 16 members voting therefor.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. KELLOGG; and on a division there were—ayes 99, noes 46.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BASS: The petition of Esther P. Fox, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

Also, the petition of owners and masters of vessels at Buffalo, New York, that a harbor of refuge be built at the mouth of Au Sable River, on the west side of Lake Huron, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLARKE, of New York: Remonstrance of tobacco manufacturers and dealers of Rochester, New York, against an advance on the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COBURN: Petition of citizens of New Jersey, for the equalization of bounties, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of Mrs. Sarah F. Cowell, of Rome, Michigan, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Mrs. Liddy Middaugh, for bounty and arrears of pay due her deceased husband, Zine Green, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS: Eight petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, for a bounty of eight and one-third dollars per month to all soldiers, sailors, and marines for the time served by them, to the same committee.

By Mr. MAGEE: The petition of citizens of Newport, Pennsylvania, that the national credit be extended to the great southern line to the Pacific, and interest upon bonds of the company to be guaranteed by the Government, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Warren Gale, for extension of patent for improvement in straw-cutters, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SCUDDER, of New York: The petition of the Ship-Owners' Association of the State of New York, for an appropriation to improve Hell Gate, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: The petition of citizens of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, for the passage of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. SPEER: The memorial of John Dougherty, of Mount Union, Pennsylvania, in relation to safe, rapid, and cheap railway transit, and praying Congress to aid the Southern Pacific Railway, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 577 citizens of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, for congressional aid to the Southern Pacific Railroad, to the same committee.

By Mr. STORM: The petitions of Grech's Machine-shop and 7 others; Franklin Iron-Works and 44 others; Gibraltar Iron-Works and 27 others; Steam-forging of Reading Iron-Works and 14 others; Scott Foundry and 51 others; West Reading Boiler-Works and 21 others; Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company Rail Mills and 44 others; William McIlvain & Sons and 65 others; Union Boiler-Works and 40 others; Keystone Hardware-Works and 44 others; Seyfert, McManus & Co.'s Sheet Mills and 102 others; Seyfert, McManus & Co.'s Pipe Mills and 230 others; Reading Iron-Works, Blast Furnaces Nos. 1 and 2, and 60 others; Reading Iron-Works, Rolling Mills, and Nail Factory, and 265 others, of Reading, Pennsylvania, asking the Government of the United States to extend its aid to the completion of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, to the same committee.

By Mr. SWANN: The memorial of Henry J. Rogers, relative to his code of signals, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WOODWORTH: The petition of Jonah Woodward, to be reinstated on the pension-rolls, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 15, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The SECRETARY (Hon. GEORGE C. GORHAM) called the Senate to order, saying:

The Senate will please come to order. I am in receipt of this communication from the Vice-President:

VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
Washington, February 13, 1875.

DEAR SIR: Please inform the Senate that absence from the city for two or three days will prevent me from being present at its session on Monday.

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY WILSON.

Hon. GEO. C. GORHAM.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Secretary, I send a resolution to the chair.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Maine offers the following resolution, and asks for its present consideration:

Resolved, That in the absence of the Vice-President Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY be, and he is hereby, chosen President of the Senate pro tempore.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, nem. con.

Mr. ANTHONY thereupon took the chair.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that in the absence of the Vice-President the Senate has chosen Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, President of the Senate pro tempore; and that he make a similar communication to the House of Representatives.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FENTON. I am requested to present the memorial of Henry B. Dawson, esq., editor and publisher of the Historical Magazine, published in the village of Morrisania, New York, who complains that the postmaster at that place refused to mail the magazine, and although he represented the fact to the Postmaster-General that gentleman has refused to direct the postmaster at that place to mail his publication, greatly to his injury. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a large number of petitions of working men of Reading, in Berks County, Pennsylvania, who ask for some aid to the Texas Pacific Railroad. They believe that an appropriation by Congress to this great work will restore confidence and give labor to a great number of persons who now need it very much. I have several petitions of the same nature from working people employed in different manufactories in the city of Philadelphia. I move that all these petitions be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, presented a memorial of Eugene Armendiaiz and others, praying Congress to pass an act authorizing them to become a body-corporate with a franchise to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River at Brownsville, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a memorial numerously signed by citizens of Northern Dakota and Northern Minnesota, in favor of the early passage of the bill now pending in Congress for the division of Dakota Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SCOTT presented three petitions of citizens of Berks County, Pennsylvania, praying that the aid of the national credit be extended to the completion of a great southern line of railway to the Pacific; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORTON presented a petition of 100 women, tax-payers of the District of Columbia, asking that the District government bill be so amended as to read "all citizens, irrespective of sex, otherwise duly qualified, shall be competent to vote for such officers as are made elective;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented a memorial of citizens of Hallowell, Maine, stating that disastrous injury will be done to innocent holders of municipal bonds unless by a law of Congress a sure and certain method is provided for enforcing the judgments of United States courts in cases where municipal officers by resigning evade compliance with judgments and writs of mandamus of United States courts, and praying Congress to pass a law which will remedy this evil; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBERTSON presented a petition of over twelve hundred citizens of South Carolina, asking Congress for an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of all intoxicating liquors, to take effect on the 1st of January, 1876, or as soon thereafter as possible; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, South Carolina, asking an appropriation for the purchase of a site in that city for a depot for the United States light-house establishment; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLAYTON presented a petition of citizens of Hot Springs, Arkansas, asking that a receiver be appointed to take possession of the Hot Springs reservation in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented the petition of Jane E. Slamm, of Prince George's County, Maryland, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOGY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, remonstrating against the imposition of any additional tax upon manufactured tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON. I present a memorial signed by 37 merchants and dealers and manufacturers of tobacco of the town of Durham, North Carolina, remonstrating against any increase of the tax on tobacco. As it is brief, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the petition be read. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, manufacturers and dealers in tobacco, of Durham, North Carolina, would very respectfully but earnestly petition your honorable bodies to make no advance on the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, for the following among many other reasons which could be given:

First. Tobacco, on the average value of the entire amount which enters into consumption, is now more heavily taxed than any other article, either of domestic or foreign production.

Second. The great preponderance of this tax falls upon the laboring portion of the community, the consumers of cheap tobacco, who not only pay the tax but about 50 per cent. additional caused by the expense of packing in accordance with the requirements of law, and the interest upon the tax, which is paid in advance.

Third. It must be apparent, from the repeated action of the House of Representatives to abolish all tax upon leaf-tobacco for consumption, that under the general reduction of wages which now exists a large class of consumers severely feel the burden of this great tax upon an article of home production and which is indispensable to them.

Fourth. The revenue now obtained from tobacco far exceeds in amount that which was contemplated by Government during the highest days of taxation: when the currency and all business were greatly inflated; and when it is remembered that every reduction of this tax resulted in increased revenue, is it not fair to believe that, in view of all these evils and difficulties, advance of the tax now would fail to enrich the Treasury.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MERRIMON presented a memorial of merchants, manufacturers, importers, and dealers in New York, praying for the repeal of certain stamp tax on drugs, perfumery contained in schedule C; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Minerva Ruffin Caldwell, widow of the late governor of North Carolina, Tod R. Caldwell, praying compensation for mules and other property taken by the Army in 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of citizens of Cherokee County, Alabama, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee, and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties on certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARVEY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads:

House concurrent resolution No. 28.

Whereas certain railroad companies holding lands in the State of Kansas have thus far failed to perfect the title to their lands, whereby such lands are, by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, exempt from taxation; and whereas at the first session of the Forty-third Congress a certain bill passed the House of Representatives of which the following is a true text, namely:

"Forty-third Congress, first session, bill (H. R. No. 3281.) In the Senate of the United States May 13, 1874. Read twice, and referred to the Committee on Railroads: An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to amend an act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, approved July 2, 1864.'

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 21 of the act to amend the act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, approved July 2, 1864,' be amended by adding the following: Provided, however, That the neglect of any such company or parties in interest to pay the costs of such survey, selecting, and conveying, as herein provided, and take the patents therefor, shall not prevent the legal title vesting in said company or party in interest subject to the payment of such costs, and all lands so earned and to which said company or party in interest shall be entitled, in accordance with the provisions of this act or of the act of which this is amendatory, shall be subject to all legal taxes imposed under authority of any State or Territory in which such lands are located, from the time such company or party in interest shall have been or may be entitled to a conveyance thereof, the same as though no costs or fees had been imposed by the provisions of this section; and upon the sale of any such lands for taxes so assessed which may be found delinquent, the purchaser thereof shall pay the proper officer all costs due thereon as herein provided, and thereupon letters-patent shall issue to such company conveying said lands, subject to the legal rights and title of the tax-sale purchaser, and that it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to prepare and deliver without delay patents for all lands applied for by any company as aforesaid when the same are clearly within the grant, and free from conflicting claims, and all legal fees and charges have been paid by said company. That if any company shall fail to pay the proper costs or fees required by law, and to select for patent the lands pertaining to its grant, within such period as to enable the local authorities to assess said lands, lists of the same shall be furnished to the governor of any State or Territory, upon application to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and payment of the cost of preparing the same, said lists to be duly certified by the Commissioner, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, under seal of their respective offices: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any railroad company from the effect of any forfeiture heretofore suffered or incurred.

Passed the House of Representatives May 11, 1874.

"Attest:

"EDWARD McPHERSON,

"Clerk."

And whereas the claims of equity and justice alike demand the certain class of lands mentioned in said bill should bear their just proportion of the public burden and be subject to the same laws which govern the question of taxation as other property of the like character is subject to in the State of Kansas; and whereas this just regulation is sought to be defeated by the continued neglect of the grantees of the lands in question to perfect their titles to the same by paying to the United States a nominal sum of money to liquidate certain costs of survey and conveyance, as provided by the terms of the several acts of Congress making the grants of lands referred to: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas, (the senate concurring,) That the Senate of the United States is hereby requested, as speedily as practicable, to pass and enact into a law the bill above set forth.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to send one copy of this resolution to the President of the Senate and one copy to each of our Senators.

Passed the house of representatives February 1, 1875.

HENRY BOOTH,
Chief Clerk.

JOHN H. FOLKS,
Secretary of Senate.

Concurred in by the senate February 2, 1875.

I, Tom H. Kavanaugh, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original instrument of writing on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed the great seal of State. Done at Topeka this 8th day of February, A. D. 1875.

[L. S.]

TOM H. CAVANAUGH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HARVEY presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of granting the right of way to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, through the Indian Territory to Fort Smith, in Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WASHBURN presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of Boston, Massachusetts, against changing the administration of the present light-house system; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOWE presented a memorial of W. C. Kibbe, in favor of the construction of a double-track freight-railway under Government auspices and control from tide-water on the Atlantic to the Missouri River; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. INGALLS presented a memorial of 55 citizens of Miami County, Kansas, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties on certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THURMAN presented a memorial of numerous tobacco manufacturers of the city of Dayton, Ohio, remonstrating against any increase of the tax on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, presented additional papers in relation to the application of the officers of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry Volunteers for compensation for services rendered during the late war; which, together with the papers now on file relative to the case, were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAGER. I present the memorial of William W. Woolley, J. J. Davidson, and about 100 others, asking that a resolution be passed asking the Attorney-General to file a bill in equity to set aside the patent to the Rio de Santa Clara land grant, California. It is alleged that over seventeen thousand acres of land have been fraudulently granted to certain parties. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as it involves a legal question.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY presented the petition of Mrs. S. J. Ghriest, praying the passage of a law authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to place the name of her son and her own name on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of physicians of Illinois, in behalf of the Medical Corps of the Army, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of that corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. PRATT. I ask that an order be made allowing Samuel Jamison to withdraw from the files his memorial praying to be compensated for the seizure of his property by the military authorities, upon leaving copies on the files of the Senate. In this case I made an adverse report, but it was principally upon the ground that the claimant had not furnished sufficient specifications of his loss nor sufficient proofs of the loss itself to justify the committee in taking action; and I think it but right that he should be allowed an opportunity of making his claim again before Congress if he can.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of citizens of Pittsburgh praying the reimbursement of money paid out by them for fortifying their city in 1863, and that the claimants have leave to withdraw their papers.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Samuel Harper be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a Senate resolution of March 11, 1873, information in relation to the space allotted to each steerage immigrant on board ship, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1872 and 1873, have instructed me to report the same without recommendation. I suppose that to-morrow or next day the Committee on Printing will be called under the rule assigning the remnant of the morning hour to the committees in the order in which they stand on the list, and then I shall ask to call up this resolution. There is a very great difference of opinion in the Senate as to the propriety of printing any copies of this report, and we should suppose that our recommendation would not have a very great effect either way; and therefore we submit the matter for the consideration of the Senate.

The resolution was ordered to be placed upon the Calendar, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1872 two hundred and thirty thousand copies, of which fifty thousand shall be for the use of the Senate and one hundred and eighty thousand for the use of the House of Representatives; and that there be printed of the report of the said Commissioner for the year 1873 one hundred and fifty-five thousand copies, of which thirty-five thousand copies shall be for the use of the Senate and one hundred and twenty thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes, to report back a skeleton of the steamboat bill, so called, and recommend its passage. I wish to state that it has been very much torn to pieces, and I would ask Senators to examine it carefully and see whether there is anything worth passing in it. If so, I will to-morrow attempt to call it up if it is worth calling up. There are two very good things left in it. One that stops the collection of pilotage at Hell Gate, which will save a few hundred thousand dollars to the New England States; and most of the patent-rights which were declared to be useless and worse than useless have been cut out from this bill. There may be more good things in it for which some Senators on examination will think worth devoting time to pass the bill. I ask each Senator to give it a careful examination to-day, and if it should be deemed worth the time it will take to pass it, I will endeavor to call it up to-morrow.

Mr. BOGY. Is the bill amended in any particular?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; very largely amended.

Mr. BOGY. I would suggest that the amendments be printed and the bill made the special order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. They are all printed at the request of the committee, and they will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BOGY. Would it be in order to make the bill a special order for to-morrow?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not be in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not ask to make it a special order. I ask Senators to look at it, as all the amendments are printed and each member can examine the amendments.

Mr. BOGY. I will state that this bill was before the Senate last week and was referred to the Committee on Commerce to be read. It was not intended at that time nor insinuated that the bill was to be amended. It was remarked that the bill had never been read in the committee, and therefore the great object was to have the bill read in the committee and reported by to-day. As I then understood, the bill was to occupy the same position before the Senate when reported as it did then, as a special order for a special hour, and unless that be insisted upon the bill is lost as a matter of course by the motion to refer back to the committee. This stratagem will have attained its object. Unless the bill can be put back where it was, it is gone of course. That intention was stated here, a trap was set, and we went into it. We were entrapped, if it be correct to say so. It was stated that the bill had never been read in the committee, and the great object was to have the bill read. I did not myself understand the object very well, nor had I much faith in that proposition. I must confess I thought then there was something behind. Now as the bill comes back amended, unless it is made the special order for some time during the session, we never can reach it; and if we do reach it, with all of these amendments, it never can be disposed of, and this bill which has been before Congress for four years will be again defeated by this stratagem. I anticipated some such thing at the time, and I am sorry to say that my anticipations have been realized.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred—

Mr. BOGY. What was done with my motion, I would inquire?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair is informed that the motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The report is made to-day.

Mr. BOGY. I had the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Senator's pardon, I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri yielded the floor and the Chair recognized the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BOGY. I yielded the floor because my motion had not been disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield to my friend from Missouri if he wishes to make a point, with pleasure, of course.

Mr. BOGY. I wish to make a point. I made a motion that this bill be made the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock. I am told it is not in order. I should like to know why.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator that the bill having been reported to-day it can only be acted on by unanimous consent, and the bill not being before the Senate his motion is not in order. The bill will go upon the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 796) to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights, to report it without amendment, and I give notice that I shall move to take it up at the earliest possible moment, in a day or two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia, to report it with two or three minor amendments, and to state that the necessities of public justice seem to require that the bill should be passed immediately, and therefore, although as a usual thing and except in a pressing emergency I should not think of doing it, I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not want to object; but this is simply a bill relating to the District of Columbia, and I hardly think that is of much consequence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I can hardly conceive that the Senate will interest itself in this bill. I do not object, however.

Mr. SARGENT. I proposed an amendment to the bill which I understand is not incorporated in the bill or anything in lieu of it. I want time to examine the bill and I ask that it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DENNIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Loebrick, praying Congress to allow her compensation for money expended and services rendered in behalf of sick and wounded soldiers during the late war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1144) to prevent cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Reidenbach, widow of F. Reidenbach, late of Company E, Second Artillery Illinois Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John Northwood, a citizen of Michigan, praying that the same amount of pension may be allowed soldiers of the late war who have lost their right arm above the elbow as is allowed those who have lost a leg above the knee, asked to be discharged from its further consideration for the reason that the relief asked was embodied at the last session of Congress in a general law; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Andrew Jackson Keeler, a citizen of Hancock County, Maine, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Murray A. White and others, the Boatman's Insurance and Trust Company, praying the passage of an act referring their claims to the Court of Claims, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEWART. I am directed by the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 378) to provide for the incorporation and regulation of railroad companies in the Territories of the United States, and granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands, to report the same back. The bill passed at the last session went to the House, and the House struck out all after the enacting clause and proposed an amendment by way of substitute providing for the right of way only. There are some defects in this bill, as the committee think, and they have directed me to move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a committee of conference. I make that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I remember that bill last year. I should like to look at it. I wish the Senator would let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. I report the recommendation of the committee that the Senate non-concur and ask for a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie over.

BILLS RECOMMENDED.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to have unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 2354) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily L. Slaughter was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered. The claim is before the Pension Bureau, and I wish to have the vote reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. I now move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 1149) declaring the meaning of an act approved March 9, 1868, relative to a patent for induction apparatus and circuit-breakers be recommitted to the Committee on Patents.

EZRA C. OWEN.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the 25th of January last there was a report from the Committee on Pensions on the bill (H. R. No. 3721) granting a pension to Ezra C. Owen, recommending the indefinite postponement of that bill. My attention was not directed to it at the time. I now ask that by unanimous consent that order may be reconsidered, and the bill go on the Calendar. I suppose there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MCCREERY and Mr. INGALLS submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF BANK EXAMINERS.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national bank act, and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with the following amendments, namely:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "thirty-one of the national-bank act" and insert in lieu thereof "5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or in any one of the States of Oregon, California, and Nevada, or in the Territories."

Strike out all after "than," in line 12, to and including "dollars," in line 14, and insert in lieu thereof "three hundred thousand dollars, twenty-five dollars."

Strike out "redemption cities," in line 27, and insert in lieu thereof "the cities named in section 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or in any one of the States of Oregon, California, and Nevada, or in the Territories."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

JOHN SCOTT,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
T. F. BAYARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HORACE MAYNARD
C. L. MERRIAM,
M. J. DURHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THURMAN. If it is the object of the Senator from Pennsylvania to have action on that report at once, I hope he will explain it.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire immediate action. It requires but a very brief explanation. I am not aware whether the Senator from Ohio was here when the bill was considered before. At present the national-bank examiners are compensated by daily pay and mileage. It was complained that under the charge for mileage national-bank examiners who went, for instance, from this city to the city of Columbus—I use it for illustration—and examined several banks, charged mileage upon each one. To remedy that defect in the law, this bill fixes a specific compensation for the examination of banks, beginning with twenty dollars for the examination of a bank with a capital of $100,000, and making the amount to depend then upon the increase of capital up to a certain sum; and it exempts from the operation of the law redemption cities, for the reason that there the salaries that have been paid have been fixed by the Comptroller of the Currency and assessed upon the banks upon an understanding between the Comptroller and the banks. The committee have also excepted from its operation the Territories and the Pacific coast, for the reason that the travel required there of the national-bank examiners is so great that the specific compensation fixed in this bill would not give them an adequate compensation, and there it is left to be fixed by the Comptroller of the Currency as in the redemption cities. That is the effect of the bill as amended by the committee of conference.

Mr. THURMAN. Is that all?

Mr. SCOTT. That is all.

Mr. THURMAN. Is twenty dollars enough in any case?

Mr. SCOTT. Twenty dollars is the amount fixed for the examination of a bank whose capital does not exceed $100,000. Then when you run from $100,000 to $300,000, the allowance is twenty-five dollars, and from that up it increases in amount; I cannot just give all the amounts. A letter from the Comptroller of the Currency states that these sums thus fixed will give to the examiners about the same annual salary they have heretofore obtained under the former law by daily pay and mileage, cutting off the abuse to which I have referred.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very much in favor of reducing expenses wherever I can; but we must not emasculate the law. These expenses of examination are paid by the banks, I believe.

Mr. SCOTT. By the banks.

Mr. THURMAN. So I understand. Now you propose to pay an examiner twenty dollars for examining a bank. Do you allow him any mileage?

Mr. SCOTT. I have just stated that this bill cuts off mileage. The former law did allow mileage.

Mr. THURMAN. How then will an examiner be able to pay his expenses if he has to travel any distance to examine a bank? His hotel bill would be four dollars a day, and if you are to have a thorough examination it may require a week, and how is he to be paid?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator evidently has not looked very largely at the subject, because these examiners are assigned to their positions by the Comptroller of the Currency, and he states upon an examination of the operation of this law that the sums specifically fixed will result in giving to the examiners about the same amount annually as they obtained heretofore under the law which gave them daily pay and mileage. He has examined that subject; the bill was submitted to him; so that the compensation of the examiners under this bill will be about the same as it was before, but the bill takes away from the examiners the opportunity of exacting from the banks double mileage, as they did in some instances; and it is deemed advisable by the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House that the banks shall not be put in the position of resisting an attempted exaction by any examiner of double mileage, that the opportunity for making the demand should be taken away. This rate of twenty dollars for the smaller banks and the larger sums for the larger ones is satisfactory to the Comptroller of the Currency, who states that it will be an adequate compensation to the examiners.

Mr. THURMAN. I am still at a loss to know how that can be. I want these examinations to be thorough. Now, suppose an examiner is sent from Washington—not selected in the city of Columbus, but sent from Washington to Columbus to examine a bank of $100,000 capital; he will travel four hundred and twenty-four miles, and we cannot assume that he has a free pass; we will assume that he pays his transportation; and his transportation and meals will cost him fifteen dollars from here to Columbus. Then his hotel bill there will be $4.50 a day, or at least four dollars a day. By the end of the first day in Columbus he is out of pocket nineteen dollars. Then he has to come back to Washington. What compensation is there here for examining a bank, or will the man perform his duty faithfully when it may require him to be a week there to make a thorough examination?

Mr. SCOTT. It is evident that the Senator from Ohio has not given very much consideration to this subject.

Mr. THURMAN. That is true. I am asking for information.

Mr. SCOTT. If there were but one bank to be examined, and the Comptroller of the Currency were to send a man from here to Columbus to examine but the one and there his duty ended, the Senator's statement would be entirely right; but there are perhaps six banks in Columbus, and while it may take a man two days or three days to examine one, it may take him but two hours to examine the next; and before his return in all probability he will examine a bank in Chillicothe or a bank in Cincinnati or a bank in Pittsburgh or banks all along the route he travels. It is on an examination of the manner in which these examiners have been assigned to duty that the Comptroller says these sums will pay them what they have heretofore received.

Mr. THURMAN. I think I have enough knowledge of it to know that no bank examiner can discharge his duty in regard to examining a bank in two hours. He is required to count the funds of the bank and see that the law is complied with, and he cannot count the funds as he is required to count them in two hours. He will have to take somebody's word for it. However, if the committee think that under this law there will be an efficient examination of these banks, I have no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. One question I wish to put to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I should like to know whether the present bill changes the existing law in any other respect than as to the compensation of bank examiners?

Mr. SCOTT. In no other respect whatever.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the minimum for a $50,000 bank? Is it twenty dollars?

Mr. SCOTT. For all under $100,000, it is twenty dollars.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the maximum?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not remember.

Mr. DAVIS. It is regulated by the capital of the bank?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

The report was concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE PENSION COMMITTEE.

Mr. PRATT. I give notice that I will before the usual hour of adjournment of Wednesday ask the Senate to take a recess until seven o'clock that evening for the purpose of considering bills which have been reported from the Committee on Pensions. There are several private bills, House bills, which can be acted upon, and which have been reported to the Senate since the committee were called, and there are some general bills, one particularly, amending the law of 1871 granting pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812 and restoring a certain class of pensioners to the pension-roll. I wish that this bill should be considered. It has been in the Senate now some ten months since it was passed by the House of Representatives, and unless the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations shall object, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate that Wednesday evening be set apart for the consideration of this bill, together with sundry private bills.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the bill the Senator refers to?

Mr. PRATT. The bill that I specially refer to is one which amends the act of February 14, 1871, granting pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812 and restoring certain pensioners to the pension-roll.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator does not design on Wednesday evening to call up a bill which has recently reached us from the House of Representatives involving a great many millions of dollars?

Mr. PRATT. No, sir; this bill was passed by the House of Representatives on the 17th of March last, and it is high time that it should be considered by the Senate.

SENECA NATION OF INDIANS.

Mr. INGALLS. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations and to confirm existing leases.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments, and that the first section of the bill be stricken out; that the first two lines of the second section be stricken out, and that the following be inserted: "That all leases of land within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations in the State of New York heretofore made by or with the authority of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians," and that the fourth section of the bill be stricken out and the following be inserted: "All leases of land situate within the limits of said villages when established as hereinbefore provided, except those provided for in the second section of this act, in which Indians or said Seneca Nation, or persons claiming under them, are lessors, shall be valid and binding upon the parties thereto, and upon said Seneca Nation, for a period of five years from and after the passage of this act, except such as by their terms may expire at an earlier date; and at the end of said period, or at the expiration of such leases as terminate within that time, said nation, through its councilors, shall be entitled to the possession of the said lands, and shall have the power to lease the same: Provided, however, That at the expiration of said period, or the termination of said leases, as hereinbefore provided, said leases shall be renewable for periods not exceeding twelve years, and the persons who may be at such time the owner or owners of improvements erected upon such lands shall be entitled to such renewed leases, and to continue in possession of such lands, on such conditions as may be agreed upon by him or them and such councilors; and in case they cannot agree upon the conditions of such leases or the amount of annual rents to be paid, then the said councilors shall appoint one person and the other party or parties shall choose one person as referee to fix and determine the terms of such lease and the amount of annual rent to be paid; and if the two so appointed and chosen cannot agree, they shall choose a third person to act with them, the award of whom or the major part of whom shall be final and binding upon the parties; and the person or persons owning said improvements shall be entitled to a lease of said land and to occupy and improve the same according to the terms of said award, or if they paying rent and otherwise complying with the said lease or said award; and whenever any lease shall expire after its renewal as aforesaid, it may, at the option of the lessee, his heirs and assigns, be renewed in the manner hereinbefore provided."

And the House agree to the same.

JOHN J. INGALLS,
W. B. ALLISON
LEWIS V. BOGY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
B. W. HARRIS,
W. L. SESSIONS,
A. COMINGO,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from Kansas whether this conference report does not change the text of the bill that had been agreed upon between the two Houses?

Mr. INGALLS. The bill had not been agreed upon between the two Houses. It came to the Senate and was here amended and went back to the House for concurrence, and the House refused to agree to the amendments and asked for a committee of conference, and the bill was returned with that request, which was agreed to by the Senate, and the committee was appointed; and this is the result of their deliberations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but the question with me is whether this conference report does not change the text of the bill which the Senate amendments did not touch and upon which amendments the conference was appointed.

Mr. INGALLS. The report of the conference committee does not change the text of the bill, as the Senator suggests.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dare say the report is right; but I should not wish this to be drawn into a precedent for authority in a conference committee to change the text of a bill outside of the pending disputes between the two Houses. Without making any point of order, I merely wish to put in a caveat in order that it may not be drawn into a precedent that a conference committee have authority to go outside of the pending questions between the two Houses to change those parts of the bill which both Houses have in effect assented to.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is mistaken. The report of the conference committee does not go outside of the questions at issue between the two Houses; but it strikes out the first section of the bill which stood in the original draught, in order to obviate certain objections that were made by parties in interest; but the remaining amendments are in the interest of the original proposition submitted here in the Senate by way of amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I accept what my honorable friend has stated, because he has stated the case with a certain qualification which brings him within the rule, although he adds to it that a certain clause of the bill, which the parties in interest thought to be inadmissible, and which was not the subject of conference, not having been disagreed to by either House, is drawn in question. But I assume from what he states that the committee have only acted upon the subjects which were in dispute between the two Houses, as it appears on the record, drew into question; and if that be so, then of course no point ought to be made about it. I did not intend to make any point, but only to say that if in any respect this report does go into parts of the bill that the two Houses had agreed about, however convenient or necessary, it is outside of the jurisdiction of the committee, and merely to state what I have in order that so far as I am concerned it might not be drawn into a precedent if it went over that line.

Mr. INGALLS. I must be entirely ingenuous with the Senator from Vermont and state that the report of the conference committee does in one respect go outside of the original amendment made here in the Senate by striking out the first section of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I hope it may be taken by unanimous consent, so that it shall not be drawn into a precedent.

Mr. INGALLS. That is my desire also.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a very dangerous business, and it is never done except by unanimous consent, and generally in a special form. I see that both the Senate and House agreed to the first section of the bill. How far that is material I do not know, but the committee of conference strike out that section.

Mr. INGALLS. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the first section of the bill as it originally was reported from the House declared that all Indians who are at present upon these reservations should be considered as members of the Seneca tribe of New York Indians. There were upon those reservations certain members of the Cayuga and Onondaga tribes and also a very few Canadian Indians, and the council of the Seneca Nation thought it unjust that those parties should be included by legislative action among those who are affected by the operations of this bill. I trust that unanimous consent will be given to the report of the conference committee, with the understanding of course that it is not in any sense whatever to be drawn into a precedent affecting the action of the Senate upon agreeing to reports of committees of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. The trouble is that this conference report compels us to state a falsehood on the record. I do not object to the substance of it, but upon the record it makes the Senate adopting it state a falsehood, because it says—

Mr. INGALLS. Probably not a falsehood, but something that is incorrect.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not true. That is what I call a falsehood—

That the Senate recede from its amendments, and that the first section of the bill be stricken out.

I submit to the Senate that it can be done in ten minutes by the committee on conference meeting again and proposing that the Senate recede from its amendments, and at the end of the report adding—

The conferees unanimously recommend that the first section of the bill agreed to by both Houses be stricken out.

Mr. INGALLS. What difference does it make whether that recommendation goes in at the end of the report or at the commencement of the report? It is the commencement of the report now, as one of the recommendations of the committee of conference. It appears to me it is a matter of the most trivial form whether it still should appear in one portion of the report rather than in another. If it is germane to the report, if it is a matter that can be properly acted on by the Senate, it is certainly immaterial whether it appears on the first page or upon the last.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is sufficient to say that it is in express violation of parliamentary law, and it is in express violation of the joint rules of the two Houses. I remember the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] felt very indignant once because the Senate rejected a bill reported by him from a conference committee when he felt himself at liberty to go a little beyond the matters in controversy between the two Houses. The Senate upon debate rejected it for fear of establishing such a precedent. It was a matter which there was no disagreement about, and the Senator stated all the facts in presenting the report.

When we have an established form by which what is here desired can be done, I would a great deal rather conform to it. There is no power so dangerous in legislation as the power of committees of conference. I have served on a great many of them, and I know that in every case where, when I have been a member of a conference committee, it has been necessary to change the text of a bill, the formula has been adopted of a unanimous recommendation to change the text of the bill, and it has always been agreed to in that form.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not wish to throw any obstruction in the way that shall prevent the Senator from Kansas obtaining the result which he desires; but, taking this matter as it is presented to the Senate, I wish to make a suggestion to that Senator, and I hope he will adopt it.

The power of conference committees is very great. They do incorporate amendments on existing amendments in appropriation bills, and they do compel Senators to vote against a whole measure or submit to a proposition which is wrong in and of itself. But when you go beyond that and allow a committee of conference to strike out of a bill that part of the text which has been agreed to by both branches, you establish a power that makes your committees of conference the legislative body, instead of the Senate and the House.

Now, the thing may be all right, and I would suggest that this report be recommitted to the committee of conference, and that they submit their report to their respective bodies, stating the facts, recommending agreement or disagreement upon the various disagreeing votes as the case may be, and then state the fact that the first section of the bill ought to be expunged, and take the sense of the two Houses whether they will do it or not, but not to do it in virtue of the right and the power of that committee to make a report of that kind. I do think the precedent is so very dangerous that we ought to pursue the course I have suggested; and I hope my friend from Kansas will adopt it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine make a motion?

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the report be recommitted to the committee of conference.

Mr. HOWE. I rise to inform the Senate that I have got over that fit of indignation to which the Senator from Ohio alluded just now. I got over it a great while ago during the same session and within a very few days, because although as the Senator says the Senate did refuse to make an amendment in the text of a bill which had been agreed to by both Houses in pursuance of the recommendation of a conference committee of which I was chairman on the part of the Senate, yet the same Senate did make precisely the same amendment on precisely the same bill on the recommendation of another conference committee of which the Senator from Ohio was chairman. So I got over my temper at once.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that the report was recommitted in that case and the course always pursued was adopted; that is, a separate recommendation was made that a certain change in the original text should be made, and a separate vote was taken on it.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator is mistaken about that separate vote. They made it precisely in the way the first conference committee recommended. There is no trouble about this thing. When a conference committee undertake to amend the text to which both Houses have agreed, the effect of it is that a single objection prevents it; if you can find a man in either House who objects to that it cannot be done; but if no man objects, if the thing which the conference committee ask to have done is a thing which everybody in both Houses says ought to be done, then you can just as well do it on the report of a conference committee and on the report of the first conference as on the report of the second. That is all there is about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the report of the conference committee be recommitted to the same committee.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of Saturday, which is the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the morning business will be allowed to go on. It has not yet been concluded.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to make an observation. On Saturday I appealed to the Senate to allow me to have that day for the consideration of this bill, and I gave notice that on to-day I should not have any appropriation bill or other thing in the way of the business of the Senate. Although a premature adjournment cut me off from what I expected to be able to accomplish, I do not feel that I am in a position to urge the attention of the Senate to this bill, and therefore I shall not oppose it to such business as the Senate may choose to proceed with. But I shall feel that by a premature adjournment I did not have the opportunity to which I was fairly entitled to conclude the bill, and therefore I shall ask its consideration at such time as I can present it to the Senate under such circumstances that I hope they will be disposed to consider it. Therefore I yield at present.

Mr. MORTON. In pursuance of the notice I gave on Saturday, and of the understanding had at that time, I now move to postpone the present and all prior orders and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution in regard to the admission of Mr. Pinchback as a member of this body.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will give way for morning business.

Mr. MORTON. I give way for morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will receive morning business.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented sixty-one petitions of officers and members of medical institutions of the State of New York, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORDON presented twenty petitions of physicians of Georgia, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOGY presented twelve petitions of physicians of Saint Louis, Missouri, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3341) to equalize the bounties to soldiers who served in the late war for the Union; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate requesting the House of Representatives to correct a verbal error in the bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States, by adding in the enrolled bill an "s" to the word "alien" in line 11, page 6, of the engrossed bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1799) granting a pension to Angelica Hammond;

A bill (H. R. No. 1317) to enable Ann Jennette Hathaway, executrix of the last will and testament of Joshua Hathaway, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters patent for improved device for converting reciprocating into rotary motion;

A bill (H. R. No. 2103) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, and to regulate its construction and operation;

A bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. No. 4444) to amend an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874;

A bill (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans;

A bill (H. R. No. 4335) authorizing John Hazeltine to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of his patent for a new and useful water-wheel;

A bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of William J. Coite; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1303) to authorize the board of audit of the District of Columbia to receive, audit, and adjust certain claims for damages by reason of the change of grade on Pennsylvania avenue; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1304) to secure depositors in the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company from ultimate loss; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1305) to restore certain lands in the State of Iowa to market, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1306) to prevent vexatious seizures of the citizens' property and effects and substitute therefor a fair and peaceable remedy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1307) amendatory of an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound on the Pacific coast by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and the acts and resolutions additional thereto and amendatory thereof; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1308) giving jurisdiction to the United States Court of Claims in the claim of J. W. Lewellen, of Richmond, Virginia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GORDON. I introduce this bill by request. I know nothing about the merits of the case. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1309) regulating the transmission of registered letters and money packages through the United States mails; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CATTARAUGUS AND ALLEGANY RESERVATIONS.

Mr. INGALLS. I present the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations and to confirm existing leases, as amended, to meet the objection made by the Senators from Ohio and Vermont. As it has already been read to the Senate in full, I ask that the Senate may now concur in the report of the committee.

Mr. McCREERY. Let it lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie over.

LANDS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask consent to call from the table the bill (S. No. 420) to amend the act entitled "An act for the restoration to homestead entry and to market of certain lands in Michigan," approved June 10, 1872, and for other purposes, in order to concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, which was in line 16 of section 1 to strike out "restored to market" and insert "offered for sale at a price not less than $2.50 per acre."

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I will state in brief that the bill passed the Senate, went to the House, and passed the House with an amendment increasing the minimum price from $1.25 to $2.50 for the residue of lands subject to sale. The Committee on Public Lands of the Senate have also made an amendment correcting a typographical error in the description of a section from 4 to 24. I ask for the concurrence of the Senate in the action of the House and Senate committees.

Mr. THURMAN. Since that bill was up on a former day I have received a letter from a gentleman of Michigan, a perfect stranger to me, saying that the amount of land embraced by the bill is very large. I inquired of the Senator, when the bill was up before, what was the amount of land embraced in it, and he was unable at that moment to give me any definite answer. I have not the letter with me now, but my recollection is—it may be erroneous—that the writer of the letter says this bill embraces about two hundred thousand acres of land, and he suggested some amendments to it to prevent a sacrifice of those lands. I do not know but that the bill may be all right; but the suggestion struck me as very important, and I wish the Senator would consent to let the bill lie over until to-morrow, that I may bring that letter in, and, if I think it proper, move amendments in accordance with the suggestion made by the writer.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am not disposed to press the consideration of it now if there be substantial objections; but I want to answer the Senator from Ohio by stating to him that I have seen a like letter, which I presume emanates from the same source of the one he has referred to. The objection of the author of this letter is to the opening of these lands to homesteads, and his object is to have the entire lands disposed of at public sale; and I would state to the Senator that under a former restoration of lands in the same State parties bought in at $1.25 some seventeen thousand acres of land by the formation of a purchase ring. My object in this bill was to shut out these rings and assure to the settler under the homestead and pre-emption laws the right and priority to take up these lands.

I recollect very well at the time the Senator put the question to me I was not informed of the amount of the land to be restored, and I do not know but there may be two hundred thousand acres, as stated by the writer of the letter referred to. The amount is not so material as the manner of disposition. A portion of the lands are already excepted by the bill, and all that are valuable for pine timber must be sold at public sale. Such, however, as are valuable mainly for farming purposes are by the bill open to homesteads. I cannot even now say what proportion is arable land, but whatever the amount is, such lands are open to homestead and pre-emption; and I would be very glad to see every foot of that class of land taken up by homesteaders rather than any should remain untaken and so open to public sale, for the practice is, I find, wherever valuable lands are put up at public sale, that rings are formed, and they are sold at but little over the minimum price. In the instance which I cited there were some six hundred and forty acres purchased above $1.25 and seventeen thousand acres at $1.25 an acre.

Having promised the Senator from Indiana that if this case caused any discussion I would not press its consideration in his time, if the Senator from Ohio now prefers to have it lie over I will not now urge the passage; but I think, as it has been before the committee, before both Houses, and received the concurrence of both, and received the consideration of the committee for two weeks and they now report it asking that the House amendment may be concurred in, I hope the Senator will not persist in his request to have the bill postponed. However, in deference to the Senator's wishes I will not now insist.

Mr. THURMAN. As I said when I was on my feet before, I am wholly ignorant of the character of the author of that letter. He wrote, however, as a man well acquainted with the subject and made some suggestions that seemed worthy of our consideration, and I would be glad if the Senator would let the bill lie over until to-morrow, and then I will interpose no further objection to its consideration.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I shall not press it now. I should like in this connection to say that I will call the matter up to-morrow, which will give a night for the Senator to examine the letter.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORTON. I believe my motion is pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator gave way to morning business.

HARPER'S FERRY PROPERTY.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer a resolution regarding the Harper's Ferry property, in which the Government itself is interested, and I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to proceed to have the decree of the district court of the United States for the district of West Virginia for the enforcement of the purchase-money of the water-power at Harper's Ferry sold to F. C. Adams by the United States, which was entered at its September term, 1874, in the suit of the United States against F. C. Adams and others, carried into execution as speedily as practicable by a resale of the property therein decreed to be resold, and without awaiting the determination of any other suit now pending in said court wherein the United States is plaintiff or coplaintiff with respect to the title to the said property.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to make a remark before I move the reference of the resolution.

In 1869 an act passed Congress for the sale of this property. It was sold in 1871. Since that time nothing has been collected from the party who bought the property. The property is going to destruction. As I understand the money ought to have been collected long ago. It was due partly in one year and partly in two years after the sale, which was four years ago. Now I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to make one remark on the subject referred to the Judiciary Committee. Some attention has been called to this matter in the public newspapers by somebody, and I think it right to say for one that so far as I know there is no ground to impute any laches or negligence to the Attorney-General. Whether his subordinates have been as prompt as they ought to be is another question.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the daily hour of meeting of the Senate shall be eleven o'clock a. m. from and after to-morrow.

Mr. THURMAN. Let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1012) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) authorizing Thomas W. Fitch, engineer, of the United States Navy, to accept of a wedding present sent to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORTON. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution for the admission of Mr. Pinchback as Senator-elect from Louisiana.

Mr. THURMAN. The question is on postponing the present business, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to postpone the pending order, being Senate bill No. 963, and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it in order to move to postpone and proceed to the consideration of a particular subject in the same motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question can be divided at the request of any Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that it may be divided. I wish the Senator from Maine were here, for I should like to understand somewhat definitely why he consents that the District bill may be laid aside, or rather why he says that he will not press the District bill on the consideration of the Senate to-day. The only reason he gave for not insisting upon its consideration to-day was that something had taken place on Saturday which induced him to refrain from asking the Senate to proceed with the consideration of that bill, and the only thing that he mentioned as having taken place on Saturday was what he called a premature adjournment of the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say that the Senate adjourned after six o'clock on Saturday, and after having sat every day of the week, and after members had met in their committees almost every morning long before the meeting of the Senate. Why, therefore, the adjournment was premature, unless the Senator from Maine was certain of carrying his bill if we sat it out into the small hours of Saturday night, I cannot conceive. But if he was certain of carrying his bill had we continued in session on Saturday night, then it is perfectly clear that he can carry his bill before Tuesday morning; then it is perfectly clear that when we have all the daylight of to-day as well as all of to-night for the consideration of his bill, he can carry his bill through the Senate. The adjournment therefore on Saturday was not a premature adjournment. It was not premature unless, as I have said, the Senator was able to carry his bill. If he was able to carry his bill then, he can carry it to-day, and hence there is no reason for postponing it unless he intends to abandon his bill; and to abandon it, after having intimated that he can carry it, would be a very singular proceeding indeed.

The Senator may possibly have referred to some of the votes that were taken. Well, what were the votes that were taken? The most important vote that was taken was that which provided for the election of one of the three commissioners. If I am not mistaken, the Senate decided three times that we would not provide for the election of two of them; we would only at the outside provide for the election of one. Three times the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, to elect two of the commissioners, was amended by striking out "two" and inserting "one," and the amendment thus amended was voted down twice; but when that amendment was made the last time, when the question was upon concurring with it, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] felt authorized to say that the amendment thus amended to limit the election to one would receive the votes of a majority of the Senate. There is nothing then in that to destroy this great prospect for the government of the District of Columbia which has been worked at during this session; nothing has been done to destroy it; and why therefore the Senator should say that something took place on Saturday which induces him in effect to abandon his bill and let it die with this Congress, is really something that is past my comprehension.

Since the Senator from Maine has come in, I wish to repeat in brief one thing that I said. The Senator had no right to speak of the adjournment after six o'clock on Saturday as a premature adjournment, unless he felt a reasonable assurance that if we continued to sit on Saturday into the night, perhaps till midnight, he could pass his bill. If he had no assurance that he could pass his bill by our sitting through that night or late into the night, then he has no right to say that an adjournment at six o'clock was a premature adjournment, nor to base an abandonment of his bill on the idea that the Senate had prematurely adjourned.

Well, sir, if he could have passed his bill had we sat until midnight, or even until daylight—but certainly we would not have sat beyond midnight, it being Saturday night—then he can pass his bill to-day. He has more time now to pass it than he had then; and therefore he cannot abandon his bill on the ground that it was premature in us to adjourn, unless it is certain he could pass his bill then if we had not adjourned, and if it is certain he could pass it then, I say he can pass it now.

But, Mr. President, one word about this bill. I am afraid that my friend from Maine has got an idea into his head for which there is no foundation. I am fearful that he has got an idea into his head that his bill is not fairly treated by Senators on this floor who propose amendments to it. I for one must say that I have not heard one factious amendment offered to the bill. The bill covers nearly two hundred pages, and it has not perhaps been read by every Senator in this body. New light upon it springs up from debate. It is necessarily a subject of debate, because the bill covers so much ground. Had the bill been a short bill, merely setting up a frame-work of a government, without going into the multitudinous details embraced in it; had it been a bill of twenty pages; had it been a bill no longer than an ordinary State constitution, setting up merely a frame-work of government, every Senator would have read it before this and been prepared to vote upon it. It is only because the bill is so voluminous, it is only because it goes far beyond setting up the frame-work of a government, and goes into minute details of legislation, that Senators have not read it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend should remember that he participated in framing the bill which led to the formation of the committee, and this committee were directly instructed to do two things: to make a frame-work, and also statutes necessary to carry it into execution.

Mr. THURMAN. Most unquestionably, and I was very much in favor of it. I think it was on my motion that they were also required to draught statutes, but I did not expect them to draught them all in their frame-work of government, any more than when I vote for a member of a constitutional convention to frame a constitution for my State I expect that he will put all the criminal laws and all the civil laws of the State in the constitution. But I do not wish to criticise the action of the committee. I only mention this for the purpose of showing that Senators are not factious when they move amendments to the bill reported by the committee. I mention it for the purpose of showing that the Senator has no right to suspect any Senator on this floor of any covert purpose whatever because he offers amendments to this bill or because he asks for an explanation of it. It was the duty of that committee to report statutes and I was in hopes they would report statutes, for our idea was that Congress should be the legislative power of this District, as the Constitution provides that it shall be; and I hoped therefore that we would pass the statutes which otherwise would be left to a municipal government to pass or be made in the shape of rules and regulations by some board of commissioners. I considered it much more proper that Congress should pass the necessary statutes to operate in this District. No one would think for a moment of vesting a Legislative Assembly here, such as we had but one year ago, with power to make laws regulating descent or distribution or the like. Certainly no one would think of vesting in these three commissioners or regents any such power as that. The power of legislation belongs to Congress, and I did suppose that the general statutes, so far as they might be necessary in the opinion of the committee, would be reported as separate statutes for the action of Congress, but that the frame-work of the government would be as brief at least as the constitution of the great State of New York. I did not expect one hundred and ninety-odd pages here embracing not simply the frame-work of a government but going into the minutest details of legislation.

Now, Mr. President, I am anxious and have been all the while that this subject should be fairly considered and that this District should have a good government. With some of the general ideas, or at least the most material, of this bill I concur; but I do think and have thought all the time that there were provisions in the bill, indeed who's chapters in the bill, which should be stricken out and made the subject of separate statutes to be introduced and considered by Congress. But the bill is not a dead bill unless the chairman having it in charge sees fit to kill it. Those who offer amendments do not offer them in hostility to the general features of his measure. That has been proved again and again by the votes of a majority of the Senate. They do not offer amendments, they do not ask for explanations for the purpose of killing his bill, much less for the purpose of treating it with frivolity. And although the amendments might strike out a large portion of the bill, as I think might be done with advantage, still that bill can be so reformed by amendments as to set up a proper frame-work of government, consistent with the Constitution of the United States, in this District.

I hope therefore the Senator will not abandon his offspring in this way. I hope he will not permit it to be killed, for to postpone it now means its death as every one must see. But, sir, it is not for me to admonish so able and so wise and experienced a Senator. I am not admonishing him; I am not lecturing him; I am simply expressing with an earnestness that is sincere what I feel in respect to this great measure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have had no disposition from the beginning till now to abandon this bill, and I have none now; but I find myself in such a predicament to-day because of certain commitments of my own and others, that I do not feel that in good faith I can press the consideration of it at this moment. This I stated when the bill came up on Saturday as the unfinished business of the previous day. My friend from Ohio I suppose was not in or did not understand what I said.

Mr. THURMAN. I did listen to the Senator. I cannot say that I heard all the Senator said, he spoke so low.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I undertook to state the position of this bill. I said that it having occupied three days prior to Saturday, and there being but fifteen legislative days left, including Saturday, I did not think that more than one-fifteenth part of the residue of the session belonged to this bill, or that I could claim more for it. I put it distinctly on that ground, that I should ask the Senate and would urge the consideration for one-fifteenth of the time left of a bill as important as I regarded this to be. I said distinctly that having no appropriation bill ready for to-day, I would not, if the Senate gave me the legislative day of Saturday, urge it against anything to-day, and particularly I would not urge it against gentlemen who had given notice that to-day or as soon as that bill was through they would move to take up certain other business, and particularly the Senator from Indiana who sits near me.

Now, Mr. President, although I did not have the legislative day, as I thought I had a right to have, and as I think now I had a right to have had, I feel bound in good faith not to urge this bill to-day.

Now I will say to my honorable friend from Ohio that although I have not attributed or suspected the slightest disposition to cause delay on any side of this Chamber in regard to this bill, yet I was greatly pained on Saturday at the delay and the time consumed over matters that I thought might have been dispatched a great deal more hurriedly if Senators beforehand had given the bill that consideration which they seem now to think its importance justly demands. I think I have a right to say that a great deal of time was exhausted during the progress of the day—time enough to have passed the bill and a good deal more.

I want now to say a word to my honorable friend from Ohio who addressed me on this subject and I want to show him that I think his skirts are not entirely clear on this matter. I had a right to go on with this bill; it was in a condition to be completed; it had been kept distinctly before the Senate, and every proposition assailing it had been voted down. We were in the progress of finishing it, and the next two or three hours undoubtedly would have finished it either for good or for bad. That was the condition of things. I was anxious to stay. I thought I had a right to demand of the Senate, so far as anybody having an important bill in charge ever has a right to demand—and certainly in the high sense that my honorable friend urges it on me to proceed with the bill now considering its importance, and I agree with him in that—that it stay until nine o'clock or ten o'clock if necessary and finish the bill. But to my mortification, not to say my chagrin, an adjournment was moved; the yeas and nays were taken; and my honorable friend, with pretty much all my allies on this side, went over. I am not complaining; I am not saying that there was any bad faith about it. It may be that my honorable friend understood that we had two or three days more which we could expend on this bill just as well as not, and displace something else that had no business here. But that was not my business and I have no charge of the business of the Senate except this particular thing immediately, and prospectively nine appropriation bills which will stand here demanding consideration on to-morrow at least and will confront the Senate in such a manner that I think they will find they cannot afford to put them aside.

Now if my honorable friend thinks I have vindicated myself from any disposition to abandon the bill, I shall have accomplished all I desired; but I wish to say one thing further. I have given notice that in consideration of not having had the legislative day of Saturday, I will seek the first opportunity when I think I can displace other business of less importance, when I am out of the implied faith not to disturb this day, to ask the Senate to take up this bill; and so I leave it for the present.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, if it is in order, as a division of the question has been called for and the Chair has decided that it may be called for, I will withdraw the motion I have made, and with a view of cutting off debate I now move to lay the District bill upon the table. I make that motion if it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves to lay the pending bill on the table with a view then to move to take up the Pinchback resolution.

Mr. BAYARD rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The Senator from Indiana moves to lay the District bill on the table.

Mr. STEVENSON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered and taken.

Mr. ALLISON, (having first voted nay.) Understanding that this bill is to be abandoned, I vote yea.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Doremus, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelighuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Washburn, West, and Wright—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Fenton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merriam, Norwood, Ransom, Sanisbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Ramsey, Robertson, Schurz, Stewart, Wadleigh, and Windom—16.

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution to admit Mr. Pinchback to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. BOGGY. Is the motion amendable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be amendable when it is taken up.

Mr. BOGGY. I move to amend by taking up the steamboat bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order. It has been held that it is not in order to move to amend a motion to take up one bill by inserting another bill.

Mr. BOGGY. Is it in order to move to lay this motion on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that has been done.

Mr. BOGGY. I move to lay this motion on the table with a view to take up the steamboat bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves to proceed to the consideration of the resolution admitting Mr. Pinchback. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the motion to lay on the table in order? If you cannot amend the motion, you certainly cannot lay it on the table; for the rule providing for amendments and motions to table a proposition is exactly the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it has been so held.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; go ahead.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to be understood as differing with the Chair, even on a matter of recollection; but I am quite positive that it has been said and has been ruled that a motion to take up a bill, like a motion to postpone or a motion to adjourn or many other motions that might be stated, is not open to a motion to lay on the table, as it is not to a motion to amend. I think during this session that has been the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not profess to know much about rules, but it seems to me this whole thing is determined by one consideration. If a motion to take up a bill is a debatable motion, not involving the merits of the bill—for we cannot debate them on a motion to take up—but if it is a motion which is debatable at all, then a motion to lay on the table is in order.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator pardon me a moment. A motion to postpone a bill is a debatable motion, very debatable; but is it a motion which you can move to lay on the table?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the honorable Senator that the eleventh rule provides for that.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator therefore answers my question as I would answer it; it is only so by express rule; certainly not by general parliamentary law. Is there any express rule by which you can move to lay on the table such a motion as this if it were not included in the rule, which is a motion to proceed to take up a measure? You may have an express rule by which you can move to lay on the table a motion to adjourn; but can you do it without an express rule?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think under the eleventh rule you can move to lay anything in the world on the table except a motion to adjourn or proceed to executive business. The rule provides—

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn; to proceed to the consideration of executive business; to lay on the table; to postpone indefinitely; to postpone to a day certain; to commit; or to amend; which several motions shall have precedence in the order they stand arranged; and motions to adjourn, to proceed to the consideration of executive business, and to lay on the table shall be decided without debate.

I think the Chair is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would follow, then, let me suggest to the Senator from Ohio, that a motion to amend must be in order, for if you stand on the eleventh rule a motion to postpone indefinitely or to lay on the table has no greater force than a motion to amend, for the eleventh rule says that you may move to amend when a question is under debate. If therefore this motion falls within the category of the eleventh rule as being a motion which is subject to being laid upon the table, to be postponed indefinitely, to be postponed to a day certain, to be committed, or to be amended, then the Senator from Missouri was right in making his motion to amend. You cannot say that this rule operates in one part of it upon this motion but does not operate in another part of it. The rule either does not apply to it at all; it stands as an independent motion in order to bring business for debate upon its merits under the consideration of the Senate, or it is a motion which is subject to all of these motions. You cannot say it is subject to one and not to the others. Therefore if the Senator from Ohio is right, the Senator from Missouri was clearly right upon the logic of the thing, and his motion ought to have been received. I do not know what the practice of the Senate is, but if one is admissible the other is I am quite sure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate. The Senator from Indiana moved to proceed to the consideration of the resolution admitting Mr. Pinchback to a seat; the Senator from Missouri moves to lay that motion on the table. The point of order is raised that the latter motion is not in order, and the Chair submits that question to the Senate.

Mr. HAGER. I ask the Chair if the question is stated properly. The Senator from Indiana moved to take from the table the resolution. It has been taken from the table, as I understand, and is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. WEST. O, no.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; we laid the District bill on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, is the motion of the Senator from Missouri to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Indiana in order?

The question, being put, was declared to be decided in the negative.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the question? I did not hear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whether the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Indiana was in order. The Chair will put the question again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am quite sure the Chair was right in the first place. Let me put a case to the Senate. Suppose a Senator should move to take up some proposition that would lead to debate. A limited amount of debate is always authorized on a motion to take up a bill or proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not on its merits.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, on its merits or some other way. It is open to some debate. Suppose a majority—

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule expressly prohibits debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be considered—the same eleventh rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that rule perfectly; but nevertheless such a motion is open to limited debate and has been debated. Such motions have been debated time out of mind. Now, sir, the motion to lay on the table was intended to enable the Senate at any time to dispose of any question under debate, to do anything it pleased; otherwise, the only way you could get rid of a motion made to take up a particular subject-matter would be to adjourn or go into executive session. The Senate certainly ought always to retain its power to lay aside without debate a proposition to take up a particular bill. I have seen it done here fifty times.

I do not see any use in Senators on either side of a question getting into any discussion of points of order about this matter. I would rather see the question put and let the vote on laying this proposition of the Senator from Indiana on the table be made a test question. As I have no doubt a majority of the Senate have made up their minds as indicated by the previous votes to take up the case of Pinchback, let us go on with it and not waste our time here on points of order and propositions that only waste time. Let us vote as a test-vote on this proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not suppose that I am on either side of the merits of this question because this point of order is pending. I think I may say to him with some strength that it will require some argument which has not yet been delivered to make it clear to me that the merits of the Pinchback question are in any particular direction; and therefore I do not by any means wish to be set down as being on any particular side and as raising a question of order because I have a particular object to gain by it. That is not my attitude at all. I only say that if the motion to lay on the table is in order, the motion the Senator from Missouri made to amend the proposition is also in order, because the eleventh rule expressly says that if you can do the one thing upon a question you can do the other. But it has been decided over and over again that you cannot amend a motion to proceed to the consideration of a particular measure. That was decided by Vice-President Colfax, to my recollection, with the universal acquiescence of the Senate. If you cannot do that, then it follows necessarily that you cannot move to lay it on the table by force of the eleventh rule, because that is a motion touching the merits, putting it out of the way. The motion to adjourn and the motion to proceed to executive business stand on entirely different considerations, because when either prevails the pending question would still be before the Senate, when it finishes its executive business or meets again, will it proceed to consider the motion to proceed to the consideration of that particular measure. But when you come to the motion to amend or lay on the table, then you are acting upon the question itself and not superseding it, as a motion to adjourn does. That is the difference.

If the Senate had not decided over and over again that this motion is not amendable, I should have agreed with the Senator from Ohio that it was the subject of being postponed indefinitely, which would put it off forever, and so you would never reach the merits, or of any other motion under that rule; but the Senate having so decided, and there being no precedent of which I know of a motion to lay a proposition of this kind on the table, I think that in following out the decision we have already made we must hold that this is not in order. That is all.

Mr. BAYARD. The construction of this general Rule No. 11 seems to me very plain, and under it there can be no doubt in my opinion that the motion to lay on the table is in order upon any question under debate, and I find no exclusion of the question now under debate from the general operation contemplated by this rule. If there be any other rule or anything to be gathered from any other rule in conflict with this provision of Rule 11, I have been unable to find it. Therefore, with my present lights, I consider the motion of the Senator from Missouri in order. At the same time I beg leave to say that I trust it may not prevail. The Senate is aware that two weeks and more ago the honorable Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] obtained the floor to speak upon the Louisiana question; that his sudden illness prevented his delivering his speech, and from the time of his recovery until now he has been desirous of being heard upon that subject; and understanding that this motion is made by the honorable Senator from Indiana—I understand this privately—partly to enable the honorable Senator from California speedily to be heard, I earnestly trust that his wishes on this subject may be considered on both sides of the Chamber, and that for his convenience there will be no hesitancy in allowing this question to be taken. Although I must say, as I said before, that I think under the rule the motion of the Senator from Missouri is in order. I trust it will not prevail.

Mr. BOGY. I have no doubt the Senator from California will make a very fine speech, and we shall all be glad to hear him; but I do think the steamboat bill is much more important, and I should like to have the yeas and nays on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator request the yeas and nays on the point of order?

Mr. BOGY. No, sir; on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the point of order, which the Chair submits again to the Senate.

Mr. BOGY. I thought my motion had been decided by the Chair to be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submitted it to the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say one word on this Rule 11. It seems to me that the argument of the Senator from Vermont, although it appears extremely plausible, is not sound. I do not place my view of the question under consideration upon Rule 11. I think the Senator from Missouri has a right to move to lay the motion on the table, and I think he has a right to do that under the general parliamentary law, and I do not think he derives that right from Rule 11. I think Rule 11 is not one that confers the right to make the motion; but it is for another purpose, to exclude the making of other motions and to regulate the order of precedence in which the motions enumerated in the rule shall be considered. That, I think, is it. I do not think Rule 11 was adopted for the purpose of conferring the right to make these motions, but on the contrary it was for the purposes I have mentioned. It provides expressly—

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but.

And then it enumerates seven motions. The operation of the rule, therefore, is first to prevent any other than one of these enumerated being made. Then the last clause of the rule provides as to the precedence of these motions: "which several motions shall have precedence in the order they stand arranged." Then the last clause provides that certain of these motions shall be decided without debate and that certain others of them may be debated, but not on the merits of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question, because I do not wish to take up time. If the Senator is right, that this does not fall within the eleventh rule as being one of the subjects mentioned in it and it is a general parliamentary right, would it not follow as well that you may move by general parliamentary right to amend?

Mr. THURMAN. I think it would.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senate has decided over and over again that it would not allow that.

Mr. THURMAN. I think so; but because the Senate may have made one erroneous decision it does not follow as a matter of course that we ought to make another; and yet there is a distinction between the cases, and to that I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont.

The reason why it was held before that you could not move to amend a motion to take up one bill by substituting another bill, was that if you were allowed to do that you might never be able to get at any bill, for motion after motion could be made; as fast as one motion to amend was voted down, somebody could move to amend by striking out the name of the bill mentioned and inserting another, and so on, and thus you could never come to a conclusion. Because that might be done, it was thought well to prevent such a result, and I recollect that reason being given by the Vice-President who decided it, and whose decision has been referred to as a reason why a motion to amend a motion to take up a bill was out of order. But that does not apply at all to the motion to lay on the table; for that, instead of being a motion that prolongs the consideration of a subject or enables delay or dilatory motions to be made, is just exactly in the opposite direction—it cuts off debate. It does seem to me, therefore, that the motion is in order. But I was in hopes that the Senator from Missouri would not press it; for I concur in what was said by the Senator from Delaware that it is due to the Senator from California and is according to that courtesy which we have always been accustomed to extend to each other on this floor that he should be allowed to proceed with his remarks. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Missouri on further consideration will withdraw his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the point of order. The question is, is the motion of the Senator from Missouri to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Indiana in order?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am inclined to concur in the view which the Senator from Ohio has taken in relation to the rule which has been referred to, the eleventh rule; but I think the Senator is mistaken in supposing that the rule has anything to do with this motion now before the Senate. The rule which gives consecutively the motions that may be made when a question is under debate applies to that which is before the Senate for its consideration. The motion submitted by the Senator from Indiana is one to bring a question before the Senate. If that shall be decided affirmatively, we then will have before the Senate a subject to which that rule will apply, and as to which a motion may be made, first to adjourn, and so on down to the end of the list of motions therein specified. But I submit that this is not one of the motions contemplated by the rule as it stands. It would be nonsensical. If it be in order to lay the motion of the Senator from Indiana on the table, it is in order to commit it; and what have you got to commit? What would be the condition of the subject? We want to get at a specific subject for discussion and action; and you propose to submit that to a committee, and you thus avoid the wish of the Senate.

If I am right, and I think I am, in the construction of the rule, the motion in my judgment is clearly out of order; just as much out of order as it would be to move to amend; and there can be certainly no doubt upon that question. If it be in order to postpone it, if it be in order to lay it upon the table, it must be in order to amend it. But it is not, I submit again, one of that class of cases which come within the rule; and not coming within the rule, the motion to lay upon the table should not be entertained by the Senate. I do not know what the practice of the Senate has been; but I do know that you can find precedents for almost anything, and precedents that are often established without the slightest discussion, without the examination of their bearing, without even the knowledge of a larger portion of the Senate that the question is so decided at the time when it is decided. I believe that the motion ought not to be entertained; and in addition to what I have said, it would be the mere negation of the affirmative form of the original form.

Mr. THURMAN. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this question, so as to have a precedent.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I am going to vote the opinion—I forget whether it is "yea" or "nay"—that this motion is not in order. A motion to lay on the table a motion to proceed to the consideration of a specific bill or resolution, I think, cannot be in order for this plain reason: As it seems to me you cannot lay it upon the table, you cannot get it out of the consideration of the Senate but in one way, and that is by adjourning. I suppose a motion to adjourn would be in order and would take precedence, and so would a motion to go into executive session. But what is the question under consideration and open to debate, or a motion to proceed to consider a particular bill or resolution? All the arguments that tend to show you ought to consider that bill at this time. Suppose you go through the form of laying that motion on the table and do not adjourn, do not go into executive session, you have got to move to proceed to the consideration of some other measure; and whatever that measure is, precisely the same line of debate is open upon it. Every single argument that would be pertinent on the motion of the Senator from Indiana would be pertinent, would be strictly germane upon any possible motion which could follow that, except a motion to adjourn or to go into executive session. So it seems to me. Therefore I shall vote that it is out of order to submit a motion to do what cannot be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Will the Chair state the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moved to proceed to the consideration of the case of Mr. Pinchback. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay that motion on the table. The point of order is raised that such a motion cannot be laid on the table. The question is, is the motion of the Senator from Missouri to lay on the table in order?

Mr. CLAYTON. How does the Chair decide the point of order? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submitted it to the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON. Made no decision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Made no decision.

Mr. THURMAN. Those who are of opinion that the motion to lay on the table is in order vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; and those of the opposite opinion vote "nay." [Laughter.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Spencer, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Davis, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Robertson, Stewart, and Tipton—19.

So the Senate decided that the motion of Mr. BOGY was not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.]

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by Mr. MORTON on the 8th instant:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a short time in stating the question which is now presented. Mr. Pinchback has presented credentials properly certified, signed by the governor of Louisiana, countersigned by the secretary of state, showing that on a given day in January, 1873, in accordance with the act of Congress, he was elected to a seat in this body for the term commencing on the 4th of March, 1873. The simple question presented is whether, upon these credentials, thus signed, countersigned, and bearing the seal of the State of Louisiana, he is entitled to his seat; and if there be questions as to whether he was properly elected, as to whether the Legislature was properly organized, or whether he was guilty of conduct in the election that would prevent him from properly becoming a member of this body, they cannot be inquired into until after he has taken his seat.

I shall confine my remarks to presenting a few authorities on this point which I consider as quite conclusive. It is no part of my purpose to go over the old Louisiana story. The Senate knows it by heart. The first authority that I present was that growing out of the admission of Mr. GOLDTHWAITE as a member of this body from the State of Alabama. It was objected that Mr. GOLDTHWAITE was not properly elected; that there were members in the Legislature of Alabama who voted for him and whose votes were necessary to his election who had not themselves been elected; that others voted for him who were under the disabilities of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution and had no right to a seat in the Legislature of Alabama under any circumstances. In other words, the question was whether Mr. GOLDTHWAITE had been elected in fact by the Legislature of Alabama. The Committee on Privileges and Elections reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That GEORGE GOLDTHWAITE be permitted to take a seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Alabama upon taking the proper oath; and that the Committee on Privileges and Elections proceed hereafter to consider the grounds on which his right to a seat is contested, and hereafter make report to the Senate thereon.

The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] then a member of the committee, in the course of his remarks said:

So far as GOLDTHWAITE was concerned that report was unanimous on the part of the committee, as appears by the report itself, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It went upon the ground, which has been observed ever since, this Government was formed, that the certificate of election of a Senator was prima facie evidence of his right to a seat and sufficient until it was overthrown; that he was entitled on that prima facie case to his seat in the body, and if any one said he was not entitled to it the contestant was bound to overthrow that prima facie case by sufficient charges and sufficient testimony, but that in the mean time the Senator was entitled to his seat on his prima facie case.

There was not, and there is not, as I had occasion to observe then, after a most careful examination of all the precedents, a single case in the whole history of this Government in which that rule has been departed from.

And upon that report Mr. GOLDTHWAITE was seated upon his prima facie case.

In the case from Rhode Island, in 1834, Mr. Robbins had the certificate of the governor that he was elected by the Legislature of Rhode Island; but the question was whether he was elected by the Legislature of Rhode Island; whether, in point of fact, the body that elected him was a legislative body at all; and the question was a very grave one. The term of the governor of Rhode Island, of the lieutenant-governor, and of the members of the Senate, had, by a joint resolution of the two bodies, been extended one year—a remarkable resolution and one presenting a strange question. After that Legislature by its own resolution had extended its existence one year, it elected Mr. Robbins to the Senate. The question was whether it was a Legislature at all; and the Senate of the United States, after a long debate, decided that Mr. Robbins had a prima facie case on the governor's certificate, and he was admitted to his seat; and the question as to whether the Legislature was a lawful one was decided afterward, and after long debate and consideration.

So far as I can find out by examination, as stated by the Senator from Ohio in the Goldthwaite case, there is no precedent to the contrary. It has always been held that a person presenting the certificate of the governor of a State had a prima facie case, and that all questions as to his valid election, as to his conduct during the election, could only be investigated after that time.

But, Mr. President, not intending to take the time of the Senate, I shall content myself by referring to one other case, which is the most full and satisfactory of any of them. I refer to the case of General Shields, who was admitted as a member of this body in 1849. Before he was admitted a motion was made to refer his credentials to the Committee on the Judiciary, upon the ground that General Shields had not been nine years a citizen of the United States; that he had not the qualification required by the Constitution. This presented the strongest possible case. Here was a candidate for admission who, it was claimed, did not possess a qualification required by the Constitution; that is, he had not been a citizen of the United States the proper length of time; and if any question could be examined in advance of admission it would seem to me that that would be the one. The question came up for discussion, and the debate was participated in by Mr. Douglas of Illinois, Mr. Mangum of North Carolina, Mr. Walker of Wisconsin, Mr. Turney of Tennessee, Mr. Badger of North Carolina, Mr. Butler of South Carolina, Mr. Webster of Massachusetts, Mr. Atchison of Missouri, Mr. Berrien of Georgia, and Mr. Foote of Mississippi. After full debate, and I believe with the concurrence of all these Senators, it was decided that he had a prima facie case upon the governor's certificate, and that no question could be raised as to whether he was a citizen of the United States or had been properly elected until after he had taken his seat. He was thereupon sworn in, and after that the question was examined; he was found not to have been a citizen of the United States the requisite period, and was turned out of the Senate. I shall ask the Clerk to read this debate. It is not very long, and that is all the speech I propose to make at this time. I consider it conclusive on this question. It leaves but one point. If we recognize Mr. Kellogg as the governor of Louisiana, then Mr. Pinchback has a prima facie case to a seat in this body, and whatever objections there may be to the character of the body by which he was elected, to the mode and manner of his election, can be inquired into only after he has taken his seat; for, as was said by Mr. Webster, the Senate gets no jurisdiction of any question connected with the case until after he becomes a member of the body.

Mr. SARGENT. It will take an hour to read it.

Mr. MORTON. O, no; not more than fifteen minutes. However, this debate is somewhat lengthy; and as I am anxious not to take the time of the Senate, I will ask to have it incorporated in my remarks, and will notify Senators where it is to be found, so that any one can examine and see whether I have stated the substance of this debate correctly.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Will the Senator give the page?

Mr. MORTON. Volume 20, Congressional Globe, second session Thirtieth Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the date of the year?

Mr. MORTON. Eighteen hundred and forty-nine, on the 6th day of March.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. What page?

Mr. MORTON. Page 327. I now yield the floor to the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] and ask to have the debate referred to incorporated in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The debate referred to is as follows:

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I again rise to a question of privilege. I do it without any concert with my colleague, whom I desire to be sworn. I do it as the only representative present from the State of Illinois, which is entitled to two Senators on this floor. It appears from the credentials now on your table that James Shields was elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of Illinois for six years from the 4th instant. His credentials are in due form, and therefore those credentials entitle him to a seat in this body. He stands in precisely the same position in which other Senators stood who were yesterday admitted to seats; and if there is any objection on the ground of ineligibility, it must arise after he has been sworn and has taken his seat. This body has no jurisdiction over him on this matter until he has been admitted to his seat as one of its members, for then alone can the question of eligibility arise. At present he has a right to a seat here, and to a vote on any question that may arise until the Senate shall adjudge him ineligible. In assuming this ground, I am justified by the uniform precedents, so far as I have examined them.

In the case of Mr. Gallatin, which is a leading case on this subject, he was sworn, took his seat, and voted until the Senate decided the question of eligibility and adjudged that question against him, and then he was turned out.

In the case of Mr. Smith, of South Carolina, in which the question of alienage arose, he was sworn in, and subsequently, I believe, the question of alienage was decided in his favor.

Mr. BUTLER. Where do you find that case?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I find it among the cases of contested elections.

Then there was the case of Mr. Rich, from Michigan, which was also one of alienage, but he was sworn. And you will find that in every case that has arisen, that has been the course pursued, with perhaps one exception; and in fact that constitutes no exception at all, for the facts appeared on the face of the credentials, and it was not a case arising on an objection by an individual Senator. If, sir, in this case the ineligibility was shown on the face of the credentials, I would not ask that General Shields should be sworn. But if the credentials are in the usual form, and that is not doubted, the presumption is in his favor, and he has a right to a seat here until the Senate shall adjudge him ineligible. All I ask, sir, is that the State of Illinois may be treated as other States are treated. If there is no ineligibility shown on the face of the credentials, to deprive him of the right conferred upon him by his State, this will furnish the first instance of the rejection of a Senator when his credentials are in due form. And why, sir, should there be such an exception now made in this case? I speak not, sir, on behalf of the claimant of this seat; but I speak on behalf of the State of Illinois, which I in part represent. I insist, sir, that if you were now engaged in calling the yeas and nays, and his credentials had not been presented, it would be my right and my duty to present his credentials, and it would be his right to be sworn and vote on the pending question. I call upon the Senate to pause and examine this question. The Senate is not yet organized. No business can be done until the constitutional rights of members to their seats have been acceded to. I do not say that General Shields is eligible to a seat on this floor. I know nothing of the facts, sir; but I do know, from the credentials on your table, that he has been duly elected by the Legislature of the State of Illinois. His credentials are in due form. They are in such form as to make it a matter of right that he shall take his seat. I know also that yesterday you swore other members who presented credentials identically the same. And I likewise know that hitherto you have never refused the right to a seat to any gentleman coming with like credentials. After General Shields shall have been sworn and admitted to a seat I shall throw no impediment in the way of any examination that the Senate may desire to make of the facts of the case. It is the right of this body then to institute an investigation when objections are made; but (and I say it with great respect) this body has no right to reject without examination a Senator, when he presents his credentials in due form, showing that he has a right to a seat here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois insist on his question of privilege?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir; on the ground that the State of Illinois is entitled to two votes in this Senate.

Mr. MANGUM. Mr. President, I am disposed to think that the Senator from Illinois is right. The credentials in this case are in due form; they are properly authenticated under the seal of the State, and hence they constitute a prima facie case. If it be deemed necessary, the Senate can enter upon an investigation after the claimant has been admitted to his seat; and, with my present impressions, I withdraw my resolution.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, I withdrew my resolution to permit the Senator from North Carolina to offer his resolution; but as he has now withdrawn it, I renew my motion, and in doing so I wish to give some expression of my feelings on this subject.

The Secretary read Mr. Walker's resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the certificate of election of Hon. James Shields to a seat in this body be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire into the eligibility of the said James Shields to a seat in the Senate of the United States as a member thereof.

Mr. TURNER. I suppose that resolution is not yet before the Senate.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The question pending is my motion that James Shields be sworn.

Mr. BUTLER. Which is a privileged question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir; a privileged question.

Mr. TURNER. I insist that a prima facie case is presented which entitles the claimant to a seat; and it is not in the power of any one to exclude him from the enjoyment of his right. Why, if this were so, one member by an objection could yesterday have excluded one-third of this body; for yesterday one-third of the seats here were vacant, and they were filled by gentlemen on the presentation of just such credentials. It cannot be done, sir. I insist that General Shields is entitled to his seat, and if any constitutional question shall arise the Senate may then inquire as to his eligibility to remain here.

Mr. BADGER. I imagine that there is very little difference of opinion among Senators as to the right of General Shields to be sworn in at the present time as a member of this body. In the absence of any precedents to the contrary, it seems to me perfectly clear that General Shields, having presented to the Senate his credentials, showing in proper form his election to a seat in this body, is entitled to be sworn in as a member of this body, and treated as constitutionally a member of this body, until upon investigation it shall be fully ascertained that he is not constitutionally eligible to a seat here. That is undoubtedly the general rule, and I do not see that any question as to the particular practice or precedents of the Senate with reference to his eligibility can make any difference in the application of the rule. It is a question solely for him to decide, personally, whether he will choose to avail himself of the right which these credentials give him, to be sworn in as a member before the question of his eligibility is settled, or not. It does not seem to me that there is any conflict whatever between the application to swear in General Shields and the resolution offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to refer his credentials to an appropriate committee, so that they may be duly examined and reported upon.

Mr. BUTLER. I entertain views which differ from some which have been expressed here. General Shields comes here with credentials, under the seal of the State of Illinois, in due form; and it is to be presumed that it has thoroughly investigated the matter, and that the State which has given him a commission under its seal has decided primarily upon his qualifications. Coming here, then, with prima facie qualifications and credentials, I cannot see how we can refuse him the right to be sworn as a member of this body. I think the case is analogous to proceedings at law involving the rights of membership—the right of holding office. Usually, the question is made, under proceedings by a writ of quo warranto, "By what right do you hold office?" The member is sworn in, and the question as to his eligibility to a seat is afterward determined.

If the State has given General Shields his credentials, as it is proved by the facts before us, it is a delicate matter—a very delicate matter—to decide as to his eligibility. If the Senate concur generally in my views, he should be at once admitted upon the authority of these credentials. The examination of his constitutional eligibility unquestionably should be deferred until after he has taken his seat. I give no opinion upon the legality of his election; but I take the liberty of saying that when this matter is inquired into—as it certainly will be—I trust that it will be referred for investigation to a committee on privilege, especially raised for the purpose. The Senator from Wisconsin desires this to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Now there is no such committee; but when one shall be organized, its duty will be to examine questions of law; and that does not touch the high question involved in this debate. I think that the leading members of the Senate ought to constitute that committee, without regard to party.

Mr. WEBSTER. This is a very important question, sir, and it becomes us so to act as not to deprive ourselves of the power to exercise our undoubted constitutional right of judging of the qualifications of a member of this body, at the same time to act with all proper respect toward the State which has sent us a Senator which it has elected. To observe the established precedents in cases of this character is the best course we can adopt. There may be instances or precedents in which objection has been made before the member has taken his seat in either one House or the other. This gentleman's case is the other way. Being admitted to his seat, he is then to produce his credentials, and they are to be examined and investigated by the Senate, to decide if, constitutionally, he is eligible to a seat here. I think the proper course to be adopted in this instance is to allow the gentleman to be sworn at once.

Mr. ATCHISON. On yesterday my attention was called to the Journal of the Senate, in relation to the proceedings in the case of Mr. Gallatin. I found there that when Mr. Gallatin presented himself on the authority of his credentials, he was sworn in, and another Senator was sworn in immediately after him. As soon as he had been sworn in, a communication, in the shape of a remonstrance from the State of Pennsylvania, as to his eligibility to office, was presented to the Senate, and proceedings were had to test his eligibility. He was first sworn in, however, and no objection was made to his being thus sworn. It is very strongly to be presumed that, prior to his being sworn, the remonstrance was in the hands of the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. BERRIEN. I do not apprehend that the adoption of either of the courses suggested this morning in relation to the reception of General Shields will affect the ultimate action of the Senate upon the subject of his eligibility; but I do not concur in some of the suggestions which have been made, and I will therefore express very briefly the views I entertain upon the subject, premising that no one is more disposed to pay proper respect to the certificate of a State of the Union than I am myself.

It is said that the credentials of this gentleman are prima facie evidence of the qualification necessary to his admission as a member of this body. I think not, sir. Until the evidence is controverted it must be correct evidence of the regularity of the election by the Legislature of his State, but that is the only thing. It is not even prima facie evidence of the qualifications of the individual. But, sir, it is suggested that the presentation of these credentials, this application to the Senate to be sworn in immediately, should be concurred in by the Senate, and that they must stand, when thus concurred in, until an investigation is made by the Senate as to the gentleman's eligibility; now, on the other hand, when a member of this body offers a resolution proposing an inquiry into the legality of the election of a Senator, I suppose that some attention should be paid to the representations of that Senator, and therefore what would seem to me a correct course on this question, would be that the Senator from Wisconsin should state to the Senate the grounds upon which he submits his resolution, and such facts as he may be able to present in relation to the matter, so that we may be enabled to decide advisedly between the two courses suggested to be taken. I make this suggestion because I apprehend that the applicant in this case is not disposed to contest the facts of the case, but, admitting them, to rest his claim upon the constitutional question which they present. The facts in the case, I suppose, will be presented to the Senate by the Senator moving this resolution, so that a decision upon his constitutional eligibility may be had.

Mr. DOUGLAS. My motion is not made at the request, nor even with the knowledge, of General Shields. It is made by me, as a Senator from Illinois, insisting on the rights of that State. I have no objection to the Senator from Wisconsin making any statement he chooses at the proper time; but if he is to go on and make statements of facts with respect to the question at issue—thus superseding my motion—I contend that his course will be wholly irregular. I insist that the proper mode is to allow General Shields to be sworn, and then to proceed with the investigation of the testimony in the case regularly. As regards the facts in the case, I do not know what they are myself, and am therefore not prepared at present to make any statement as to the legality or non-legality of the election.

Mr. WALKER. I do not wish to pursue any course of action in relation to this question without full regard to the wishes of honorable Senators. Upon a former occasion, sir, before you occupied the post of Presiding Officer of this body, when the question of the reception of General Shields was up, I rose and stated my object in making the motion which I submitted; but, upon the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina, it was withdrawn. I then stated that in justice to General Shields, to the Senate, and to the country, I would move a reference of his credentials to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire into the eligibility of General Shields. I say now, and I wish to be understood when I made the motion as declaring, that I have no wish or desire of the remotest kind to place General Shields in a position where injustice can be done him, or to do anything which shall exclude him from a seat upon this floor. I have known him long in different capacities, military and civil; I know him to be a gentleman of ability. The country is acquainted with his capacity, and the enemies of this country also, I think, can testify to his efficiency. I knew him at an early period of my life in the State from whence he comes, which was then the home of us both. The lapse of time has not operated upon the heart that pulsates in my bosom in such manner as that I could urge any malicious objection to the admission of an old and esteemed friend as the representative of a State to the body in which I have been honored with a seat. I disclaim all such feelings before the Senate, before the country, before the friends of General Shields, and before that gentleman himself, if he is present; but in justice to that gentleman, in justice to the Senate, and in justice to the country, I desire that an investigation by a proper committee may be had upon this subject. Would it be just to General Shields, to the Senate, or to the country, particularly to the State which has honored General Shields with a seat here, first to admit him and afterward to expel him from this body? Those who purpose to take that course must take a different view of this matter than I do. It would seem to be a far preferable course to allow General Shields to do—what I am informed he is prepared to do—show that he is not endeavoring to thrust himself into this body, and to give him an opportunity of proving that he is entitled to the honor which his State has conferred on him, and which will through all future time bring credit to the State which has conferred it. It seems to me this is much the better course; to give General Shields the opportunity of proving his eligibility before he is sworn than first to swear him and then afterward may have to expel him. These are my conscientious views on this subject. If they are wrong, it is because I have not a just appreciation of its merits. I do not wish to resist whatever shall be deemed the proper course of the Senate on this question; but, as has been intimated by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Berrien,] unless objections are made with relation to a point of order, I will state the grounds that have induced me to bring forward this resolution fully and explicitly.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not rise exactly to a question of order, but would simply suggest that if the Senator from Wisconsin is to go on and present the evidence at large, and facts pertaining to the eligibility of General Shields, it will in some degree prejudice the minds of the committee and of Senators upon the question.

Mr. WALKER. So I thought; my opinion of this course of action on my part corresponds with that of the Senator from South Carolina. With reference to precedents on this subject, I would say that in presenting this resolution I did not desire to violate the usual course of proceedings; I did not desire to urge the adoption of a new and extraordinary mode of conduct. I have not examined all the cases of a similar character to the one before us; I have only had the opportunity of looking into a few of them. The case of Mr. Gallatin is not one that can be quoted as a precedent for the course suggested by the Senator from Illinois. That seems to have been a case where previous objection was not made. Mr. Gallatin appeared and was duly sworn, and it was not until some time after he had been thus qualified that objection was made to his occupying a seat in this Chamber.

But it is said that no precedent can be shown for the course that I have seen fit to suggest. I am informed, sir, that there is a precedent. I am informed that a Senator from Connecticut once presented his credentials, but that, in consequence of some question of ineligibility, he was refused his seat.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would submit whether, in the case of the Senator from Connecticut, it did not stand upon the following grounds: The constitutional term of the Senator from Connecticut had expired, and the State Legislature failed to make any election of Senator in his place. The Governor of the State thereupon made an appointment, and the objection was taken that the governor had no authority, in case of such vacancy, to appoint a Senator, and therefore the Senator was excluded from a seat in this body. The fact appeared on the face of his credentials, and therefore it was seen that he had no sort of right to a seat as Senator. In this case there is simply a presumption as to the Senator's ineligibility to membership of this body. The very case of the Senator from Connecticut strengthens the general rule for which I contend.

Mr. BERRIEN. Mr. President, I desire simply to explain why I suggested the propriety of the Senator from Wisconsin stating the grounds upon which he based his resolution. In my judgment, such a statement would be neither unusual nor wanting in delicacy; but in regard to the other question—the question of order—why, sir, it is the every-day practice, when a Senator is about to submit a resolution for the consideration of the Senate, to state upon what grounds he requests the consideration of that resolution; and surely it is but the dictate of common sense, when a Senator comes here and presents his credentials, and asks to be sworn, that he should not be prevented from being sworn by the mere submission by one Senator of an unexplained resolution. That would seem to me an act of gross injustice. Here is a gentleman producing the credentials of his State, certifying his election as a Senator, who asks to be sworn; and it cannot be permitted for another Senator to get up and by the mere submission of an unexplained resolution deprive him of the privilege which he asks. Certainly if we are called upon to consider the resolution, if it be proposed, as we are to presume, upon a knowledge of certain facts which would be considered sufficient grounds for offering the resolution, and if we are called upon to support it, we must be made participants in that knowledge. We cannot act without it; and hence the suggestion which I made that the Senator, having objected to the administration of the oath of office to the applicant by the resolution which he has submitted, must be presumed to have done it upon grounds satisfactory to himself; and before he called upon us to participate in that resolution, to sustain it by our votes. I think it was proper that we should be advised of those grounds.

Sir, it is perfectly indifferent to me, except as relates to the observance of order and the principles of the Constitution, what course may be pursued. As the Senator from Wisconsin says, we must ultimately come to the consideration of the resolution. I have no wish upon this subject, except that the ordinary and proper course should be pursued, and that our constitutional obligations should be maintained.

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. President, I should consider it in very bad taste, indeed, for me to undertake to occupy the attention of the Senate at this time, and under existing circumstances, by an extended address, either argumentative or declamatory. It is certainly not because I do not feel a just deference for the opinions of those distinguished gentlemen who seem to be of opinion that the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Douglas] should not prevail that I feel authorized to say, in hearing of the Senate, (and I think what I have to say on this point will be sanctioned by all who hear us,) that the argument of the question is now exhausted; that it is now established, beyond all reasonable doubt, that precedent sustains fully the motion of the Senator from Illinois; that that motion is grounded firmly and irresistibly upon parliamentary usage. And I cannot perceive anything in the circumstances of this case which should constitute an exception to a general rule which, I think, has been fully established.

I have risen, therefore, simply for the purpose of stating my opinion in this general form, and for the additional purpose (which I trust will not be offensive to any) of expressing the high gratification which I feel at the admirable temper and spirit exhibited in this body on the present occasion; and having thus expressed myself, being ready to vote, and believing that others are also, I trust that our time will not be occupied at any considerable length beyond the present moment in a discussion that, it seems to me, is unnecessary, and that will result unprofitably, and that may, perchance, be productive of more or less ill feeling.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Douglas, and it was agreed to.

Mr. Shields was then qualified, and took his seat.—Congressional Globe, volume 20, second session Thirtieth Congress, pages 327-329.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the resolution before the Senate and the action proposed is but one phase of the very many-sided question that comes up to us continually from the South. It would be impossible at the present time to discuss any question relating to the political condition of the South without more or less involving consideration, with regard to every other. I had prepared some time since, as is known to the Senate, some observations with reference to the general condition of Louisiana, some considerations upon the employment of military force in Louisiana to put down insurrection, and upon the circumstances which happened when an attempt was made by fraud and by force to seize the lower house of the Legislature of Louisiana and subvert the existing State government. I did not have an opportunity to make those remarks, not through the fault of the Senate, but through my own illness; and now at the earliest opportunity, when this subject is properly before the Senate, I desire to make the observations upon that branch of the subject which I should have made at that earlier day.

I am very well aware that if epithets and catch-words would convince the Senate and annihilate the republican party, such debates as this would have terminated long since and all these questions would have been disposed of. We have been assured over and over again by democratic Senators that the President has been guilty of usurpation; that the republican party are trying to subvert the liberties of the State of Louisiana and to destroy the rights of a people; that the people of New Orleans are patriotically struggling for their rights and liberties. This is the tone which is assumed by Senators and by the democratic press of the North and South in the mock appeals which they make to Congress and to the North. Such talk is not new in this Hall. Such utterances in this Hall and out of it hailed the outbreak of the rebellion and accompanied it step by step throughout its progress. Such talk is not new in Louisiana, of a crushed people, of people struggling for their liberties in resistance to a central despotism. Here is the way that Governor Moore, the governor of that State in 1861, talked to the truly loyal people there:

The Government at Washington—

He said—

maddened by defeat and the successful maintenance by our patriotic people of their liberties and rights against its usurpation in the harbor of Charleston, has now thrown off the mask, and sustained by the people of the non-slaveholding States is actually engaged in levying war, by sea and land, to subvert your liberties, destroy your rights, and shed your blood on your own soil.

That is the language which we hear now; that we are subverting the rights of a people; that we are guilty of usurpation; that the Administration is maddened by political defeat, and is endeavoring to overthrow the government of Louisiana. The air has been filled with such declarations, and it is filled with them now.

A short time ago the State of Missouri sent to the Senate its utterances and conclusions with regard to the progress of things in Louisiana, and it said: The acts of the Government in Louisiana are—

An outrage upon a helpless people, calculated to insult and bring into public odium the gallant Army of the United States, intended for nobler purposes than that of upholding an effete local usurpation.

When I heard that resolution read to the Senate, containing very much more of the same character as the slight extract from it which I quote, I was reminded of the charges brought against President Lincoln in 1861 by this same Legislature—charges nearly identical with those which they now fulminate against the present President of the United States. That Legislature then said that Lincoln had acted "in avowed defiance of the Constitution of the United States;" that he was exercising "usurped power;" that he was making "an unholy attempt to reduce a free people into subjection to him," &c. I certainly am right in saying that the declarations which we hear now on this floor and by the democratic press of the country, and which come up from Louisiana, are simply the echoes of the old cry which in 1861 hailed and stimulated the rebellion. They mean exactly the same thing now that they meant then, and they are as false to-day as they were false then.

I think the eloquent Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] cannot enjoy the acclaim of the enthusiastic members of the party in the rotunda of the hall of the Legislature of Missouri, which recently elected his successor to this body. I would not be unkind in directing attention to the political history of Missouri a few years past, when by the then apparent effect of the political action of the Senator from Missouri there was a train of circumstances set in motion which led inevitably to the election of Cockrell, or some other confederate general, or a man wholly sympathizing with those ideas. I suppose the Senator from Missouri then, in spite of the plain pointing out which was made to him of the result of the action which he then took, did not believe that that action would result as it has resulted. How has it resulted? In sending a man diametrically opposed to the principles which he then professed. How was the election of his successor hailed by the men he has been encouraging to destroy him and his party? The Saint Louis Journal says:

There was great rejoicing among Cockrell's friends over his election. The scene in the rotunda beggared description. The great mass of humanity surged to and fro, some cheering madly, others hooting and cursing, and all excited to the highest possible pitch. The rebel element here manifested itself prominently. "By G—d, we've beat 'em at last!" "Yes, d—n 'em! the gray has scooped the blue this time! 'Mebbe we haint just crawled out of the brush!" "Whoo'er up boys, and see how old Grant likes the rebel yell this time!" These were the cries that resounded through the halls of the old capitol building.

I do not believe that those cries were any more grateful to the ears of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] than they would be to mine; but I do insist that the course of many men who a few years ago were trusted by the republican party who were in full fellowship with it, and who deserted that party or denied its principles, has led, logically and necessarily, to such a consummation as that witnessed in Missouri.

Now, sir, we have also learned from democratic Senators their ideas of constitutional law. We have violated, they say, the sacred Constitution, and so has the President, in Louisiana, and hours of melancholy jeremiads have been uttered over that desecrated instrument. Not a democratic speech has been made by a Senator in this Hall where he has not been luminous, ay voluminous, upon constitutional power. I impeach the law of these orators. I deny that they understand or have ever understood the Constitution of this country. They have been expounding the Constitution of the country for the past fifteen years, and as constitutional expounders they have been lamentable failures. Not learning by ridiculous failures, they keep up that pretense of oracular constitutional wisdom, as if the country and the Senate could not understand the obliquity and perverseness of their interpretations.

I wish to refresh the recollection of the Senate by citing a few of the mooted points upon which democratic authorities have been found at fault and repudiated; and then we can discover how much faith to put in such constitutional expounders, and the value of their assumption that such wisdom begins with them and will die with them. I will not go back to the precedent at New Orleans, where Jackson dispersed a Legislature, closed a court, and exiled a judge, for the democracy that inspired that act was a purer article than any we have recently seen; and Jackson declared that "the Union must and shall be preserved." I will not go back to the dispersion of a Legislature in Kansas by United States troops on the order of a democratic President, because that was a territorial Legislature, and all democratic authority, constitutional and otherwise, told us that Territories had no rights against the interests of slavery. I propose to come at once to some of the scenes in which we were all actors, when the heaviest responsibilities rested on every conscience, when party interests were forbidden by patriotism to be weighed against the nation's life, and those who spoke for the democracy were recreant to the highest trusts or else gave their best exposition of constitutional law.

On the 4th of December, 1860, South Carolina having seceded and other States preparing to follow its example, a grave constitutional question arose as to the power of the General Government to coerce a State. It was a fundamental question: Was there constitutional power in the hands of the General Government to coerce a State? James Buchanan, a democratic President, devoted, like the democracy of to-day, to constitutional law and the Constitution, sent his last annual message to Congress, and, like the democratic lawyers and democratic Senators at the present day, he discussed the question whether there was any constitutional power on the part of the Government of the United States to protect itself from sheer rebellion. He said:

The question, fairly stated, is: Has the Constitution delegated to Congress the power to coerce a State into submission which is attempting to withdraw or has actually withdrawn from the confederacy? If answered in the affirmative, it must be on the principle that the power has been conferred upon Congress to declare and to make war against a State. After much serious reflection I have arrived at the conclusion that no such power has been delegated to Congress nor to any other department of the Federal Government.

In the light of recent events, of all that has happened since, of the great wave of civil war that has rolled over the country, of the subjugation of the South, the emancipation of the slaves, and all the great events of the past fifteen years, how puerile seems this reasoning, this constitutional exposition of the last democratic President of the United States. He goes on:

It is manifest upon an inspection of the Constitution that this is not among the specific and enumerated powers granted to Congress, and it is equally apparent that its exercise is not "necessary and proper for carrying into execution" any one of these powers.

It may be necessary and proper in order that the Government may even exist, as the Constitution declares that the Government may exist, but that which I have quoted was democratic constitutional exposition! He continues:

So far from this power having been delegated to Congress, it was expressly refused by the convention which framed the Constitution.

He summed up:

Without descending to particulars, it may be safely asserted that the power to make war against a State is at variance with the whole spirit and intent of the Constitution.

I do not cite this to argue against it; I cite it because its absurdity as a constitutional exposition is so great, that a mere statement that such was taken as democratic constitutional law in 1861 is sufficient to show the unsoundness of democratic constitutional logic. But let us look further. Jeremiah S. Black was the Attorney-General of the United States at that time under this democratic administration. He was the one who was principally relied upon to furnish the law to the administration and pass upon constitutional questions. This great light of constitutional law, selected for his capacity in that respect, wrote a letter to Mr. Buchanan just before this message, an extract from which I have read, wherein he advances the same idea. He said:

If it be true that war cannot be declared—

After having gone on to show that it could not—nor a system of general hostilities carried on by the central Government against a State, then it seems to follow that an attempt to do so would be ipso facto an expulsion of such State from the Union. Being treated as an alien and an enemy, she would be compelled to act accordingly. And if Congress shall break up the present Union by unconstitutionally putting strife and enmity and armed hostility between different sections of the country, instead of the "domestic tranquillity" which the Constitution was meant to insure, will not all the States be absolved from their Federal obligations? Is any portion of the people bound to contribute their money or their blood to carry on a contest like that?

I cite these to call attention to how kindly and readily these eminent democratic constitutional expounders gave away the legal life of the nation, the right of the nation to live, and construed the Constitution into a mere rope of sand. South Carolina had seceded three days before this message of Mr. Buchanan. "Anti-coercion" was the democratic party cry all over the North. The first victory which the republican party succeeded in gaining in the rebellion was in establishing the principle of coercion. I myself, and I have no doubt that other republican Senators on this floor, repeatedly met upon the stump and elsewhere the assertion made by democratic orators that there was no power to coerce a State, and we had as the very first step in our progress toward putting down the rebellion to maintain the constitutional right of the Government to coerce a rebellious State.

Let us come down a little further, for these reminiscences are valuable as showing to what tribunes this constitutional question is referred by the democratic party.

On April 15, 1861, Lincoln issued a proclamation for seventy-five thousand men. The democratic party leaders at once saw how unconstitutional that was. The day before Major Anderson had marched out of Sumter after defending it for thirty-four hours. Governor Jackson condensed the speeches of a great many democratic lawyers in his reply to the President's requisition. The governor was the chief magistrate of the State of Missouri, which now holds the same language with regard to Louisiana. The governor said in reply to Mr. Lincoln when he called upon him for the quota of troops from that State:

Your request is illegal, unconstitutional, revolutionary, inhuman, diabolical, and cannot be complied with.

The substance of a great many democratic speeches and a great many democratic editorials is contained in these two lines, as they were made at that time. I do not know but that some of the democratic Senators who are about me used just such language with reference to the efforts of President Lincoln to assemble a military force to put down the rebellion; but one thing I do know as within my frequent observation, that just such objections, just such points of constitutional law we had to meet continually in order to sustain the Government.

There came a time when the North began to be somewhat tired; there was not ready volunteering and scarcely any at all; our armies were perishing in the field and needed new life-blood which could only be procured by means of conscription; and at the very time when, to use the language of an eminent man, the rebels were robbing the cradle and the grave to fill up their army, our armies were perishing for want of the supply of new men. A proposition was passed through Congress for a conscription law. Recruiting was dull and the armies must be filled up. Then there were anti-draft meetings in the city of New York larger than the meeting recently assembled at the Cooper Institute to protest against the proceedings of the Administration in Louisiana, and they were as violent in their language and they saw just as much unconstitutionality in the idea that the Government had any right to draft citizens into the Army as recently at the Cooper Institute or the Manhattan Club they did in the course of the Administration toward insurrectionary Louisiana.

In Pennsylvania there was the case of William F. Nichols, who brought a bill in equity to restrain proceedings under the enrollment law or the drafting of citizens into the Army. The supreme court of that State was democratic by one majority; the casting vote was given by Mr. Woodward, formerly of the House of Representatives, very well known I presume to every member of this body; and the law was held unconstitutional and the injunction was granted. I want to call attention to this eminent democratic authority at that time. Subsequently the decision was reversed; fortunately there was a change in the bench by death or by election by the people.

Mr. SCOTT. A new election.

Mr. SARGENT. There was a new election by which the people redeemed the supreme court, and thus a most disastrous conflict between the Government of the United States and the State of Pennsylvania was averted, and the new court held as any one now would hold from the logic of past events and the floods of light which have been cast by our courts on this proposition in various proceedings, that the law was strictly constitutional. I want to read an extract from the opinion of Judge Woodward, given at that time, who was the majority of one on the supreme bench. Mr. Woodward from 1865 for several years represented Pennsylvania in the other House of Congress. He said:

The great vice of the conscript law is that it is founded on an assumption that Congress may take away, not the State rights of the citizen, but the security and foundation of his State rights. And how long is civil liberty expected to last after the securities of civil liberty are destroyed? The Constitution of the United States committed the liberties of the citizen in part to the Federal Government, but expressly reserved to the States and the people of the States all it did not delegate. It gave the General Government a standing Army, but left to the States their militia. Its purposes in all this balancing of powers were wise and good; but this legislation disregards these distinctions and upturns the whole system of government when it converts the State militia into "national forces," and claims to use and govern them as such.

On such reasoning it was held that the Government of the United States had no right to require and enforce the presence of one of its citizens in the Army of the United States. At the very time when the nation was about to be inevitably destroyed, forever severed, and with all the evil consequences which would flow from a division precipitated both upon the North and the South, this decision was made on these constitutional grounds, which have, I say, become puerile in the light of recent events; but this is high democratic authority.

Then there came the question of emancipation as a war measure, so declared in the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln. Vattel and all other writers on international law had clearly shown that a civil war of vast proportions stands on the same footing as a war between nations, and that the right exists to weaken an adversary nation by seizing or destroying its property or freeing its slaves; but democratic Senators and lawyers were never tired of explaining how unconstitutional was emancipation, no right existing under the Constitution or growing out of the Constitution, and no right by the war power, no right by the example of nations through all time, no right no matter how clearly laid down by Grotius, Vattel, Puffendorf, and all writers on international law, but nevertheless the Government was bound hand and foot, and could not avail itself constitutionally of the most ordinary power which is exercised by every nation which goes to war with another or even with a formidable insurrection among its own subjects. I need not quote democratic denunciation of this policy of the Government. It is too familiar to every one. I pass to another proposition.

After we had shown that we could and would emancipate, they said "but you cannot arm the slaves;" and they resisted all our efforts, resisted by all-night-long sessions in the other House and I do not know how long sessions here, every proposition which looked toward the arming of slaves, the taking of this freed element of manhood and putting in his hands the means to defend its liberty and protect the Union which had given it that liberty. I want to show by a very brief extract just what was thought by these constitutional expounders on that proposition. I have here a number of extracts from democratic speeches, but I will quote only from one, from Mr. Crittenden—if not nominally a democrat, talking in the same vein—a representative of the State of Kentucky eminent for his public services, but who seemed to become chilled in his feelings toward the success of the war for the Union when its logic seemed to be inevitable that the blacks must be freed and next that they might be used for the purpose of filling up the Union Army. He said with reference to this proposition:

It is a crime against the civilization of the age—

I have no doubt that this worthy old man had visions of horrors at the idea that arms could be put in the hands of the slaves; he feared excesses on their part; but I am glad that the result never justified these dismal apprehensions. I do not cite that remark of his even as reflecting upon his judgment. But he goes on to say:

It is a crime against the Constitution.

Here we have again an exposition of the Constitution.

It is an act of hostility against the Union. These are the sentiments with which I am compelled to regard this measure.

I say it is a crime against the Constitution.

Like every other proposition intended to strengthen the national arm, it was necessarily a crime against the Constitution! But with measures which were not exactly warlike in their character as regarding the finances, there was the same democratic impenetrability to a proper construction of the Constitution of the United States. I say confidently a proper construction of the Constitution of the United States, because in this matter the Supreme Court of the United States have distinctly decided that the legal-tender acts, as they were called, were entirely constitutional; and democratic lawyers, I suppose, with a decision like that upon their tables, must admit the constitutionality of those provisions which were made in order to give us the life-blood in that great struggle. But I want to call attention to the position of the democratic party on that matter. The Government could not sustain its credit by the issue of notes that were not legal-tenders, or could not bring within its vaults by any means sufficient gold to pay its current expenses and enable the people to pay their taxes and pay off our Armies from month to month; and so resort was had to legal-tender notes. This issue was opposed on the premise that it was entirely unconstitutional. I have here the remarks of the Senator from Delaware, the father of the Senator who now holds that seat, [Mr. BAYARD,] which I give as an illustration of the position which was taken by the democratic party at that time on this floor and in the House of Representatives and by their press generally.

He said:

I shall, however, pass over the constitutional argument. I really do not think, from anything I ever heard on the subject, that is worth an argument. The thing is to my mind so palpable a violation of the Federal Constitution that I doubt whether in any court of justice in this country, having a decent regard to its own respectability, you can possibly expect that this bill which you now pass will not, whenever the question is presented judicially, receive its condemnation as unconstitutional and void in this clause.

To show that this anticipation of the Senator from Delaware and his democratic associates of the action of the courts of justice on this proposition was entirely incorrect, that they were in error then as they always are on constitutional points, I desire to call attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the question. A very brief extract will suffice for this purpose. The Supreme Court, in the legal-tender decision made in 1871, said:

We are not aware of anything else which has been advanced in support of the proposition that the legal-tender acts were forbidden by either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution. If, therefore, they were what we have endeavored to show, appropriate means for legitimate ends, they were not transgressive of the authority vested in Congress.

And again they say:

But, without extending our remarks further, it will be seen that we hold the acts of Congress constitutional as applied to contracts made either before or after their passage.

There were other propositions wherein democratic lawyers became extensively learned with regard to their constitutionality. In December, 1862, the House of Representatives passed a bill to indemnify the President and other persons for suspending the writ of habeas corpus, and it passed both Houses finally. There was a necessity for it, because rebel emissaries were plotting mischief, seeking to carry out the pledges of the democratic leaders to aid the rebellion. This act was held constitutional by the supreme court of New York in the case of George W. Jones vs. William H. Seward, and was held constitutional wherever it was brought to the attention of courts. But our democratic constitution-expounders had hastily before that, contemporaneously with its passage, shown their care for and knowledge of the Constitution. There was a protest made by thirty-six democratic members of the House against the passage of the measure, putting it upon high constitutional grounds. Among those members who thus protested and showed their knowledge of the Constitution of the United States were George H. Pendleton, Clement L. Vallandigham, SAMUEL SULLIVAN COX, Charles A. Wickliffe, Daniel W. Voorhees, and many others whom I might name. They recite:

On the 8th day of December, A. D. 1862, and during the present session of Congress, Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, introduced the bill No. 591, entitled "An act to indemnify the President and other persons for suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and acts done in pursuance thereof," and after its second reading moved that its consideration be made the special order for the Thursday then next ensuing; which motion being objected to, he moved the previous question; and this being sustained, under the operation thereof the bill was read a third time, and passed.

They go on and give various reasons for protesting, of which this is the third:

Because it purports to confirm and make valid, by act of Congress, arrests and imprisonment which were not only not warranted by the Constitution of the United States, but were in palpable violation of its express prohibitions.

Unfortunately for these protestants the courts, as soon as they had opportunity to pass upon the matter, held that the law was strictly constitutional. But that did not diminish the confidence of these orators, and they kept on trying to show their knowledge of the Constitution, though no court agreed with them. The fact that the Supreme Court of the United States differed with them did not abash them for a moment in the confidence with which they then approached and now approach such questions. Mr. Pendleton, whose name I read, made a speech on the subject, in which he used this language, on the 3d of March, 1863:

Martial law! The war power! Military necessity! As these terms are used to-day they have no lawful existence among us. They abrogate and destroy the Constitution. They violate the whole of it in letter and spirit in order that they may compel obedience to part. They are the devices of fanaticism; its flimsy pretexts under which power conceals its aggressions, the specious names under which cowardice seems to skulk from observation while it gratifies its malignant rage.

This was said in the midst of the civil war, when the Government was struggling by the tension of every nerve to save the country. This language, heated as it is, is however scarcely more so than we have heard recently from democratic orators and Constitution expounders with regard to matters in Louisiana. He goes on; it sounds almost recent and fresh:

They are the inventions of despotic power distorted from their original purpose by a party distressed and baffled by the humiliations of a war which it had not the virtue to prevent and has not the ability to manage; the insufficient cloak with which it seeks to cover as it were with the mantle of constitutionality the efforts of despairing and impotent wrath. Powers thus usurped will have but a brief and profitless day. They depend upon force. It is lawful to resist them by force. It may become wisdom and patriotism to resist them by superior force. After much long suffering "resistance to tyrants is obedience to God."

I do not know but that it is well sometimes to turn over the musty volumes of the Globe to find the fire that is smouldering within their leaves, to find out how men's passions were excited a few years ago against the Government, on what pretexts they then acted, under what pretenses of regard for the Constitution, pretenses brought forward at the very moment when action was required, to cause delay and to protest against it—tactics which exist to this very day.

There were other propositions. There was an exclusion of papers from the mails. The New York News, published by Ben. Wood, rang with incendiary appeals for bloody resistance to the Government in the North. Major-General Wallace suppressed the Baltimore Evening Transcript. General Rosecrans forbade the circulation of the Metropolitan Record in the Department of the Missouri. And there were other papers which were forbidden to be transported through the mails. The object was to prevent hostile printed matter from reaching the enemy and to prevent such matter from instigating others to co-operate with the enemy by the aid of the United States mails. The question was presented, was there constitutional power on the part of the Government of the United States to prevent these incendiary communications from passing through the mails. Caleb Cushing, Pierce's Attorney-General, Caleb Cushing—strong in the confidence of the democratic party, a great constitutional lawyer, a light for them and Franklin Pierce, President of the United States—a democrat, a lawyer, a constitution expounder, had discussed the matter, and Cushing decided as an administration measure that incendiary matter even in time of peace could be excluded from the mails. I ask the Clerk to relieve me by reading what I have marked in the book which I send to the desk. I desire to show how far democracy can construe the Constitution in favor of slavery, and then I shall show how far it can construe its clauses against liberty and national existence, when the same measure is involved.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
March 2, 1857.

* * * With these premises we have the main question very much simplified. It is this: Has a citizen of one of the United States plenary indisputable right to employ the functions and the officers of the Union as the means of enabling him to produce insurrection in another of the United States? Can the officers of the Union lawfully lend its functions to the citizens of one of the States for the purpose of promoting insurrection in another State?

Taking the last of these questions first, it is obvious to say that, inasmuch as it is the constitutional obligation of the United States to protect each of the States against "domestic violence," and to make provision to "suppress insurrections," it cannot be the right of the United States, or of any of its officers, and, of course, it cannot be their duty, to promote, or be the instrument of promoting, insurrection in any part of the United States.

As to the first question, likewise, it seems obvious to say, that, as insurrection in any one of the States is violation of law, not only as regards that State itself, but also as regards the United States, therefore no citizen of the Union can lawfully incite insurrection in any one of the States. * * * It would be preposterous to suppose that any citizen of the United States has lawful right to do that which he is bound by law to prevent when attempted by any and all others; and monstrous to pretend that a citizen of one of the States has a moral right to promote or commit insurrection or domestic violence, that is, robbery, burglary, arson, rape, and murder, by wholesale, in another of the States.

These considerations, it seems to me, are decisive of the question of the true construction of the act of Congress. Of that it is impossible for me to doubt. Its enactment is, that "If any postmaster shall unlawfully detain," he shall be subject to fine, imprisonment, and disqualification. Then, if the thing be of lawful delivery, it cannot be lawfully detained; while, on the other hand, it cannot be unlawful to detain that which it is unlawful to deliver. Such is the plain language and the manifest import of the act of Congress.

I do not mean to be understood that the word "unlawfully" of the act determines the case; on the contrary, my conclusion would be the same, though that word had not been here inserted. By employing it, indeed, the act expressly admits that there may be lawful cause of detention. But such lawful cause would not be the less exist, although its existence were not thus expressly recognized. And, of all conceivable causes of detention, there can be none more operative than treasonableness of character, for in every society the public safety is the supremest of laws.

Nay, if, instead of expressly admitting lawful causes of detention, the act had undertaken to exclude them—if, for instance, it had in terms required the postmasters to circulate papers, which, in tendency and purpose, are of character to incite insurrection in any of the States—still my conclusion would be the same. I should say of such a provision of law, it is a nullity, it is unconstitutional; not so by reason of conflict with any State law, but because inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States.

The Constitution forbids insurrection; it imposes on Congress and the President the duty of suppressing insurrection; this obligation descends through Congress and the President to all the subordinate functionaries of the Union, civil and military; and any provision of an act of Congress requiring a Federal functionary to be the agent or minister of insurrection in either of the States would violate palpably the positive letter, and defeat one of the primary objects, of the Constitution.

These, my conclusions, apply only to newspapers, pamphlets, or other printed matter, the character of which is of public notoriety, or is necessarily brought to the knowledge of the postmaster by publicity of transmission through the mails unsealed, and as to the nature of which he cannot plead ignorance.

Mr. SARGENT. On the next page the Clerk will find marked a letter from Jefferson Davis in which he commends this doctrine of exclusion from the mails of printed matter in the interest of slavery as eminently proper and worthy of a State-rights administration; and I should like to show how that eminent constitutional democratic expounder, Jefferson Davis, looked upon this power of which the democrats subsequently found it convenient to deny the constitutionality.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 4, 1858.

GENTLEMEN: When I last addressed you in answer to your letter communicating the views and feelings of the citizens of Yazoo City, in relation to the circulation of incendiary matter through the mails of the United States, I promised that you should hear from me further, and gave you assurance of such action by the last administration as would be satisfactory to you.

I have thus long delayed the promised communication in expectation of receiving the opinion of the Attorney-General upon the legal merits of the case, the question having been referred to him by the Postmaster-General, Hon. James Campbell. The Attorney-General, in the opinion inclosed, sustains the conclusion of the President and the Postmaster-General, and so satisfactorily disposes of the question at issue that I hope that we shall be saved from any further agitation of it.

Concurring fully with you in your opinion of the powers of a State, the duty of its citizens, and the obligation of our community in such contingency as that presented by the case reported in your letter, I trust we shall also agree that the matter has been concluded in a manner worthy of the State-rights administration under which it arose.

With great regard, I am your friend and fellow-citizen,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

To Messrs. ROBERT BOWMAN, GEORGE B. WILKINSON, and A. M. HARLOW, Committee, Yazoo City.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that it is worth while to quote much democratic authority to the point that it was unconstitutional to exclude papers rife with rebellious suggestions—provocative of insurrection—from the mails. I will simply quote as a specimen a few remarks of Mr. Pendleton, of whom there are not entirely unlikely signs that he may be the next democratic nominee for President of the United States, showing that democratic exposition of the Constitution are matters which change with every whim of passion—that they have no stability whatever. In 1863 Mr. Pendleton made a speech in the House of Representatives referring to this very question of the exclusion of newspapers from the mails—newspapers loaded with treason, newspapers calculated to excite passion and insurrection—and speaking for his party with its record on the subject he held that all this was entirely unconstitutional. He said:

Thus far my argument has been founded on the considerations suggested by the report of the committee and on the absence of any law conferring the power in question on the Postmaster-General. But my conclusions do not rest upon this alone. The argument rises to a higher dignity. It involves express provisions of the Constitution and principles of constitutional liberty.

"Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press." This is the first article of the amendments of the Constitution.

Then he goes on to elaborate upon that idea. So that I say that they wrest the Constitution according to the exigencies of the moment; that they are unsafe, time-serving constitutional expounders. But why descend to particulars? The democratic national convention in 1864 condensed and embodied the constitutional lore of the party, and by one exposition showed that by this and by all the war measures the Constitution had been violated in every particular. They resolved as follows:

Resolved, That this convention does explicitly declare, as the sense of the American people, that after four years of failure to restore the Union by the experiment of war, during which, under pretense of military necessity or war power higher than the Constitution, the Constitution has been disregarded in every part, and public liberty and private rights have been alike trodden down, and the material prosperity of the country essentially impaired, justice, humanity, liberty, and the public welfare demand that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities, with a view to an ultimate convention of all the States or other peaceable means, to the end that at the earliest practical moment peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal Union of the States.

We all know the circumstances attending and immediately following the adoption of that resolution. It was a turning point in the history of the war of the rebellion; it was the point when distress was past, when all failures had ended, when all disappointments had been encountered, when the nation with high heart was looking for and now realizing a turn in the tide of fortune that was sweeping on to the results of the great struggle of the rebellion, and the democratic party came in and announced that the war was a failure. But what I want to call attention to is the fact that they declared that by all of these war measures by which the country was saved the Constitution had been violated in every part. Either by emancipation, by coercion, by financial measures, by every measure of precaution, by every measure of coercion, we had been acting unconstitutionally from the very first; and this embodied the concentration, the essence of democratic constitutional learning.

With these exhibitions of democratic constitutional discretion, I say I impeach their law; I deny their ability to expound that instrument; and when they denounce in this Chamber the efforts of the Government to preserve peace and the forms and substance of law in Louisiana, I hear the old cry against coercion, conscription, and emancipation. Senators may be eminent lawyers in assumpsit; they may and are undoubtedly learned in torts and remedies outside of politics; but history has recorded their gigantic blunders in construing the Constitution; and I have not, therefore, been surprised to learn from this source that the President has been guilty of violations of the Constitution. A little more exaggeration would say violations of the Constitution in every part. A little more warmth and enthusiasm perhaps would reproduce their resolution of 1864, and it would create no surprise in my mind, and I doubt if it would in the mind of any who heard it. I prefer, however, to examine the matter for myself. Reasoning for myself on the constitutional obligations of the President, I lay it down as a proposition that it is the duty of the General Government to protect a State against domestic violence; that this is a constitutional obligation, whether that violence is seated in a governor's chair or a legislative hall; whether it is by a disorganized mob or by an organized rebellion. Section 4, article 4, of the Constitution reads as follows:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.

There have been two laws passed enforcing this provision of the Constitution. The first, in 1795 is found in the first volume of the Statutes, page 424. The first three sections of it are material to the proposition which I desire to discuss, and I ask the clerks to relieve me by reading them.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion, and to issue his orders for that purpose, to such officer or officers of the militia as he shall think proper. And in case of an insurrection in any State, against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed or the execution thereof obstructed in any State by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia of such State or of any other State or States, as may be necessary, to suppress such combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed; and the use of militia so to be called forth may be continued, if necessary, until the expiration of thirty days after the commencement of the then next session of Congress.

Sec. 3. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That whenever it may be necessary, in the judgment of the President, to use the military force hereby directed to be called forth, the President shall forthwith by proclamation command such insurgents to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within a limited time.

Mr. SARGENT. That act was supplemented in 1807 by one of a single section, which was signed by Jefferson as President of the United States, when Madison was Secretary of State. It provided:

That in all cases of insurrection or obstruction to the laws, either of the United States or of any individual State or Territory, where it is lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection or of causing the laws to be duly executed, it shall be lawful for him to employ for the same purposes such part of the land or naval force of the United States as shall be judged necessary, having first observed all the prerequisites of the law in that respect.

Acting under this provision of the Constitution and these statutes, the de facto governor of Louisiana, when the Legislature could not be convened, called for Federal intervention in September, 1874, against the violence of the Penn usurpation. The language of that call was as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, September 14, 1874.

To President GRANT, Washington:

Under article 4, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States, I have the honor to inform you that the State is now subject to domestic violence of a character that the State forces, under existing circumstances, are unable to suppress, and, the Legislature not being in session and not being able to be convened within the requisite time to take action in this matter, I respectfully make requisition upon you to take measures to put down the domestic violence and insurrection now prevailing.

WM. P. KELLOGG,
Governor of Louisiana.

And again subsequently, on December 9, less than one month before the coup d'état of Wiltz and his coconspirators, he telegraphed as follows to President GRANT:

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1874.

President GRANT, Washington:

Information reaches me that the White League purpose making an attack upon the State-house, especially that portion occupied by the treasurer of the State. The organization is very numerous and well armed, and the State forces now available are not sufficient to resist successfully any movement they may make. With a view of preventing such an attempt, and the bloodshed which would be likely to result should an insurgent body again take possession of the State-house and in dispersing them, I respectfully request that a detachment of United States troops be stationed in that portion of the Saint Louis Hotel which is not used for any of the State officers, where they will be readily available to prevent any such insurrectionary movement as that contemplated.

WM. P. KELLOGG,
Governor of Louisiana.

In other words, the President was invoked by the State government, which he before that time had recognized under his constitutional power, to interfere with the Army of the United States, as was provided by the acts of 1807 and 1795, as was contemplated by section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution; and all the conditions being stated and, as I assert and as cannot be denied, all the conditions existing, the President of the United States did intervene and send a military force in September, after issuing a proclamation, and suppressed the Penn insurrection. The then insurgents have never laid down their arms, and for that reason the Federal intervention continued. The adherents of the Penn revolt who figured in the assemblage of January 4 were engaged in further domestic violence to seize a branch of the Legislature, and it was the duty of the United States to protect the State government against them; which it did. There is hardly room for a difference about the facts.

Paley, a master of moral philosophy, lays down liberal rules to judge a certain class of misstatements. For instance, he says that falsehoods are not lies where jests are uttered; or by which an advocate asserts the justice or his belief in the justice of the cause of his client; where he asserts that his client is not guilty; where he has a cause to gain; where no one is deceived. Falsehoods in these cases he holds are not lies. Now, apply these extremely liberal rules of Paley, and we can excuse for partisan purposes almost any statement made by our democratic friends with regard to Louisiana; and there is not a violation of conscience, or in other words no lie is told. If the blacks and the white republicans can vote in Louisiana unobstructed, unimpeded, the democratic cause is necessarily lost there. Paley says it is not a falsehood provided it is uttered with intent to gain a cause. If the White League are guilty of murdering men all over the State, if they indulge in massacres where many men fall, if they use all repressive means to encroach on the rights of republicans and make Louisiana a hell, according to Paley it is not a falsehood for their defenders to say they are not guilty. Perhaps the broader statement may be made that no one is deceived by these excuses, these palliations, these jokes about outrage-mills, this whistling grave matters down the wind, and they are not expected to deceive the Senate at least. It will be fortunate for the people of this country provided they are not deceived, and understand the spirit in which these assertions in reference to Louisiana are made by democratic orators.

I desire to make a candid statement of the facts as I understand them, drawn from official documents, eliminating everything which I believe is disputed by any fair authority.

The Legislature of Louisiana was to meet on the 4th of January, 1875. Public and repeated threats of assassination of republican members for weeks before were made, and these were repeated and indorsed by the democratic papers of the State. A few days before A. J. Cousins, a republican member of the Legislature, was kidnaped for the purpose of preventing his participation in the organization of the Legislature, which was very close. He was carried off beyond the lake by the democratic party or its agents engaged in that work, and there kept with the nefarious purpose, by these illegal means, of controlling the organization of that Legislature. A man at that time, I think the day before, resembling a republican member of the Legislature, for his resemblance to that republican member was shot down in the streets of New Orleans. There were threats of kidnaping and assassination of other members, and attempts were made to kidnap other republican members. Information was given to the governor that organized violence was to be used to influence the organization of the house, and this caused him to put the State-house in charge of the State militia and the police. The State-house, at the time of the assembling of the Legislature, was surrounded by an excited crowd of several thousand persons.

Under these surroundings of assassination, kidnaping, threats, and military and police forces, entirely exceptional to our ideas of such assemblies, the Legislature of Louisiana met. By a law of 1872, passed by a former Legislature and approved by Warmoth, a returning board was constituted, with power to pass on the election of members and certify a roll to the secretary of state. The returning board certified to the secretary of state fifty-two republicans and fifty democrats—one hundred and two in all. The law of Louisiana relating to the organization of the house provides—

That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly; and it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate. Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State.

Thus the one hundred and two members constituted the roll of the House, who alone were competent to organize it, and this was the roll for all purposes of organization, and was the roll to be called on the demand of any two persons named on it. Article 36 of the constitution of Louisiana provides that—

Each house of the General Assembly shall keep and publish weekly a journal of its proceedings; and the yeas and nays of the members on any question, at the desire of any two of them, shall be entered on the journal.

The roll being thus made up, and the right to have the yeas and nays being thus secured, the laws of Louisiana provide for a presiding officer until the organization is completed, as follows:

That for the purpose of facilitating the organization of their respective bodies, the secretary of the senate and the chief clerk of the house of representatives shall hold over and continue in office from one term of the General Assembly to another until their successors are duly elected and qualified.

The construction of these laws is not difficult or devoid of high precedent. The law of the United States provides a roll for the same purpose of organization in the other House by the act of March 3, 1863, now existing and existing for years past, and the practice under it gives the construction to be placed on these statutes of Louisiana. The laws are almost identical—are fully identical in every important point. By the act of March 3, 1863, the law regarding the creation of a roll of the House of Representatives is as follows:

That before the first meeting of the next Congress, and of every subsequent Congress, the Clerk of the next preceding House of Representatives shall make a roll of the Representatives-elect, and place thereon the names of all persons, and of such persons only, whose credentials show that they were regularly elected in accordance with the laws of their States respectively or the laws of the United States.

As Senators well know, under this law the Clerk makes up the roll, presides until a Speaker is chosen, and always calls the yeas and nays on any demand. Mr. Vigers held over as clerk in the Louisiana house, and was quietly and fairly proceeding with his duties in calling the roll to ascertain who were present with a right to vote, there being in all one hundred and two, when Mr. Billieu, a representative from La Fourche, moved to elect a temporary speaker. The clerk replied that the legal motion was to elect a speaker. There is no temporary Speaker in the House of Congress or by the laws of Louisiana, or so far as I know of any State in this Union; and the clerk unquestionably was right in stating that the motion was illegal, or rather that the legal motion was to elect a speaker. Billieu paid no attention, however, and hurriedly put his motion against the protest of the republican members, the majority there assembled, and did not put any negative. Wiltz had previously taken a position near the clerk's desk, and instantly on the putting of the motion, without waiting for any announcement of the vote and disregarding the irregularity of the proceedings and the protest of the majority, sprang to the speaker's desk, pushed away the clerk, seized the gavel, and declared himself temporary speaker. As if an oath could give sanction to this high-handed illegal proceeding, a convenient justice of the peace, near the stand for the purpose, pulled out a book looking like a Bible and swore Wiltz into the office of temporary speaker—an office having no existence. Wiltz then pretended to swear in the democratic members en masse against the protest of the republicans. Some democratic member moved to elect a Mr. Trezevant clerk, which Wiltz declared carried, and Trezevant sprang forward and took the clerk's desk. The republicans protested and called for the yeas and nays, but Wiltz paid no attention to the call. There was a constitutional provision requiring that the presiding officer should do so, but in their eagerness the constitution was disregarded, no attention being given to the call for the yeas and nays, none to the provisions of the law or the constitution. A Mr. Flood was elected sergeant-at-arms in the same way with protests and calls for the yeas and noes; and Colonel Lowell made a point of order that the constitution allowed any two members to call the yeas and nays. Wiltz ruled the point of order not well taken. The wildest confusion reigned in the house, as it well might. As soon as Flood was thus elected sergeant-at-arms, Wiltz ordered a number of assistants to be appointed. Instantly a large number of men throughout the hall turned down the lapels of their coats, upon which were pinned blue-ribbon badges, on which was printed in gold letters "Assistant sergeant-at-arms," many of whom were recognized as captains of White-League companies in New Orleans and vicinity.

Thus the threats of the white-leaguers were made good and they had possession of the lower house of Louisiana. The republicans protested against this violence and lawlessness, and began to leave the hall. The democrats then swore in five members not returned by the returning board, and by their help elected Wiltz speaker, he claiming to have had 55 votes, the republicans withdrawing and not voting as they deemed the whole thing illegal. Wiltz then ordered his White-League emissary sergeants-at-arms not to allow any one to enter or leave the hall. The swearing in of these five members by that minority of the body, as I will show when I come to speak of the affairs of Arkansas, was entirely illegal, unknown to any legislative body, gave them no right to their seats, gave them no right to participate in subsequent legislation, no right to assist in the organization, because a minority can only adjourn from day to day, and here was a minority of democrats left in the hall who created themselves into a majority by this illegal proceeding. Greater commotion at once ensued, knives and pistols were drawn, and bloodshed seemed imminent. Without there was a surging mob of thousands; within there were high-handed, illegal, unconstitutional proceedings taking place in the midst of a confusion there reigning, with knives and pistols drawn, anarchy and confusion prevailing. Under these circumstances this democratic coup d'état was accomplished. Wiltz's object in endeavoring to prevent the republicans from leaving the hall seems to have been to compel the republicans to remain by force so as to keep a quorum in the hall to help out his arbitrary minority proceedings. To effect his object on motion of Dupre, a democrat, a committee was appointed to wait on the United States military officer and request the interference of United States troops. This request was complied with, and General De Trobriand came on the floor. He was cheered by the democrats, and Wiltz asked his aid; which was rendered, and peace was restored.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] said that "in the lobby there were fifty or sixty of the worst ruffians of the republican party in the city of New Orleans." How does he know that? Who were they? What were their names? What had they done or either of them? He objects to Sheridan's phrase "banditti" applied to men described as murderers, described as men who were engaged in most nefarious outrages which the pen or tongue can depict. He says, "Why stigmatize men as banditti; the phrase is harsh; Government officers ought not to use such language;" and yet he himself speaks of the republicans who were there in the lobby as "the worst ruffians in the city of New Orleans." Let us see. I want to know if they were more ruffianly than his own party friends who kidnapped Cousins, or more ruffianly than those democrats who shot down an entirely innocent man in the street because he looked like a republican member of the Legislature? But look at the inconsistency of it. He says that a word from De Trobriand stilled these men and silenced fifty of the worst radical ruffians in the city of New Orleans. Either there are no radical ruffians in the city of New Orleans or the one side or the other of this statement is incorrect. If they were such ruffians, a mere word from the military officer would not have brought peace. If they were not such ruffians, then he does reckless injustice.

These acts of Wiltz and his coconspirators, by which the minority usurped the control of the house by force and fraud, by which the minority turned itself into a majority afterward by seating members in violation of all parliamentary law, by calling in a United States force to put down a protest against its proceedings and overawe the majority, were a subversion of a republican form of government. The essence of republican government is the control of the majority. This was a despotic act of a desperate and unscrupulous minority—a coup d'état, a French institution imperial and autocratic and it cannot and must not thrive on American soil.

On the written request of the legal majority of fifty-two members the governor called on the United States troops to enable him to restore order and enable legally returned members to proceed with the organization. That call was as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, January 4, 1875.

His Excellency WILLIAM P. KELLOGG, Governor:

SIR: The undersigned, members-elect of the house of representatives of the General Assembly of this State, assembled at the hall of the house, in the state-house, at twelve m. this day, and answered to the call made by the clerk. Immediately thereafter the chair was forcibly taken possession of, in violation of law, and an attempt was made to organize the house contrary to law. We cannot obtain our legal rights unless the members-elect are placed in possession of the hall. Whenever the hall is cleared of all persons save the gentlemen elected, we will proceed to organize. We therefore invoke your aid in placing the hall in possession of the members-elect, that we may attend to the performance of our duties.

I have consented to sign this document on the ground that the conservative members of the house have set a precedent by appointing a special committee to wait on General De Trobriand, who immediately appeared at the bar of the house, escorted by said special committee.

ROBERT F. GUICHARD,
Of Saint Bernard.

Under ordinary circumstances, without party excitement, no one would object to the request of a majority of a Legislative Assembly that the governor should give them possession of the hall in which they are accustomed to meet and where by law they should meet. Such aid was rendered without the use of more than a display of force. The five persons illegally seated were removed by the United States troops; that is to say, by the representation of the United States troops; for I believe that no soldier except officers entered the hall, and by the same display of force in the persons of the five officers who entered as there previously had been on the invitation of the democratic members in the person of the one officer who entered, he himself speaking for his staff and the soldiers under him, and he accompanied by his staff, doing no more.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow a correction?

Mr. SARGENT. These corrections as they are called are simply speeches. The Senator will have an opportunity to be heard and I shall listen to him with great pleasure. I am stating the result of my reading of the legal documents on these matters. The Senator when he comes to reply, and his party friends also, will have abundant opportunity. I simply state that as I desire to speak at some length, I do not want to prolong my remarks to the extent that they would be if interruptions were permitted.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall not interpose.

Mr. SARGENT. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy, and I would yield to him with as much pleasure as to any other Senator.

The military returning for the purpose of removing those who were illegally seated gave an opportunity for the republican members to enter the hall from which they had been excluded by the order of Wiltz, who caused the door to be shut in their faces. I ask, and the question is pregnant, whether such an act of the military authority or any legitimate consequences to which it might have led in the way of a further display or use of force—for I seek to evade no question here—was within the purview of the constitution and laws which I have cited? If the halls of a State Legislature are sacred against the protecting power of the United States when rebellion is being made successful there, then the constitutional duty of the United States cannot be performed and each State is at the mercy of its enemies if they can possess the State capitol.

Questions of this character are not entirely new. They have been discussed by our courts and by the early writers upon the Constitution. They have been discussed in state papers. We are not left entirely in the dark with reference to the proper construction of the clause of the Constitution which I have read or the laws which were passed in pursuance of it. Mr. Madison, a former President of the United States, claimed by democrats as good authority for them, although they wander very far from his precepts and his course of thought, discussed this question in the Federalist under this very guarantee clause as it is called. He and the other writers of the Federalist and our judges have laid down the rule so clear and plain that it seems almost to require partisan perversion of the meaning of the Constitution to escape the conclusion to which they arrive. In the forty-third number of the Federalist written by Mr. Madison, on page 235 of the edition before me, I find a quotation of the sixth clause of the article to which I refer, namely:

To guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government; to protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.

This is followed by his comment upon the several provisions of this clause:

In a confederacy founded on republican principles and composed of republican members, the superintending government ought clearly to possess authority to defend the system against aristocratic or monarchical innovation.

I pause to hear what innovation is more aristocratic than the assumption of a minority of a Legislature to take from a majority its organization, to admit members without the consent of the majority, and control subsequently thereby, for good or evil, the legislation of the State. Is not that aristocratic? Ought not, in the language of Mr. Madison, the superintending government to have power to protect and defend the system against such aristocratic innovation?

He says:

The more intimate the nature of such a union may be the greater interest have the members in the political institutions of each other, and the greater right to insist that the forms of government under which the compact was entered into should be substantially maintained.

But a right implies a remedy; and where else could the remedy be deposited than where it is deposited by the Constitution? Governments of dissimilar principles and forms have been found less adapted to a federal coalition of any sort than those of a kindred nature. "As the confederate republic of Germany," says Montesquieu, "consists of free cities and petty states subject to different princes, experience shows us that it is more imperfect than that of Holland and Switzerland." "Greece was undone," he adds, "as soon as the king of Macedon obtained a seat among the Amphictyons." In the latter case, no doubt, the disproportionate force, as well as the monarchical form of the new confederate, had its share of influence on the events.

It may possibly be asked what need there could be of such a precaution, and whether it may not become a pretext for alteration in the State governments, without the concurrence of the States themselves. These questions admit of ready answers. If the interposition of the General Government should not be needed, the provision for such an event will be a harmless superfluity only in the Constitution. But who can say what experiments may be produced by the caprice of particular States, by the ambition of enterprising leaders, or by the intrigues and influence of foreign powers.

The ambition of enterprising leaders such as Wiltz seized the lower house of a Legislature with further-reaching intentions than even that; and it was within the purview of the Constitution, as stated by Mr. Madison, to prevent this very thing—to defend the system against such innovation.

To the second question it may be answered, that if the General Government should interpose by virtue of this constitutional authority, it will be of course bound to pursue the authority. But the authority extends no further than to a guarantee of a republican form of government, which supposes a pre-existing government of the form which is to be guaranteed. As long therefore as the existing republican forms are continued by the States, they are guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. Whenever the States may choose to substitute other republican forms, they have a right to do so and to claim the Federal guarantee for the latter. The only restriction imposed on them is that they shall not exchange republican for anti-republican constitutions; a restriction which, it is presumed, will hardly be considered as a grievance.

He further says—

Protection against domestic violence is added with equal propriety. It has been remarked that even among the Swiss cantons, which properly speaking are not under one government, provision is made for this object; and the history of that league informs us that mutual aid is frequently claimed and afforded, and as well by the most democratic as the other cantons. A recent and well-known event among ourselves has warned us to be prepared for emergencies of a like nature.

At first view it might seem not to square with the republican theory to suppose that a majority have not the right or that a minority will have the force to subvert a government.

They did have the force in the Legislature of Louisiana by the aid of the White Leagues which they called in, by the aid of the turbulent and restless population which they had at their back, the minority did have power to seize on the lower house of the Legislature—

And consequently that the Federal interposition can never be required but when it would be improper. But theoretic reasoning in this, as in most other cases, must be qualified by the lessons of practice. Why may not illicit combinations for purposes of violence be formed as well by a majority of a State, especially a small State, as by a majority of a county or a district of the same State; and if the authority of the State ought in the latter case to protect the local magistracy, ought not the Federal authority in the former to support the State authority? Besides, there are certain parts of the State constitutions which are so interwoven with the Federal Constitution that a violent blow cannot be given to the one without communicating the wound to the other. Insurrections in a State will rarely induce a Federal interposition, unless the number concerned in them bear some proportion to the friends of government. It will be much better that the violence in such cases should be repressed by the superintending power—than that the majority should be left to maintain their cause by a bloody and obstinate contest. The existence of a right to interpose will generally prevent the necessity of exerting it.

That is to say, the Government of the United States—

Is it true that force and right are necessarily on the same side in republican governments? May not the minor party possess such a superiority of pecuniary resources, of military talents and experience, or of secret succors from foreign powers as will render it superior also in an appeal to the sword?

In Louisiana the blacks with the white republicans are probably twenty thousand in the majority, and in the city of New Orleans unquestionably largely in the majority; but on account of this very superiority of pecuniary resources, of the possession of property, accustomed to rule by an unrestrained and unlicensed will taught in the school of slavery, the minority is enabled to produce these results and call for this Federal intervention of which Mr. Madison in the Federalist points out the likelihood, and the exercise of which he approves.

May not a more compact and advantageous position turn the scale on the same side against a superior number so situated as to be less capable of a prompt and collected exertion of its strength?

Do not these very conditions exist in Louisiana, and could any text follow closer to the exigency of things there and the necessary action of the President of the United States than is here laid down by James Madison?

Nothing can be more chimerical than to imagine that in a trial of actual force victory may be calculated by the rules which prevail in a census of the inhabitants or which determine the event of an election.

He further says:

In cases where it may be doubtful on which side justice lies, what better umpire could be desired by two factions flying to arms and tearing the State to pieces than the representatives of confederate States not heated by the local flame? To the impartiality of judges they would unite the affection of friends. Happy would it be if such a remedy for its infirmities could be enjoyed by all free governments; if a project equally effectual could be established for the universal peace of mankind.

Hamilton having the opposite political views from Madison in the early division of parties, Hamilton the federalist agreed with Madison the anti-federalist, and his discussion of this matter, on page 108, in No. 21 of the Federalist, I desire to call attention to. He said:

Without a guarantee, the assistance to be derived from the Union in repelling those domestic dangers, which may sometimes threaten the existence of the State constitutions, must be renounced. Usurpation may rear its crest in each State and trample upon the liberties of the people; while the National Government could legally do nothing more than behold its encroachments with indignation and regret. A successful faction may erect a tyranny on the ruins of order and law, while no succor could constitutionally be afforded by the Union to the friends and supporters of the Government. The tempestuous situation from which Massachusetts has scarcely emerged evinces that dangers of this kind are not merely speculative. Who can determine what might have been the issue of her late convulsions if the malcontents had been headed by a Caesar or by a Cromwell.

Or if they had been headed by a Wiltz or a Marr, what would have been the result?

Who can predict what effect a despotism, established in Massachusetts, would have been upon the liberties of New Hampshire or Rhode Island; of Connecticut or New York?

The inordinate pride of State importance has suggested to some minds an objection to the principle of a guarantee in the Federal Government, as involving an officious interference in the domestic concerns of the members. A scruple of this kind would deprive us of one of the principal advantages to be expected from union, and can only flow from a misapprehension of the nature of the provision itself. It could be no impediment to reforms of the State constitution by a majority of the people in a legal and peaceable mode. This right would remain undiminished. The guarantee could only operate against changes to be effected by violence.

By the surrounding of a legislative hall by an organized mob, as was the case in the city of New Orleans, where the white-leaguers were assembled, where hook-and-ladder companies were at hand ready with their implements to scale the windows of the senate chamber and seize that body if the émeute in the house succeeded, where knives and pistols were drawn, and where republican members were controlled in their ingress and egress by force—when there was such violence as to defy the State constitution and work a change in ordinary parliamentary safeguards and a recurrence to aristocratic forms or else a government by a mob—in such events the violence was that which Mr. Hamilton says the Constitution was intended to guard against.

Toward the prevention of calamities of this kind too many checks may not be provided. The peace of society and the stability of government depend absolutely on the efficacy of the precautions adopted on this head.

This matter was discussed at great length in the case of Luther vs. Borden, 7 Howard, page 42, by Chief Justice Taney, certainly good democratic authority; a man that all democrats would insist was, and I dare say with a single exception and perhaps without exception republicans would admit, above reproach. In the Rhode Island case he had occasion to pass upon a kindred question, upon the power of the General Government under the guarantee clause of the Constitution and under the laws which I have cited. He said, on page 42 of 7 Howard:

So, too, as relates to the clauses in the above-mentioned article of the Constitution, providing for cases of domestic violence. It rested with Congress, too, to determine upon the means proper to be adopted to fulfill this guarantee. They might, if they had deemed it most advisable to do so, have placed it in the power of a court to decide when the contingency had happened which required the Federal Government to interfere. But Congress thought otherwise, and no doubt wisely; and by the act of February 28, 1795, provided that "in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the Executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States, as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection.

By this act, the power of deciding whether the exigency had arisen upon which the Government of the United States is bound to interfere, is given to the President. He is to act upon the application of the Legislature or of the executive, and consequently he must determine what body of men constitute the Legislature, and who is the governor, before he can act. The fact that both parties claim the right to the government cannot alter the case, for both cannot be entitled to it. If there is an armed conflict, like the one of which we are speaking, it is a case of domestic violence, and one of the parties must be in insurrection against the lawful government. And the President must, of necessity, decide which is the government and which party is unlawfully arrayed against it before he can perform the duty imposed upon him by the act of Congress.

That decision the President had made. That decision he did not make on the 14th of September last or the 4th of January last, but had made months and months before; and had announced his conclusion. When there was an insurrectionary attempt on the 14th of September, called the Penn insurrection, to overthrow the State government of Louisiana, it was in spite of the recognition by the President under the Constitution and laws of the United States which the Supreme Court here say it was his province to make. The court proceed:

After the President has acted and called out the militia, is a circuit court of the United States authorized to inquire whether his decision was right? Could the court, while the parties were actually contending in arms for the possession of the Government, call witnesses before it and inquire which party represented a majority of the people? If it could, then it would become the duty of the court (provided it came to the conclusion that the President had decided incorrectly) to discharge those who were arrested or detained by the troops in the service of the United States or the Government which the President was endeavoring to maintain. If the judicial power extends so far, the guarantee contained in the Constitution of the United States is a guarantee of anarchy, and not of order. Yet if this right does not reside in the courts when the conflict is raging, if the judicial power is at that time bound to follow the decision of the political, it must be equally bound when the contest is over.

In other words, it is bound all the way through, and the decision of the President is constitutional. Of course it is under the sanctions of his oath and the responsibilities of his office, and in performing that duty he does not assume the functions of a Caesar who should have his robes stripped from him. He is simply performing his constitutional duty as President of the United States. So says Chief Justice Taney. But it comes so easily and so gratefully from democratic orators when there is any attempt made to fulfill the guarantees of the Constitution, to protect a State from domestic violence, such as we have seen of late, to say, "Here is a Caesar; here is an unconstitutional act; this is a violation of law and of the Constitution; and the people of the United States ought to rise and strip the robes of this Caesar from him." Then tear down the monument erected to Taney; take his bust from the Supreme Court room; defile his memory with your opprobrium and obloquy; tear the pages written by Madison and Hamilton from the Federalist; blot the proudest record of your whole country and the proudest sentiments ever uttered in defense of liberty and in defense of the Constitution, and you may be consistent; but you are not consistent at this late day in reversing all the teachings of the fathers while pretending to revere and follow them. You assume to raise this cry against the President of the United States for treading in the footsteps where they trod and in the paths which they marked out.

The court say:

It cannot, when peace is restored, punish as offenses and crimes the acts which it before recognized, and was bound to recognize, as lawful.

The court say further:

It is said that this power in the President is dangerous to liberty and may be abused. All power may be abused if placed in unworthy hands. But it would be difficult, we think, to point out any other hands in which this power would be more safe and at the same time equally effectual. When citizens of the same State are in arms against each other, and the constituted authorities unable to execute the laws, the interposition of the United States must be prompt or it is of little value. The ordinary course of proceedings in courts of justice would be utterly unfit for the crisis.

Ordinary proceedings of course would be entirely unfit for the crisis. It requires the President to act, and how act? The Constitution says he shall protect, but how protect? The laws come in and say by the use of the Army of the United States. The law authorizing the militia was changed by the anti-federalists to the Army of the United States. He must act promptly, effectually, and by the Army of the United States; and yet for so doing he is denounced as a Cæsar and his acts as anti-republican.

The ordinary course of proceedings in courts of justice would be utterly unfit for the crisis. And the elevated office of the President, chosen as he is by the people of the United States, and the high responsibility he could not fail to feel when acting in a case of so much moment, appear to furnish as strong safeguards against a willful abuse of power as human prudence and foresight could well provide. At all events it is conferred upon him by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and must therefore be respected and enforced in its judicial tribunals.

Ay, sir, and should therefore be respected by Senators of the United States and the Senate of the United States, and they should not teach the people to look upon it with contempt or with suspicion, if it is constitutional, conferred by the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

Now, to show that this very anticipation of Chief Justice Taney in the case of Luther vs. Borden, of the manner in which a President of the United States, and even this President thus denounced, would look upon the necessary and constitutional exercise of this power, however unwilling under any circumstances even so grave as these to exercise it, I call attention to a single passage in the recent message of the President of the United States:

I have no desire to have United States troops interfere in the domestic concerns of Louisiana or any other State.

On the 9th of December last Governor Kellogg telegraphed to me his apprehensions that the White League intended to make another attack upon the State-house, to which, on the same day, I made the following answer, since which no communication has been sent to him:

"Your dispatch of this date just received. It is exceedingly unpalatable to use troops in anticipation of danger. Let the State authorities be right, and then proceed with their duties without apprehension of danger. If they are then molested, the question will be determined whether the United States is able to maintain law and order within its limits or not."

I have deplored the necessity which seemed to make it my duty under the Constitution and laws to direct such interference. I have always refused except where it seemed to be my imperative duty to act in such a manner under the Constitution and laws of the United States. I have repeatedly and earnestly entreated the people of the South to live together in peace, and obey the laws; and nothing would give me greater pleasure than to see reconciliation and tranquillity everywhere prevail, and thereby remove all necessity for the presence of troops among them. I regret, however, to say that this state of things does not exist, nor does its existence seem to be desired in some localities; and as to those it may be proper for me to say that, to the extent that Congress has conferred power upon me to prevent it, neither Ku-Klux-Klans, White Leagues, nor any other association using arms and violence to execute their unlawful purposes, can be permitted in that way to govern any part of this country; nor can I see with indifference Union men or republicans ostracized, persecuted, and murdered on account of their opinions, as they now are in some localities.

Show me the man who dares stand up in the face of the American people and say that the sentiments of the extracts I have read are not just and humane, that they do not do honor to the head and heart of the President of the United States? Who looks with indifference upon the murder of Union men for their political opinions? Who desires to see Ku-Klux-Klans, or White Leagues, or any other association of men use arms and violence to enforce unlawful and illegal purposes? At the same time, while it is repugnant to his feelings to use military force to compel obedience to the laws, he recognizes it as a constitutional duty. In this very case referred to in Luther vs. Borden a former President of the United States wrote a letter to Governor King, of Rhode Island, who represented the charter government, and in that letter President Tyler said:

I have, however, to assure your excellency that should the time arrive (and my fervent prayer is it may never come)—

In the very spirit in which his successor, President Grant, speaks of the regret with which he sees these things transpire—when an insurrection shall exist against the government of Rhode Island, and a requisition shall be made upon the Executive of the United States to furnish that protection which is guaranteed to each State by the Constitution and laws, I shall not be found to shrink from the performance of a duty which, while it is most painful, is at the same time most imperative. I have also to say that in such a contingency the Executive could not look into any real or supposed defects of the existing government, in order to ascertain whether some other plan of government proposed for adoption was better suited to the wants and more in accordance with the wishes of any portion of her citizens.

It will be my duty, on the contrary, to respect the requisitions of that government which has been recognized as the existing government of the State through all time past, until I shall be advised in a regular manner that it has been altered and abolished and another substituted in its place, by legal and peaceable proceedings, adopted and pursued by the authorities and the people of the State.

Thereby stating his belief in the existence of the power, the painful duty which would be put upon him to exercise it and use the Army of the United States to put down domestic violence in that State and protect the authority which he recognized as the existing authority. The people of the State by a large majority had adopted another constitution formed by a convention called by means not provided by the constitution itself, and President Tyler, with the assent of the democratic party at that time—I believe without the dissent of any strong party in Congress, because a resolution to censure him for his course failed in the House of Representatives—President Tyler stated his readiness to intervene with military force and thus put things back as they were, or rather to maintain the existing order of things against the will of the people of the State. I say that the President recognized this, as have all his predecessors and the law writers on the Constitution and the judges, as a constitutional duty. If it is a constitutional duty, that duty carries with it the legal right, and implies all the requisite means to discharge it. The guarantee clause gives the power. The emergencies which give rise to exercises of this power are exceptional, but the means are ample. I have already quoted from the opinions of Alexander Hamilton. In a most able and exhaustive opinion of his as Secretary of the Treasury, upon the constitutionality of the United States Bank, in a letter written to President Washington, he discussed the nature of the power granted by the Constitution to effect any particular object, holding that the end itself being clearly recognizable in the Constitution, the force is conveyed by the Constitution, sovereign in its nature, to give full effect to that power which is thus conferred. I ask the Secretary to read what I have marked on pages 95 and 96 of the book which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

Now, it appears to the Secretary of the Treasury that this general principle is inherent in the very definition of government, and essential to every step of the progress to be made by that of the United States, namely, that every power vested in a government is in its nature sovereign, and includes, by force of the term, a right to employ all the means requisite, and fairly applicable, to the attainment of the ends of such power, and which are not precluded by restrictions and exceptions specified in the Constitution, or not immoral or not contrary to the essential ends of political society.

This principle, in its application to government in general, would be admitted as an axiom; and it will be incumbent upon those who may incline to deny it to prove a distinction, and to show that a rule which in the general system of things is essential to the preservation of the social order is inapplicable to the United States.

The circumstance that the powers of sovereignty are, in this country, divided between the national and State governments does not afford the distinction required. It does not follow from this that each of the portions of power delegated to the one or to the other is not sovereign with regard to its proper objects. It will only follow from it that each has sovereign power as to certain things, and not as to other things. To deny that the Government of the United States has sovereign power as to its declared purposes and trusts, because its power does not extend to all laws, would be equally to deny that the State governments have sovereign power in any case, because their power does not extend to every case. The tenth section of the first article of the Constitution exhibits a long list of very important things which they may not do; and thus the United States would furnish the singular spectacle of a political society without sovereignty, or of a people governed without government.

If it would be necessary to bring proof to a proposition so clear as that which affirms that the powers of the Federal Government as to its objects are sovereign, there is a clause of its Constitution which would be decisive; it is that which declares that the Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance of it and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority shall be the supreme law of the land. The power which can create the supreme law of the land in any case is doubtless sovereign as to such case.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, democratic sanction to the exercise of such power by a President of the United States is recent. After the cessation of hostilities on the 21st of May, 1865, President Johnson authorized General Canby to telegraph to the commander of the Department of the Mississippi as follows:

You will prevent by force, if necessary, any attempt of any of the Legislatures of the States in insurrection to assemble for legislative purposes, and will imprison any members or other persons who may attempt to exercise these functions in opposition to your orders.

President Johnson authorized General Canby, the commander of the Department of Mississippi, to arrest legislators or any person who should abet legislators in assembling for legislative purposes; and this was months after the surrender of the rebel army. I say that there is democratic sanction for this precedent. Why? Because the then ensuing democratic national convention passed a resolution indorsing Johnson's administration for its regard for and preservation of the Constitution of the United States. I do not think there is an answer for it that this man was President of the United States and had some patronage and it was an object to tickle his elbow or please his fancy and induce him to favor the democratic party. If that was so, then it was the lowest kind of political scheming. That was so, or else it was an intelligent indorsement, or unintelligent, as you please, of the administration of Andrew Johnson, of the constitutionality of his proceedings when he employed the Army of the United States to prevent the assembling of Legislatures and arrested the members.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend from California yield to me a moment?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to give notice that I will ask the Senate on to-morrow not to adjourn until this resolution has been disposed of.

Mr. HAMLIN. To-morrow?

Mr. STEVENSON. To-morrow has been set apart for the funeral ceremonies of Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. MORTON. I was not aware of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I saw in the papers that at four o'clock and forty minutes notice of the decease of Mr. HOOPER will be communicated to the House, and I saw in the papers also that the services will be in the Hall of the House to-morrow. I presume the House will send a resolution here acquainting us of these facts and requesting the attendance of the Senate to-morrow. If so, then the Senator's suggestion can hardly be carried out to-morrow.

Mr. MORTON. Unless the Senate might meet afterward.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not know but that it might take a recess for the purpose.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hardly think we should do that. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not fix to-morrow; at least out of respect to Mr. HOOPER, who will be buried from the House.

Mr. MORTON. Of course, I do not want to violate any of the proprieties; but the time of the session is so limited, if we expect to do anything with this resolution, we shall have to remain here until it is disposed of when we next take it up.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand several Senators desire to speak upon it—

Mr. SARGENT. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, in the same manner that they approved the act of President Johnson in this military interference with the Legislatures of Mississippi and elsewhere they approved McClellan's order to arrest the Maryland Legislature, which was a non-seceded state, which never did sunder its relations with the Union, which, by any logic which they would admit, was entitled to all its rights as, in their own phrase, a sovereign State. But he gave these orders and they were executed, and they hastened to nominate him for President of the United States. So, as I say, we not only have the teaching of the fathers on this point so plain it cannot be misunderstood, but we have the assent of the democratic party in their great national conventions where they meet for the very purpose of exchanging views and picking out the men who according to their ideas are most faithful to the Constitution.

Passing from this, however, I say that under the Constitution of the United States the right and duty of the United States to intervene to protect a State against domestic violence cannot be questioned. There is no limit as to place of intervention. A legislative hall is not excepted by the Constitution, and may be, as in this case, the most necessary place for its exercise. Stress has been laid by our democratic friends upon the idea that here was an attempt by the military to decide who were entitled to seats in the hall; that they were made to decide upon contested elections. There is no integrity in the idea whatever. The military were used simply to protect the majority of the Legislature in their right to the possession of the hall against intruders who would illegally destroy their authority as a majority of the body. There was a duty on the part of the Government to enforce the laws of the State of Louisiana, so set down in the law of the United States following the guarantee clause of the Constitution. There was a right of the majority to have the presiding officer named by the law to preside until an organization was effected, to have the roll called, to have honor, honesty, decency and fair play in the organization of that house. All these laws and the laws of Louisiana required it, and the military was simply called in to clear the hall of those who had intruded to seats there and who were not members of the house. They had the same right to do this that they would have had to protect the returning board as it was sitting listening to the arguments of democratic and republican lawyers on contested seats and contested questions, if the mob had attempted to break them up. If a White League or an organized force had attempted to break up the returning board the military would have had the right, it would have been their duty, under the guarantee clause, to have protected the returning board in this necessary discharge of its functions, to see that none intruded into its deliberations, usurped its functions, or broke up its sessions. But is it not audacious for those rioters who were guilty of the fraud and the force which took place there, who were guilty of the crimes which were staining then and there the legislative history of the Legislature, who were brandishing their knives and pistols, the agents of a passionate mob outside who were encouraging their proceedings by their hideous yells—is it not audacious for these men or those who apologize for them to complain of those measures which were taken to reduce them to submission to the laws? They are the complaining parties, not the majority of the Legislature of Louisiana, none of the fifty-two members who were entitled to seats there. Those who complain are the White-League sergeants-at-arms who turned down the lapels of their coats on the instant and showed the preconcert by which they were there to produce these very results. Those who complain are the mob and the minority on that floor who had usurped the right to organize the house, and sought to effect it by force and fraud.

This seizure of the house was but part of a plan to invade the senate and seize the rest of the government. The President in his message says with regard to this:

Nobody was disturbed by the military who had a legal right at that time to occupy a seat in the Legislature. That the democratic minority of the house undertook to seize its organization by fraud and violence; that in this attempt they trampled under foot law; that they undertook to make persons not returned as elected members, so as to create a majority; that they acted under a preconcerted plan, and under false pretenses introduced into the hall a body of men to support their pretensions by force, if necessary, and that conflict, disorder, and riotous proceedings followed, are facts that seem to be well established, and I am credibly informed that these violent proceedings were a part of a premeditated plan to have the house organized in this way, recognize what has been called the McEnery senate, then to depose Governor Kellogg, and so revolutionize the State government.

Was it not the duty of the Government to interfere under circumstances like these? Most of these facts are patent upon the face of them, and the only one added is that by the President, who states it on reliable authority. The seizure of the house was simply an incident of the plan by which the senate was to be revolutionized, by which the State government was to be overthrown. Now what becomes of the guarantee clause of your Constitution, what becomes of the decision of your Supreme Court if all this power in the Constitution falls powerless before an attempt like this? It is a mere farce, and as I said before, any power designing to subvert a State government can succeed in its ends provided by force or fraud it can get possession of the State capitol.

But these events in Louisiana are not to be treated as the whole case. They are but one incident to a long train of circumstances which must be understood to see what the Government was resisting in New Orleans. On the 14th of last September, after a demand on the governor to resign, in an insurrection against the State government, fifteen policemen were killed and thirty wounded. The intervention of Federal soldiers restored peace. I have already shown that Governor Kellogg at that time, under article 4, section 4, of the Constitution, made a requisition for United States aid. The armed organizations continued having large quantities of arms which they had captured from the State militia and which they never have surrendered although required to do so by a proclamation of the President of the United States. They retain them at this time as implements of warfare against the State and National Government.

Democratic Senators have sneered at the idea that the call for troops covered the action of January 4, that the call on September 14 related to and continued down to January 4. Let us see. There is a parallel in the case of Pennsylvania in 1794, when Washington was President of the United States. Edmund Randolph was Secretary of State, and by direction of the President, August 30, wrote to Governor Mifflin, of Pennsylvania, on this very question of continuing forces in the field even after the dispersion of those engaged in resisting the laws; and I quote from Hamilton's Works, page 22, et passim.

Mr. STEVENSON. What volume?

Mr. SARGENT. Volume 5. I ask the Secretary to read what I have marked.

The Secretary read as follows:

There remains only one point on which your excellency will be longer detained; a point, indeed, of great importance, and consequently demands serious and careful reflection. It is the opinion you so emphatically express, that the mere dispersion of the insurgents is the sole object for which the militia can be called out, or kept in service after they may have been called out.

The President reserves to the last moment the consideration and decision of this point.

But there are arguments weighing heavily against the opinion you have expressed, which, in the mean time, are offered to your candid consideration.

The Constitution of the United States (article 1, section 8) empowers Congress "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions;" evidently from the wording and distribution of the sentence contemplating the execution of the laws of the Union as a thing distinct from the suppression of insurrections.

The act of May 2, 1792, for carrying the provision of the Constitution into effect adopts for its title the very words of the Constitution, being "An act to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions," continuing the constitutional distinction.

The first section of the act provides for the cases of invasion and of insurrection, confining the latter to the case of insurrection against the government of a State. The second section provides for the case of the execution of the laws being obstructed by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the powers vested in the marshals.

The words are these: "Whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed or the execution thereof obstructed in any State by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act, the same being notified to the President of the United States by an associate judge or the district judge, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia of such State to suppress such combinations and to cause the laws to be duly executed." Then follows a provision for calling forth the militia of other States.

The terms of this section appear to contemplate and describe something that may be less than insurrection. "The combinations" mentioned may indeed amount to insurrections, but it is conceivable that they may stop at associations not to comply with the law, supported by riots, assassinations, and murders, and by a general spirit in a part of the community which may baffle the ordinary judiciary means, with no other aid than the posse comitatus, magistrates, and officers in the execution of their duty. And the objects for which the militia are to be called are expressly not only to suppress these combinations, (whether amounting to insurrections or not,) but to cause the laws to be duly executed.

It is therefore plainly contrary to the manifest general intent of the Constitution and of this act, and to the positive and express terms of the second section of the act, to say that the militia called forth are not to be continued in service for the purpose of causing the laws to be duly executed, and, of course, till they are so executed.

What is the main and ultimate object of calling forth the militia? "To cause the laws to be executed." Which are the laws to be executed? Those which are opposed and obstructed in their execution by the combinations described in the present case—the laws laying duties upon spirits distilled within the United States, and upon stills; and incidentally those which uphold the judiciary functions. When are the laws executed? Clearly when the opposition is subdued; when penalties for disobedience can be enforced; when a compliance is effectuated.

Would the mere dispersion of insurgents and their retiring to their respective homes do this? Would it satisfy either member of the provision, the suppression of the combinations, or the execution of the laws? Might not the former, notwithstanding the dispersion, continue in full vigor, ready at any moment to break out into new acts of resistance to the laws? Are the militia to be kept perpetually marching and countermarching toward the insurgents while they are embodied, and from them when they have separated and retired? Suppose the insurgents, hardly enough to wait the experiment of a battle, are vanquished, and then disperse and retire home, are the militia immediately to retire also to give them an opportunity to reassemble, recruit, and prepare for another battle? And is this to go on and be repeated without limit?

Such a construction of the law, if true, were certainly a very unfortunate one, rendering its provisions essentially nugatory, and leading to endless expense and as endless disappointment. It could hardly be advisable to vex the militia by marching them to a distant point, where they might scarcely be arrived before it would be legally necessary for them to return, not in consequence of having effected their object—of having “caused the laws to be executed”—but in consequence of the mere stratagem of a deceitful dispersion and retiring.

Mr. SARGENT. On the 14th of September last there was a demand on the governor by a committee of thirty appointed by a meeting held in New Orleans that he resign his office. He declined. There was then an insurrection in the streets of New Orleans. I will say to my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY,] who remarks to me, sotto voce, that there was no insurrection there, and hence it was not a parallel case, that there was insurrection in New Orleans, there were men killed and wounded there by the scores, and the demand they made at their meetings was the overthrow of the State government. What constitutes an insurrection? Is it not the rising of citizens, of the populace, against the government? Is it not enforcing their demand by blood? Is it not demanding the subversion of the government? Then if an insurrection existed there, and certainly there was much more of one than there was in Pennsylvania, where it was simply resistance to the excise law, where I believe there was nobody killed, nobody hurt, or in extremely rare instances if at all—if that in Pennsylvania which Randolph refers to was an insurrection, then for God's sake how much more important was the insurrection which took place on the 14th of September in Louisiana, in the city of New Orleans, when these consequences of which I speak occurred? Of course those who were killed were only republicans; they may have been only negroes. It may not amount to insurrection to kill men of that sort although the object is to subvert a government, and those who were killed were the men who maintained it; but in my mind it is an insurrection.

In Pennsylvania, by the express order of President Washington, the troops were kept in the field after the dispersion of the insurgents or those who were resisting the excise law. Says Alexander Hamilton in his letter to Lee, who was commanding the forces:

BEDFORD, October 20, 1794.

SIR: I have it in special instruction from the President of the United States now at this place, to convey to you the following instructions for the general direction of your conduct in the command of the militia army, with which you are charged.

After giving other directions, he says:

When the insurrection is subdued, and the requisite means have been put in execution to secure obedience to the laws, so as to render it proper for the Army to retire, (an event which you will accelerate as much as shall be consistent with the object,) you will endeavor to make an arrangement for detaching such force as you deem adequate, to be stationed within the disaffected country in such a manner as best to afford protection to well-disposed citizens and to the officers of the revenue, and to repress by their presence the spirit of riot and opposition to the laws.

Now, that is just what President Grant did after the 14th of September. When by his proclamation the insurgents had been dispersed by the show of military force which was made there and quiet was restored, although the insurgents did not give up the arms which feloniously they had taken from the State authorities, he kept the Army there as a corps of observation, “to afford protection to well-disposed citizens, and to repress by their presence the spirit of riot and opposition to the laws,” and so they were there and so continuing to the 4th day of January, 1875. So Sheridan found them when he went there and spoke of the condition of things and the banditti which were traversing that State. O, yes; that is a terrible phrase, this word “banditti!” How is it possible that a man of Sheridan's character could have uttered it? I find in a letter of Edmund Randolph, written by the direction of Washington, to Mifflin, governor of Pennsylvania, these words applied to the persons who were resisting the laws of Pennsylvania:

An armed banditti—

He says—

in disguise, had recently gone to the house of an officer of the revenue in the night, attacked it, broken open the doors, and, by menaces of instant death, enforced by pistols presented at him, had compelled a surrender of his commission and books of office.

This word is, contemporary with Washington's administration, applied to lawless men who go about with arms at night to interfere with officers of the Government in the discharge of their duty, to put peaceable and well-disposed citizens in peril of their lives. More than that in the case of Louisiana; less than that even in Pennsylvania. If Edmund Randolph, Secretary of State of Washington, writing under Washington's orders, could properly use the word “banditti” as applied to men engaged in any such triflingly dangerous proceedings compared with those in Louisiana, with how much more terrible force comes the truthfulness in the condemnation of Sheridan when he applies it to these men who have deluged the State of Louisiana with republican blood, who have driven at one election twenty thousand men from the polls in terror for their lives, who have driven them to the woods to subsist upon roots and acorns or any means which they could get by fugitive processes hiding in terror of their lives, who within a few days of one election killed hundreds of men, who finally on the 14th of September after many atrocities which they had committed leading up to the event overturned the State government, and who were driven from the power which they had usurped by the United States forces, by the terror of the intervention, under the guarantee clause, of the President of the United States. I ask if the word banditti is not properly used under such circumstances, and if Sheridan has not an illustrious precedent for the use which he makes of it?

This September insurrection to which I refer is not all the picture by any means. The city for months had been a scene of a reign of terror to prevent the voting and registration of republicans. Large bodies of armed men traversed the republican districts, murdering worthy and inoffensive men, as at Coushatta where they assassinated Twitchell, a planter in Red River Parish; Eggleston, sheriff; Dewees, supervisor; and Holland and Howells, lawyers, two of them southern born. We all know how that was done, these men being promised a safe escort after it was demanded that they should leave the State and resign the offices to which they had been legally and fairly elected. They being under safe escort, as promised, were murdered on their way to the State boundary. Time would fail to recount all the assassinations for political purposes attending the last election in Louisiana, and democratic Senators' ears are offended by the cry of murder, murder! Do you not think we are tired of the fact of murder, murder? If it is painful for your ears to hear it, is it not painful for us to know that it is committed?

On the general state of society the testimony of Ruford Blunt, recently a State senator, residing in Natchitoches, taken by the House committee recently at New Orleans, is impressive. Describing affairs in the last registration and election in that parish, he says:

I seldom slept at home; other colored men remained in the woods after the registering office closed; about five hundred colored men did not register; some of those who registered could not vote because the registering officer spelled their names wrongly; there was a reign of terror up to election day; I resigned my position as senator to save my life; there is a petition in my parish asking Congress to do something to protect colored people; the colored men believe that the whites intend to reduce them to slavery again.

On election day many of my people were prevented from voting as they chose, and some of them voted the White League ticket; they voted that way to save themselves; without the presence of troops on election day, I think not more than five hundred colored men could have voted; the white people agreed to employ men who voted the democratic ticket first, and next, men who did not vote at all; the public schools in Natchitoches are free, and at present colored children attend them more regularly than white children; the colored people in the parish would not be safe under democratic rule; I know ten colored men who voted the democratic ticket; the hatred of the people is directed against both negroes and republicans; I don't believe that a good democrat from the North during the last campaign could have canvassed the parish in safety if he had favored fair measures and deprecated intimidation; the planters and merchants generally manage to swindle the negroes out of their earnings; the feeling of distrust on the part of the colored people of the whites was not suggested to them by the republicans.

William H. Maxey testified before that committee a very important thing, so far as McEnery was concerned, it seems to me. I have a short extract from his testimony, which I have separated from the rest:

It was impossible to have a fair registration and election. Last year, when Mr. McEnery made a speech in Homer and one in Winn, about half way through his speech he said there were too many Maxeys and Blackburns; if some of them were hung it would be a good thing.

Here was on the part of this man, pretending to have been elected governor of the State, an inciting to these very atrocities to which I have referred. Suppose Governor Allen, of Ohio, or some other governor, should in the face of an election, during a heated canvass, make a suggestion in reference to his opponents or those who were organizing the opposition party, endeavoring to prevail in the election, that it would be better if they could be hung or made away with or got out of the way, there were too many of them; how would the people of Ohio and the whole North recoil with horror at such a suggestion! We have been so accustomed to this White-League ruffianism in the South that we look on these things almost with indifference when they occur there.

Here is the testimony of the editor of the Caucasian, a violent, outspoken White-League editor, in which he makes few concealments:

NEW ORLEANS, February 5.

In the cross-examination of Mr. Hunter, the editor of the Caucasian, before the congressional committee yesterday, Mr. FRYE read several extracts from that paper and asked witness if such extreme ideas were his opinions, and he replied in the affirmative. Witness said, “My associate editor participated in the Grant Parish massacre; the republican newspaper was mobbed and material destroyed; the persons who did it were employees of the democratic newspaper; my father, K. Hunter, is a last-ditch democrat.” The letter now produced stating that there was intimidation of men in Rapides Parish at the election is in the handwriting of K. A. Hunter, who being present, and stating that the letter was private and not intended for publication, Mr. FRYE withdrew it.

To Mr. HOAR. We were prepared with force if it was necessary to seat our candidates—

I suppose he refers to the Legislature—

if the police had not interfered we should have left the members to settle it themselves; if the police had interfered and the United States troops had not been present there would have been somebody hurt; on the 4th of January I was prepared myself to come down with ten or twelve armed men to protect our members in their rights as we considered them; I had been through the war, and for myself could hold my own; fifty-nine colored men were killed at Colfax and two white men died; the Caucasian praised the men who took part in the Colfax massacre; I approved of it, as most of our people did; my paper counseled resistance to United States troops in a certain emergency; had not the Colfax affair ended as it did, not less than a thousand niggers would have been killed later.

He says:

I approved of the Colfax massacre, as did most of our people.

Should any republican Senator on this floor say that these scenes of violence, the Colfax massacre, the Coushatta affair, the killing of fifty or one hundred men at Vicksburg the other day, were approved by most of the southern people or most of the people of Louisiana, we should be accused with open throats of slandering the southern people; but here their own spokesman says most of our people approved of this thing—approved of these bloody deeds.

These were the means thus referred to, the suppression of registration, the suppression of voting, and the murdering of the political rights of a party in the State, and that the majority party, as is obvious; for if it was not a majority, there would be no necessity for the use of such means; these means being in use, Senators boast of the election of men to the Legislature by means like these. They say, "O, well, notwithstanding all you say, these five men who were not returned by the returning board were elected; and if they had counted in others who were elected, we would have had an unquestionable majority even without the five." If you will kill off all the republicans, white and black, of course you will have a majority; but I say it is not by means like these that legislative bodies are to be elected, but such means as these poison the very fountain of the law-making power; it becomes the will of a mob, an armed mob, a ruthless, cruel mob, a mob as cruel as that which dominated in the Reign of Terror in France, and without the regularity which that had. The principle of Magna Charta, away back in the time of King John, in 1215, protests against proceedings like these. In article 39 of the Great Charter signed at Runnymede, on the 18th of June, 1215, by "John, by the grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Count of Anjou," in the presence of the "Army of God and Holy Church," it was promised:

39. No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, or disseized, or outlawed, or banished, or any ways destroyed, nor will we pass upon him, nor will we send upon him, unless by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land.

"Shall not be destroyed from the land!" What are you doing but destroying men from the land in Louisiana, destroying men of one political sentiment for their political sentiments? Is there anything in civilization, anything in the laws sanctioned by the public judgment of mankind since the world emerged from barbarism, that does not protest against these deeds in Louisiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Howe in the chair.) The Senator will suspend until the Chair receives a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly.

DEATH OF HON. SAMUEL HOOPER.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate intelligence of the death of Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of the House from the State of Massachusetts, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
February, 15, 1875.

On motion of Mr. E. ROCKWOOD HOAR,
Resolved, That a committee of seven members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to take order for superintending the funeral of SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of this body, which will take place to-morrow (Tuesday) at two o'clock p. m., and that the House will attend the same.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these proceedings to the Senate and invite the Senate to attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at two o'clock.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, it is with a deep sense of personal as well as of public loss that I rise to propose the resolution which usage requires.

Mr. HOOPER died at his residence in this city yesterday morning at fifteen minutes past nine o'clock. He was the senior member of the Massachusetts delegation in Congress, the second in the term of his service, and he was endeared to us all by ties of sincere respect and ardent friendship. I submit for the present consideration of the Senate the resolutions which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers resolutions which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the Senate will attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Mr. McDILL, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4716) authorizing the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company to straighten the line of their road; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES M. BLAKE.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) for the relief of Charles M. Blake, late chaplain of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PONTON BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. CROUNSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4717) authorizing the Nebraska City Bridge Company to construct a ponton bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City, in Otoe County, Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED ORDNANCE.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4718) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned ordnance to Post No. 28 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Geneva, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HASTINGS AND DAKOTA RAILROAD.

Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4719) relating to the lands granted to aid in the construction of the Hastings and Dakota Railroad in the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED ORDNANCE.

Mr. BIERY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4720) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned ordnance to Farragut Post No. 214, Grand Army of the Republic; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BINDING OF CENSUS RETURNS.

Mr. DONNAN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into and report upon the propriety of having the manuscript returns of the first and ninth censuses suitably bound for their better preservation and for more ready reference thereto.

JOSEPH RUOHS.

Mr. CRUTCHFIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4721) for the relief of Joseph Ruohs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MAJOR HUGO HILLEBRANDT.

Mr. MACDOUGALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4722) granting arrears of pension of Major Hugo Hillebrandt, late of Thirty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PRESERVATION OF GAME.

Mr. MACDOUGALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4723) for the preservation of game in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF DISTRICT WORKINGMEN.

Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, presented a petition of workmen of the District of Columbia, showing the indebtedness of each contractor of the late board of public works of the District of Columbia to the workingmen of said District; and also the claims of workmen against the late board of public works, showing the amounts due to each workman by said board; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PENITENTIARY BUILDINGS, ARIZONA AND DAKOTA.

Mr. McCORMICK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4724) to authorize the erection of penitentiary buildings in the Territories of Arizona and Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS F. RYAN AND CHARLES J. KNIGHT.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4725) for the relief of Thomas F. Ryan and Charles J. Knight; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK SAINT ALBANS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4726) providing for the adjudication of the claim of the First National Bank of Saint Albans; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LAWRENCE also, from the same committee, submitted adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table and the reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 4229) relative to the steamers Philo Parsons and Island Queen; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4177) for the relief of John H. Russell, of Adrian, Michigan.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to reconsider the vote on the resolution in regard to the Western Union Telegraph Company. I did not know what it was when it passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Massachusetts who offered the resolution made the usual motion to reconsider, and that was laid upon the table.

Mr. MERRIAM. It passed through so rapidly that I did not know at the time what it was.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in his seat?

Mr. MERRIAM. I was in my seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from New York object.

Mr. MERRIAM. I did not object. I did not know what it was.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is not an uncommon thing.

The SPEAKER. It is now too late.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1317) to enable Ann Hathaway, executrix of the last will and testament of Joshua Hathaway, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improved device for converting reciprocating into rotary motion;

An act (H. R. No. 2103) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, and to regulate its construction and operation;

An act (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky;

An act (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans.

An act (H. R. No. 4335) authorizing John Hazeltine to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of his patent for a new and useful water-wheel; and

An act (H. R. No. 4444) to amend an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1875.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1799) granting a pension to Angelica Hammond;

An act (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of William J. Coite;

An act (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome.

PREFERENCE OF AMERICAN LABOR AND MATERIAL.

Mr. SHERWOOD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That when the Army appropriation bill shall be under consideration it shall be in order to consider the following amendment:

In all contracts for material for any public improvement the Secretary of War shall give preference to American material, and all labor thereon shall be performed within the jurisdiction of the United States.

HOOR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. GARFIELD submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That hereafter, until otherwise ordered, the House shall meet at eleven o'clock a. m.

THOMAS W. FITCH, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put on its passage joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) authorizing Thomas W. Fitch, engineer United States Navy, to accept of a wedding present sent to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch.

The resolution, which was read, authorizes Thomas W. Fitch, engineer in the United States Navy, to accept a wedding present of jewelry sent to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch, by the Khedive of Egypt as a token of respect.

Mr. MAYNARD. Would it not be proper to amend the Senate joint resolution so as to allow this honorary present to be received by the parties in this country without payment of duty?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I do not think it desirable to amend the resolution as the Senate passed it. Very likely as it is drawn it accomplishes the object which the gentleman from Tennessee proposes.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman is probably right in his construction of the text as it is; and if so, no amendment is necessary.

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. E. R. HOAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF VERMONT.

Mr. POTTER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to move to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1012, for the relief of the district judge of Vermont, in order that it may be put upon its passage at this time.

The preamble states that the present incumbent of the office of district judge for the district of Vermont is incapacitated by sickness and paralysis from performing the duties of his office, which incapacity is believed to be permanent; and the bill then provides that, the resignation of the district judge for the district of Vermont being tendered and accepted by the President of the United States, the salary now received by said judge shall be continued to him during his natural life, payable in the same manner and form as if he actually performed the duties of his office.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POTTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEXAS INDEMNITY BONDS.

The SPEAKER. At the expiration of the morning hour the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] of the Committee on War Claims, obtained the floor to move to take from the Speaker's table and pass under a suspension of the rules the Senate bill No. 141, for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery. But prior to that there is a motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] which comes over from Monday last, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4001) to provide for the redemption of overdue bonds of the United States known as Texas, indemnity bonds and to pass the same under a suspension of the rules. That motion, except by unanimous consent, must take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to suspend the rules.

The Clerk will read the bill which the gentleman from New York desires to be passed under a suspension of the rules.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the governor of the State of Texas, for the use of that State, the par value of one hundred and fifty-one bonds of the United States, and the coupons due thereon, numbered 4544 to 4694, consecutively and both inclusive, of the series of bonds issued under the act of September 9, 1850, known as Texas indemnity bonds, and to enter the same on the books of the Treasury as redeemed, upon the execution to the United States by the State of Texas of a bond to indemnify the United States for any loss they may sustain in consequence of such payment in the penal sum of $250,000; such bond to be duly authorized by the Legislature of the State of Texas, and to be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to make an inquiry. It seems to be generally understood that all legislation affecting bonds of the United States should come from the Committee on Ways and Means. Is there any reason why this bill should be an exception to that rule?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. With the permission of the House I will give a brief explanation. During the war a portion of the indemnity bonds which were in the possession of the State of Texas, belonging to that State, were taken and carried away to Europe. A suit was brought against the holders of these bonds of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States decided that they belonged to the State of Texas, and were not properly taken from the treasury of the State of Texas.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the floor to be assigned to me for the purpose of making a motion to suspend the rules. Have I a right to object to debate on the pending bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Then I object to debate.

Mr. DAWES. On a motion of so much importance as this some explanation should be left on record.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The report of the Committee on the Judiciary is on the record. All this that I am stating is matter of record.

Some of these bonds, the bonds included in this bill, were carried to England, and the man who has them will not put himself within the jurisdiction of the courts to have the question settled. Therefore this bill is offered simply to allow the United States to pay the interest on these bonds to the State of Texas until this man appears with them, upon the State of Texas giving a bond authorized by the Legislature to indemnify the United States for any loss they may sustain in consequence of such payment.

Mr. DAWES. What hinders the State of Texas from proceeding against the parties in Europe?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Where they are is not exactly known. The State of Texas is to give a bond to indemnify the United States against anybody who claims hereafter, such bond to be authorized by the Legislature of Texas and to be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. How could you enforce it against a State? You cannot sue a State in our courts.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; the United States can sue a State.

Mr. CESSNA. More especially if they give us a bond.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. At any rate you can sue the sureties. I do not think there can be any objection to this bill. It passed our committee unanimously.

Mr. POTTER. It did not pass the committee unanimously, for I did not vote for it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You are for it now.

Mr. POTTER. No, sir; I am against it now.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I object to further debate.

The question was on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TREMAIN and Mr. POTTER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 102, noes not counted.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurred on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and being put, there were—ayes 97, noes 41; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 107.

Before the negative vote was completed,

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 19, noes 88.

The SPEAKER. The affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote, the yeas and nays are refused. But, as no quorum voted on the motion to suspend the rules, the tellers will resume their places. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. CONGER. It was on the yeas and nays I wanted tellers, and I rose to ask for them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman make that demand audibly.

Mr. CONGER. I said I rose to ask them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question of ordering tellers on the yeas and nays.

The question being put, there were—ayes 27; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers on the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. There must be two-thirds of a quorum in the affirmative to pass the bill. As no quorum has voted, the tellers will resume their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 43.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the bill (S. No. 141) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery be taken from the Speaker's table and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claims for building vessels of war and constructing steam-machinery, referred to and embraced in the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery," approved March 2, 1867, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, which is hereby vested with authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine the respective claims of the several parties: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claims shall be upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by said contractors for the building of said vessels of war and in the construction of steam-machinery, in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work, which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractors: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contracts between the contractors and the Government for specific alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractors by the Government, over and above the original contract price for the building of said vessels and the construction of said machinery, shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated; and if the amounts so to be deducted in any case shall exceed the amount allowed by said court, judgment shall be entered for the excess against such claimant in favor of the United States; and said court is directed to certify such judgment and record to the circuit court of the circuit where such claimant resides; and said circuit court is hereby vested with authority to issue execution and to enforce its collection the same as if said judgment had originally been rendered therein: And provided further, That if any of such changes caused less work and expense to the contractors than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding reduction shall be made from the contract price, and the amount thereof be deducted from any allowance to be made by said court to said claimants: And provided further, That all claims under the provisions of this act shall be presented within one year from the passage thereof and not afterward; and the claimants in their petitions shall stipulate and agree to accept and abide by all the provisions of this act.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any report accompanying that bill?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It will take from three to five million dollars from the Treasury. The Government holds a receipt in full for these claims. The Court of Claims has decided against them.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I object to that. The bill passed the Senate without objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask if it is not the right of a member of the House to demand the reading of a report of its own committee upon this bill?

The SPEAKER. It would be under the rules; but this is a motion to suspend the rules, including the rule which gives that privilege. The motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is to suspend the rules, and pass the bill.

Mr. SPEER. I would ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how many millions this bill would take out of the Treasury?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I think it will save hundreds of thousands of dollars if passed.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask the gentleman to modify his motion so as simply to bring the bill before the House for consideration.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I cannot do that; at two o'clock the Committee on the District of Columbia is entitled to the floor.

On seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 92, noes not counted.

Mr. RANDALL. We may as well save time. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot have the yeas and nays on seconding the motion.

Mr. RANDALL. No; but I withdraw the call for a further count, and will ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

So the motion was seconded.

Mr. RANDALL. I now call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 133, nays 99, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Bass, Beale, Berry, Biery, Bland, Bowen, Bradley, Bundy, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick B. Wilson, Wood, and Woodworth—56.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. COOK said: I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BLOUNT, is detained at his home by sickness.

Mr. COTTON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with in order to save time for the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was entitled to the floor at two o'clock, and it is now nearly half past two o'clock.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I object.

The list of the names was then read, and the result of the vote announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that he was directed to inform the House of Representatives that in the absence of the Vice-President the Senate had chosen Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, President pro tempore.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act, and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WHEELER in the chair.) This being the third Monday of the month, by a standing rule of the House reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia are exclusively in order, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER] is recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. STANARD. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HARMER,] the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to yield to me to offer a resolution to fix a day for the consideration of a certain bill.

Mr. HARMER. Will it lead to debate?

Mr. STANARD. It will not.

Mr. RANDALL. Before I give consent, I ask that the resolution be read.

Mr. STANARD. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so that substitute for House bill No. 4620, for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, shall be made a special order for consideration in the House on Thursday, the 18th day of February, 1875, at the hour of one o'clock p. m., and that the previous question shall be called on the same at four o'clock on the same day.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to that.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the substitute may be printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARMER. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. HENDEE.]

CAPITOL, NORTH O STREET AND SOUTH WASHINGTON RAILWAY.

Mr. HENDEE. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back House bill No. 2102, to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company, which with the Senate amendments thereto was referred to the committee, and to recommend that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I desire to state that the amendments made by the Senate to this bill are principally in relation to changes of location of the railway, as for instance from Twelfth street to Eleventh street.

Mr. POTTER. I ask that the amendments be all read.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no separate vote is asked upon these amendments, the question will be upon concurring in the Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. HENDEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STREET CLEANING IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HENDEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4727) explanatory of the act passed June 20, 1874; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that it was the true intent and meaning of the act passed June 20, 1874, for the government of the District of Columbia, that the sweeping, cleaning, and removing all refuse and filthy accumulations in the streets, alleys, and avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the repairs and cleaning of the sewers, are necessary municipal objects, which belong to the current expenses of the same, to be paid for in money as other ordinary municipal expenses; and directs the proper District authorities to pay the parties that have heretofore performed this class of work, from the treasury of said District, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the amount and value of said work done since the passage of the act, with legal interest from the time the same fell due under the contract, but not till after their accounts have been approved and audited as the law directs.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COTTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 4688 a bill (H. R. No. 4723) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, there shall be levied upon all real and personal property in said District, excepting only that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50 on each $100.

SEC. 2. That the amount collected under the provisions of this act shall be distributed for the purposes and in the proportions provided by the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, approved June 26, 1873, entitled "An act imposing taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874," so far as said apportionment is not inconsistent with this act: Provided, That deficiencies in any of said funds enumerated in said act may be supplied from any surplus in either of said funds; but, unless a surplus exists, the revenues belonging to one fund shall not be applied to the purposes of any other fund.

SEC. 3. That one-half of the tax levied by this act upon real and personal property shall become due and payable on the 1st day of October, 1875, and the other one-half of such tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of April, 1876; and in every case where the tax levied by this act shall be paid in installments as herein authorized, each of said payments shall be deemed to have been made on the several funds and for the different purposes indicated in the second section of this act; and an equal pro rata proportion of the payments so made shall be carried to the credit of the respective funds.

SEC. 4. That if one-half of the tax herein levied upon the real and personal property taxed by this act shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of October, 1875, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent; and there shall be added, to be collected with such taxes, a penalty of 2 per cent. upon the amount thereof on the first day of each succeeding month until payment of said installment and penalty. And if said installment shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of April, 1876, together with the one-half of said original tax due on or before said 1st day of April, a like penalty shall be added on said last one-half of such tax; and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax on such part or parcel of land, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by law.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes, on real property upon which the same are assessed, in arrears on the 1st day of May, 1876; and he shall, within ten days thereafter, publish the same, with a notice of sale, in the regular issue of a daily newspaper published in said District, to be designated by the commissioners of the District or their successors in office, once a week for three successive weeks, giving notice that if said taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold by the said collector at public auction, at the south front of the courthouse, in the city of Washington, to the highest bidder or bidders. Upon the day specified in such advertisement, the collector shall proceed to sell any and all property upon which said taxes remain unpaid, and continue to sell the same every day until all the real property as aforesaid shall have been brought to auction. Immediately after the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchase-money, he shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale; and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner thereof within one year from the day of sale, by payment of the amount for which it was sold at such sale, and 15 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed thereof shall be given by the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, to the purchaser at the tax sale, or the assignee of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be a good and perfect title in fee-simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized: Provided, however, That no such deed shall be given until after the expiration of thirty days from the time the party occupying said real estate, should it be actually occupied, and the owner thereof, if a resident of said District, shall have had at least thirty days' notice in writing from the purchaser or the assignee of the certificate of the fact of such sale and of the day of the expiration of the time for redemption; which notice shall be in such form as the commissioners of said District or their successors shall prescribe: And provided further, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bids not sufficient to meet the amounts of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalty, and costs thereon, said property shall thereupon be bid off by the said commissioners, or their successors in office, in the name of the District of Columbia; and if within one year thereafter such property is not redeemed by the owner or owners thereof, by the payment of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time of the offer of the sale, and 10 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed for said property shall be made to said District, as in cases of individual purchasers: Provided also, That previous to the making of such deed, notice shall be given to the occupant and owner, as provided in the case of a sale to an individual: And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability be allowed one year after such minors coming to, or being of, full age, or after the removal of such legal disability, to redeem the property so sold, or of which the title has, as aforesaid, become vested in the District of Columbia, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or from the District of Columbia, on payment of the amount of purchase-money so paid therefor, with 10 per cent. per annum interest thereon as aforesaid, and all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser, or his assigns, between the day of sale and the period of such redemption, 10 per cent. per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments, and also the value of improvements which may have been made or erected on such property by the purchaser or by the District of Columbia, while the same was in his, her, or their or its possession.

SEC. 6. That the collector of taxes, immediately after he shall have made sale of any property as aforesaid, shall file with the comptroller a written report, in which he shall give a statement of the property advertised and the property sold, to whom it was assessed, the taxes due, to whom sold, the amount paid, the date of sale, the cost thereof, and the surplus, if any, and the lands so as aforesaid sold to the District. Any surplus remaining after collection of taxes, penalties, and costs on any real estate, shall be deposited by the collector of taxes to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to the owner or owners, or their legal representatives, in the same manner as other payments made by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That when the installment of one-half of the taxes on personal property so as aforesaid due and payable on or before the 1st day of October, 1875, shall not be paid on or before said date, or when the remaining installment shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of April, 1876, then, and in either such event, the collector of taxes may distrain sufficient goods and chattels found within said District, and belonging to the person, persons, association, firm, or corporation, charged with such tax, to pay the taxes remaining due under the provisions of this law from such persons, firm, association, or corporation, together with the penalty thereon and the costs that may accrue; and thereupon said collector shall immediately proceed to advertise the same, by public notices posted conspicuously in front of the court-house and in the office of said collector, and by advertisement three times for one week in some daily newspaper published in said District, stating the time when and place where such property shall be sold, all such publications to be at least six days before the day of sale; and if the taxes and penalty thereon for which such property shall have been distrained, and the costs and expense which shall have accrued thereon, shall not be paid before the day fixed for such sale, which shall be not less than ten days after the taking of such property, the collector shall proceed to sell, at public auction, to the highest bidder, such property, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to pay said taxes, penalty, and accrued costs and expense of such distraint and sale. The place for making all such sales shall be in front of the court-house. The collector of taxes shall be allowed, for making such distress and sale, the same fees as are now by law allowed to the marshal of said District for making levy and sale of property under execution. Said collector shall report in detail every such distress and sale, in writing, to the commissioners of the District or their successors in office; and his accounts, in respect to every such distress or sale, shall forthwith be submitted by him to the accounting officers of the District and audited by them. Any surplus resulting from such sale shall be paid into the treasury of the District, and, upon being claimed by the owner or owners of the goods and chattels, shall be paid to him.

SEC. 8. The property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following and no other, namely: First, houses for the reformation of offenders, almshouses, buildings devoted to art or belonging to institutions of purely public charity; houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers; free public library buildings and cemeteries; secondly, the lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any said house or building for its legitimate purpose and no other; but if any portion of any said building, house, grounds, or cemetery so in terms excepted is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against the owner of said building or grounds; thirdly, bonds, coupons, currency, certificates, notes, and checks issued by the United States, or its officers, or securities or bonds of the District of Columbia; fourthly, metal, bullion, and coin in the possession or control of the United States; fifthly, imported merchandise in original packages in the hands of the importer, and property in transitu; sixthly, goods, chattels, and other personal property owned by persons domiciled in said District, but whose legal residence is out of said District and which property is taxed elsewhere; seventhly, money loaned in said District on the security of deeds of trust, bond, and mortgage; eighthly, the stock (so far as the individual owner is concerned) of any corporation which is taxed on its capital; ninthly, all property exempt by law from execution, including all libraries or books in use and not held for sale, not over the value of $500, and all household, store, shop, or office furniture, or tools, not held for sale, not over the value of $500.

SEC. 9. The assessor may interrogate all persons and the proper officers of corporations in relation to the amount, character, and value of personal property owned and held by them after having duly sworn said persons and officers, and may make such assessment in relation thereto as he may deem just and equitable from such sources as may be attainable. And any person or persons making willfully false statements in relation to the amount, character, or value of any personal property so held by them in relation to the assessment thereof, shall be deemed guilty of perjury and liable to punishment therefor according to law.

SEC. 10. That from the assessed value of the personal property only of any person there shall be deducted the amount of any valid and bona fide debt or debts which any such person shall individually and absolutely owe, upon the same being established by the affidavit of such person claiming deduction, specifying the particulars and amount of such debt or debts; and the affidavit may be sworn to before any assessor; but if said person shall not answer under oath all reasonable questions of the assessor touching said debts, the same shall not be deducted from the value of said personal property.

SEC. 11. That the stock of all corporations in said District (not herein exempted) shall be appraised in bulk by the assessors, and the corporation issuing the same shall be liable for the tax thereon according to such value; but from the appraised value of the stock shall be first deducted the value of any real estate of said corporation in said District, which shall be separately taxed against said corporation.

SEC. 12. That the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, shall appoint five competent persons to be assessors, and to hold office for the term of one year, the salary of each of said assessors to be $500 per year. Said assessors shall, before the 1st day of May, 1875, under the direction of the superintendent of assessments and taxes of said District, assess the value of all the real and personal property in said District liable to taxation hereunder, and shall state the same separately, in books to be kept in a systematic manner; and such value for taxation shall be the true value in the lawful money of the United States of the property so assessed. The assessed value shall have reference to the date of the 1st day of April, 1875. Said assessors shall, between the 1st day of May, 1875, and the 30th day of May, 1875, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them, and for the purpose of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuation theretofore made by them. Each assessor shall, at the meetings of the assessors as aforesaid, make full and detailed reports of his acts as such assessor. And during said period they shall have power to revise assessments theretofore made by them, or any of them, by either justly increasing or justly diminishing any particular assessment. Upon the assessments so as aforesaid made and finally revised, the tax hereinafter provided for shall be levied, and the collector of taxes shall be in readiness to receive payment of the same on and after the 1st day of July, 1875. Said assessors, before entering upon their duties shall respectively take or subscribe an oath or affirmation, before any officer authorized to administer oaths or affirmations in said District, to faithfully discharge the duties of their said office; which oaths, when taken, shall be certified by the person before whom the same shall have been taken, and shall be filed with the commissioners of the District.

SEC. 13. That the treasurer of the District, upon receiving any moneys, shall forthwith deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States; and said moneys thus deposited shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States only in such sums and at such times as the same shall be actually required, and only for expenditures authorized by law, and only upon warrants of the accounting officers of the District, issued under the direction of the commissioners of the District or their successors in office.

SEC. 14. That the commissioners of the District or their successors in office are hereby authorized to reduce, adjust, and equalize the pay or salaries of all officers or employees payable from the funds of the District government in whole or in part: Provided, however, That the aggregate sum of pay and salaries shall not be increased beyond the present aggregate amount of pay and salaries.

SEC. 15. That the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, shall have power to make contracts for necessary special improvements: Provided, That every such contract shall, in respect of the indebtedness thereby incurred or contemplated, come within the limits of the sum provided for such purposes by congressional enactment before the making of such contract, added to the contribution toward the cost of work under such contract assessable upon property (not including property belonging to the United States) adjoining and to be specially benefited by the improvement contracted for, and such assessments shall be assessable and collectible only on completion of the work and in the same manner and in the same proportion as such assessments are under existing laws. But before the making of any such contract, the plan of improvement proposed shall be submitted for approval to a board of officers, to consist of the Chief Engineer of the Army, the engineer in chief of public buildings and grounds, and the engineer in charge of the public works of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 16. That the third section of the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia entitled "An act prescribing the mode of assessment for special improvements and providing for the collection thereof," approved August 10, 1871, shall be, and is hereby, amended so that all sales under said law shall be advertised twice a week for three successive weeks, instead of as heretofore required.

SEC. 17. That the property of the District of Columbia shall be exempt from distraint, attachment, levy, and sale on execution or decree of any court; and said District shall not be made garnishee in any suit at law, or be compelled in equity to pay to one person what said District has or shall have contracted to pay to another.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point of order that this bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken; and the Chair desires to remind the gentleman having the bill in charge that if the House should go into Committee of the Whole at this time, this bill would be the first thing upon the Calendar of District business.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to going into Committee of the Whole; but I desire that we shall have full opportunity to discuss and amend the bill.

Mr. COTTON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. TYNER in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4728) for the support of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

Mr. COTTON. I ask that all general debate on this bill be terminated in one hour. I shall not myself occupy more than fifteen minutes.

Mr. FORT. I object to the limitation of debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COTTON] that he give us some general review of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. COTTON. I propose to do that.

Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to levy a uniform tax of 1½ per cent. upon property in the cities of Washington and Georgetown as well as in the county outside of those cities. The bill makes personal property subject to taxation aside from certain small exemptions. It also taxes church property. The House would undoubtedly like to understand how the taxation proposed in this bill will leave the District in respect to paying the current expenses and the interest on the District debt.

The last assessment of real property in the District amounted to $98,000,000. But there was general complaint that the assessment was too high, and the commissioners conceded that that was perhaps a high valuation. The next assessment in their opinion will show a valuation of about $90,000,000. The last valuation of personal property in the District, made some two or three years ago, was $11,000,000. The church property, appraised last year under the act of June, 1874, amounted to $1,500,000. This gives a basis of $102,500,000. A tax of 1½ per cent. upon that basis will yield $1,537,500. The commissioners estimate a deduction of 10 per cent. for failures to collect the tax, which would give a net tax of $1,383,750.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the gentleman leaves that subject, I would like to inquire whether the $90,000,000 of real property includes public property?

Mr. COTTON. No, sir; that is not included. The commissioners estimate the receipts from licenses to amount to $175,000 and water rents $65,000; making as the total net revenue $1,623,750 for the support of the government of the District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876.

As against that, the commissioners give us the following estimates:

Interest on $8,883,940.43 of gold bonds issued by the corporations of Washington and Georgetown and other gold bonds.....	$617,554 00
For special improvements, keeping up repairs of streets, &c.....	400,000 00
Gas for streets and public buildings.....	144,000 00
Metropolitan police.....	136,423 00
School teachers.....	265,000 00
Expenses of public schools.....	118,000 00
General fund of the District, including estimate of engineer.....	1,074,823 00
Interest on $10,000,000 of 3.65 bonds, not all yet issued but expected to be issued.....	365,000 00
	3,120,800 00

Mr. FORT. Will the gentleman inform us how many of the 3.65 bonds have been issued?

Mr. COTTON. Let me finish my statement. The aggregate I have just given leaves a deficit of $1,497,050 (if the tax is placed at 1½ per cent.) to be provided for by an appropriation by Congress. Taking the basis as furnished by the commissioners, that is the deficit which Congress must expect to meet by an appropriation, if this rate of taxation be adopted.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. What would be the deficit if the tax were fixed at 2 per cent. instead of 1½ per cent.?

Mr. COTTON. I have a statement of that. Upon a taxation of 2 per cent. the commissioners estimate a deduction of 15 per cent. for failures to collect; and on that basis there would be a deficit of $1,183,300.

There was some difference of opinion in the committee as to whether the rate of tax should be 2 per cent. on property in the cities of Georgetown and Washington and $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on property in the county; or whether the tax should be $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon all the property of the District.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The committee have, as I understand, fixed $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. as the rate upon all property.

Mr. COTTON. Yes, sir. Were 2 per cent. taxation imposed upon property in the cities of Georgetown and Washington and $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon country property, the deficit would then be \$1,183,300.

So the House will understand what is to be made by Congress in the way of appropriations, this basis being established according to the figures furnished by the commissioners.

In regard to personal property, the committee decided to include taxation of that class of property, giving pretty liberal exemption to persons having small amounts.

In regard to church property, the committee have adopted the rule of the act of last June, and therefore have struck that out from property exempted from taxation. It is, of course, under this bill subject to taxation like all other property.

There is a clause in the bill exempting from taxation money loaned on bond and mortgage in the District. Somebody near by asks why that should be exempted? I may say on that point the committee had differences of opinion. It was alleged that to tax money loaned on bond and mortgage was really to tax the borrower, because the lender would add that much more to the debt to be paid by the borrower. The committee, by a majority vote, decided to exempt from taxation money loaned on bond and mortgage.

Mr. MERRIAM. Why does the bill exempt savings-banks from taxation, as savings-banks in the District of Columbia are doing a regular banking business?

Mr. COTTON. That was struck out by the committee after the bill was printed, and is not to be included in the bill now before the House.

In addition to the parts of the bill referring to taxation, there are some sections at the end having for their object the adjustment of salaries of officers in the District. We have had applications to increase the pay of certain officers in this District, and to restore the 20 per cent. taken off by the act of June last. We have declined to pass any bill of that character. However, it has been thought there are some officers whose pay should be increased while that of others should be reduced, and a provision is made for the equalization of salaries, but with the limitation that in any adjustment of salaries the aggregate expense on account of salaries shall not exceed the sum now paid.

There is a clause that contracts for special improvements shall not exceed the appropriations made in advance of the lettings for such contracts. These contracts, it is also provided, shall first have the approval of certain officials of the General Government.

There is a section in regard to advertising delinquents for taxes. The present law requires the advertising daily for three weeks in newspapers, resulting in great expense. This reduces the number of weekly advertisements to two, which will be a great saving to the tax-payers of this District.

We are told by the attorney for the District that there is now no law exempting property of this District from levy and sale under execution. We think there should, and especially so long as Congress retains under its control the power to provide for paying the debts of the District by taxing the property therein, and we have inserted a provision in this bill exempting from such levy and sale the property used by the District—in actual use for corporate purposes. There is other property not in actual use which should also be exempted. There is ground bought for a market square of large value and other property, and these creditors who claim they should not take the 3.65 bonds may wish to enforce payment in cash under proceedings taken during the vacation of Congress to recover judgment, and before Congress assembles next winter may sell this property owned by the District. In that way payment in cash may be compelled for at least a portion of the debts contrary to the wish of Congress.

We have therefore put in the bill a clause exempting all property owned by the District from levy and sale under execution. That is correct so long as Congress takes entire charge and control of the manner of paying these debts.

I have now stated the general features of the bill. The other details are of like character to the laws of the several States.

There is a penalty of 2 per cent. a month imposed upon parties in default in the payment of their taxes. The commissioners have told us that they have experienced great disappointment in the District because the taxes have been withheld and not paid promptly. The provision of the bill is a penalty of 2 per cent. a month, or 24 per cent. per annum, against all such delinquents.

As parties here receive their money monthly, it has been thought they could better provide for paying at two periods of the year than to set apart money to pay all at one time. We have therefore made a provision in that regard.

The committee are desirous of making this bill conform to the wishes of the House, and as we are now in Committee of the Whole, members have full opportunity to do so. As the committee for the District of Columbia have a large amount of business, I hope too much time will not be taken up with this one bill. The House can perfect it to suit itself. We present it as the report of the committee. As I have already stated, there were some differences of opinion as to what should be the subject of taxation.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COTTON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. The first section provides for taxing all the real and personal property in the District except as enumerated in the eighth and tenth sections, which include certain exemptions not exceeding $500. In other words, the bill provides for taxing all personal property above $500 in value. I want to know of the gentleman who has charge of the bill whether that would not be taken to include this very Capitol—the very seats upon which we sit as well as the Library of Congress? I see no reason why these are not included, because the language seems to apply to all personal property. I should like to amend so as to exclude such property from the operations of this bill.

Mr. MERRIAM. All Government property.

Mr. RANDALL. Not all Government property, but all property actually owned by the United States should be excluded.

Mr. COTTON. We have no objection to that amendment. The exemptions here are copied largely from the Morrill bill.

Mr. FORT. Will the gentleman from Iowa inform the committee how many of the bonds provided for in the law of last session have been issued?

Mr. COTTON. I am asked how many of the 3.65 bonds have been issued. I made that inquiry this morning at the office of the District commissioners. They said it could be precisely ascertained at the office of the sinking fund commissioner, but they estimated that the amount issued and to be issued shortly would be $10,000,000. Many persons who hold audited certificates on which they can obtain these bonds have been holding them back, in the expectation of getting some better method of payment. And I was informed that since Congress passed the act curing certain defects in the law under which these bonds were issued, parties are coming in to take them. What may be the exact amount I do not know.

Mr. FORT. It is a fact, is it not, that the interest on the whole of these bonds has been appropriated?

Mr. COTTON. It is, and for this reason: That the interest on all these accounts, whether audited or unaudited, converted or not converted, is made to stop by the law of last June, at the time the interest on these bonds commences. So it is only fair that the parties, whether they take the bonds to-day or a month hence, shall have interest from a fixed date, the same as other creditors have had interest who converted earlier. It makes the rule uniform and just.

I yield now to the gentleman representing the District, [Mr. CHIPMAN,] who desires to address the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that the first section be read, and I will then offer my amendment.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I understand that the general debate on the bill is still proceeding.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I withdraw my amendment for the present. Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Before the gentleman from Iowa yields to the gentleman from the District I desire him to answer the question which I addressed to him while he was making his remarks. In the estimate of expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, there is this item: "General fund of the District, including estimates of engineer, $1,074,823." Nearly one-half the estimate of expenses is there included, and yet no items are given. I desire the gentleman from Iowa to inform the committee what items enter into that estimate.

Mr. COTTON. In answer to the gentleman I will send to the desk to be read a detailed statement of what constitutes that estimate.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 13, 1875.

Detailed statement of items comprised under heading of general fund in estimates for fiscal year ending June 30, 1876:

Respectfully,

BEN. R. HOWELL,
Book-keeper Comptroller's Office.

To Hon. COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COTTON. I now yield to the gentleman from the District.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I had prepared with some care a brief which I proposed to follow with the view of setting before the House, perhaps for the last time I shall have the opportunity to do so, the exact condition of affairs in the District of Columbia; more particularly with the view of pointing out what I regard as the legal and moral obligations of the District touching the matter of debt and the legal and moral obligations of the United States in respect to the same matter. But we have a great many bills to report to-day. Some of them are important, although not so much so as the one before the committee, and I shall forego this desire of mine unless in the course of the discussion on this bill it may become necessary for me to state particular facts. I will ask the House however, to grant me the privilege to allow my brief to appear in the RECORD, where it may be examined to-morrow by members who desire to look into it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can submit that question to the House. The Committee of the Whole has no power to grant his request.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I see no disposition on the part of the committee to refuse a just bill for taxing those people, and I think it would be idle in me, and almost criminal, to consume time so valuable to the District, this being their last day during this Congress.

Mr. COTTON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD.]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The only point to which I desire to call the attention of the committee is this very question which I supposed the gentleman from the District was prepared to discuss, and that is, the question of the proportion of the expenses of this District that should be borne by the United States and the proportion that should be borne by the District.

I regret, therefore, that the gentleman has not submitted to the committee his views upon that question, in his speech for which he had made elaborate preparation. It will be noticed, as has already been stated by the gentleman who reported this bill, that it proposes to raise a tax amounting in all to less than $2,000,000. One footing is $1,800,000 on the basis of an assessment of $90,000,000, and the other is $1,964,000 on a basis of $98,000,000. The only other receipts that are estimated are receipts from licenses, estimated at $175,000; and water rents, estimated at $65,000; making about $2,000,000. Put a tax of 6½ per cent. thereon and you raise only $1,500,000 or a little more, and this bill only provides for a tax of 1½ per cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the expenses of the District, as estimated here, are $2,755,800 for the next fiscal year, and that does not include the interest on the $10,000,000 of 3.65 bonds, as they are called, which the gentleman tells us will be issued, so that interest will have to be paid during the next fiscal year, making the expenses of the District $3,120,800; and we propose to raise here a little more than $1,500,000, perhaps at the outside $1,600,000, leaving $1,500,000, in that event, to be paid by the Government. In other words, it is proposed to assess on the property of the District a sum large enough to pay on the expenses and indebtedness of the District only one-half, leaving to the General Government to pay the other half.

Now, although Congress has endeavored at several times during the short time I have been a member of it to get at some basis of settlement and adjustment of this matter of the burdens of the District, yet we have never had any adjustment of it upon any basis of law, but this proposition certainly anticipates a much larger expenditure on the part of the General Government than, I think, has ever been anticipated before by any Congress. It proposes that the United States Government shall be at one-half of the charge of the current expenses of the District.

Mr. Chairman, it should be borne in mind right in this connection that not only is the Government to do this, but in addition it is to pay all the charges for policing its own public buildings and grounds, to pay for all improvements on its public grounds; and when the sundry civil appropriation bill is brought in here we will find hundreds of thousands of dollars, I have no doubt, provided for in that bill for various matters about this District quite outside of these current expenses, so that if we are called upon to pay $1,600,000 for the current expenses of the District, we shall within the next fiscal year pay much more than $2,000,000 toward the various public institutions and toward the current expenses of the District of Columbia.

Now, sir, it does not seem to me that this is what can fairly be asked or required of the United States. While I do not suppose any gentleman on this floor would object to the Government paying anything like what may be deemed a fair proportion of the expenses of the District, whatever that proportion may be, of the expenses occasioned by reason of the capital being here, yet that it should be called upon to pay one-half or more than one-half of the expenses of the District seems to me to be extraordinary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow me five minutes longer?

Mr. COTTON. I have no objection to allowing the gentleman five minutes longer to enable him to finish his remarks, but under the five-minute rule gentlemen can offer their amendments and discuss them to their satisfaction. I ask that after the gentleman from Vermont shall have concluded his additional five minutes and the Delegate from the District of Columbia has been allowed five minutes to reply, general debate on the bill be closed, and then gentlemen under the five-minute rule can offer their amendments and make explanations of them.

Mr. FORT. I object to that arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COTTON] is entitled to the remainder of his hour, and yields five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD.]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I was about to observe that the rate of taxation provided in this bill, $1.50 on $100 of valuation, is not a high rate. There are many localities in which the people pay a much higher rate of taxation than that. I have paid in my own town in Vermont for several years past a tax as high as three dollar on $100 of valuation, and in many other localities they pay as much.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is that upon the real valuation?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The law of Vermont provides that the tax shall be for the full valuation. I presume that in some cases the valuation does not reach the full amount, but the law of Vermont requires that the tax shall be on the actual valuation of the property. Now, I know that there are other localities where they pay $3.50 on $100 of valuation. Of course every one who has a tax to pay is glad to have the valuation as low as possible, yet inasmuch as the improvements and expenses here are mainly for the benefit of the people of the District, I see no reason why the property of the District should not pay a fair proportion of the burden. As I do not care to occupy the time of the committee further, I merely give notice that when the bill is open to amendment I shall move to make the taxation at the rate of $2.50 on the $100 instead of $1.50.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would ask the gentleman if he will not exclude from that high rate of taxation property outside of the city limits?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RANDALL. That ought to be done.

Mr. COTTON. I now yield for five minutes to the Delegate from the District.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, where there is so much to be said bearing on this question, it will be very difficult to compress it within five minutes; but the committee will be glad to know, I think, that I will endeavor to do it. I think it a great misfortune that the joint committee provided for by the act of June 20, 1874, did not perform that part of the duty assigned them which required them to fix the just proportion of taxation between the United States and the citizens of the District. At least three reports have been made to Congress by various committees, in which it has been shown by elaborate statements and facts that the just proportion to be paid by the Government would be at least one-half. I assume that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] is willing to admit that a proportion of about one-half would be a fair proportion.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. What committee has made that report?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I refer now to a report made by Senator Southard in 1832 and one made by Senator Brown in 1858, both to the Senate; to a report made by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House in the Forty-second Congress, and a report made by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House in the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I beg to inform the gentleman that the Committee on the Judiciary never made any such report.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I am not here to dispute with the gentleman what that committee did. There is a report on the files of this House made by the Judiciary Committee and submitted by Judge POLAND. And the committee, of which the gentleman had the honor of being chairman on the part of the House, made a report upon the subject. While in the latter report it is not stated that the proportion should be one-half, it was intimated that there should be a just proportion of the expenses paid by the United States. In all the other reports the statement was made that a fair proportion would be one-half. Now, assuming that to be the judgment of prior Congresses, and arguing on that basis, I will attempt to answer the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD.]

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Including the items which are now given in the appropriation bills as a deficit, would it not amount to more than one-half?

Mr. CHIPMAN. No. I think it is a mistake to have these various items of appropriation for this purpose. This bill is important in order to rid the sundry civil appropriation bill of all these various items. If the District of Columbia receives benefits from any association, asylum, or other institution to which you appropriate money, we should pay our proportion toward its support, and usually we do it. I think in all cases we pay a proportion of the support of these institutions.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] proposes to move an amendment to increase the rate of taxation to $2.50 upon the hundred. Now, while you may vote any such proposition as that, it will not be possible for you to enforce it. Let me tell you that there are now delinquent taxes in this District, including the last levy of 3 per cent., a sum amounting to over $2,500,000, assuming the figures to be true as stated by the commissioners of the District to this House. In addition to that there are over $3,000,000 due from the people in the nature of special assessments against their property for improvements in front of their property. That makes practically due and delinquent to-day taxes to the amount of over $5,000,000. And of the 3 per cent. tax which you levied upon the cities of Washington and Georgetown there is delinquent over $1,500,000, notwithstanding the penalty you attached, and notwithstanding the inducement you held out in favor of prepayment, to wit, the reduction of 1 per cent. a month.

It is not because our people are unwilling to pay the taxes. I think that as a rule there is no community that pays its taxes more cheerfully than does the community of the District of Columbia. But they are absolutely unable to pay the taxes. We have no revenues here among our people as you have in most of your cities. We have no manufacturing interests. You have declared by the very policy of your Government that we shall have no commercial or manufacturing interests here. Our harbor is neglected. The navy-yard here, which is your own child, is absolutely being throttled because you will not appropriate a little money to clean out the sand in the channel toward the Potomac River.

The policy of the Government is that this shall not be anything but a political residence. Our people are supported mainly in trafficking among themselves in the way of small trade, upon the basis of money paid out in this capital in the way of salaries and other disbursements of Government. And I might name on the fingers of my two hands the business houses in this city that may be said to be making money to-day. We therefore cannot pay anything more than a fair tax based upon the theory upon which this District of Columbia is compelled to exist.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Can the gentleman tell us how much Government money is disbursed in this city in a year?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I cannot tell exactly. I have heard it estimated, and I believe that about $20,000,000 are disbursed in this District annually. It is upon those disbursements, passing from hand to hand, one man purchasing his clothing, another his marketing, and so on, that our people live; except those who come in here temporarily to spend the winter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL and others. Go on.

Mr. COTTON. I will yield three minutes longer to the gentleman.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I am obliged to the gentleman for his courtesy.

The proposition made by the committee is to levy a tax of 1½ per cent. uniformly over the District. The practical question is, what will that yield? We propose to tax personal property in this District, which will add to the assessable property $11,000,000, upon the basis of the tax upon personal property in 1871. I suppose the amount is now much larger; I suppose we may estimate there will be $15,000,000 of personal property liable to taxation under this bill. Assuming that we will have $15,000,000 of personal property to be taxed, and that the real estate will be reduced under this bill, as I think it ought to be, to $90,000,000, we then have a basis of assessment for revenue of $105,000,000, upon which a tax of $1.50 per each hundred dollars is to be levied. In addition to that, we have revenue from licenses, from fines, and other sources amounting I should think to about $250,000. So that I think I can state with confidence that the bill as now reported will yield in round numbers a revenue of $1,750,000—certainly over $1,500,000, making all allowance for every conceivable dropping off in every conceivable direction.

Now, what is the entire estimate, including interest on all the bonded debt, the 3.65 and every other class of indebtedness, and all possible expenditures? The estimate is $3,120,800. It will be seen, therefore, that a tax of $1.50 on $100 will, together with our other revenues, produce a revenue of more than one-half the amount necessary to sustain this District and maintain the improvements here during the next fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. That does not include, I presume, the appropriations for the District in the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio, I will say that there are some items in the appropriations of Congress that should be considered in relation to this matter. For example, you appropriate for the Metropolitan police and for the fire department under separate laws.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. How about the lunatic asylum?

Mr. CHIPMAN. The insane institution is no more to be supported by taxation from the District of Columbia than the Treasury Department. We ought never to be called upon to pay any proportion of the appropriations necessary for that institution, as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] will readily explain to the gentleman. That asylum is an institution for the support of which, like the Soldier's Home, we ought never to be called upon to contribute.

I think I have demonstrated that the people of this District cannot pay a greater tax than that now proposed, if you are to rely on anything like prompt payment. You may get possession of the property of the people of the District under the marshal's hammer, but you cannot force people to pay what they have not got.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The gentleman has said that the people of the District should not contribute to the support of the insane asylum. I ask him whether that institution does not accommodate the insane of the District?

Mr. CHIPMAN. O, yes. But that institution maintains insane from your State and others as well as from this District.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. We take care of our own insane in Ohio.

Mr. CHIPMAN. This is a Government institution, and mainly for the support, I believe, of the insane of the Army and Navy.

Mr. DAWES. It is for the support of the insane of the Army and Navy and also of the indigent insane of the District. Those who are able to do so pay for their support.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COTTON. The main question, I suppose, in connection with this bill is as to the rate of taxation. That question will properly come up when the section fixing the rate of taxation is read for amendment. Gentlemen can then make their five-minute speeches upon amendments. I hope that now general debate on the bill will be closed by unanimous consent, and that we may proceed to have the bill read by sections. I make that request.

Mr. FORT. At some stage in the consideration of this bill I should like to occupy about three minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can take the floor now in his own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] will be entitled to the floor at any time when it may be yielded to him by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. COTTON,] or at the expiration of that gentleman's hour.

Mr. COTTON. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, provided it be now understood that general debate shall be closed when he has concluded his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair heard no objection to the proposition except that of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COTTON. Then with that understanding I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have not the slightest unfriendly feeling toward the District of Columbia or Washington City or a single one of its inhabitants; but it has always seemed to me proper that the people residing in this District and enjoying all the comforts and privileges of the city should pay some tax upon their personal property.

I do not believe and never have believed that all the taxation to support this city and District should be paid by the people resident here. The Government, having established its capital here and having immense property here, ought properly to pay a large portion—at least a considerable portion of the expenses of the District. But it has occurred to some that the affairs of this District have been so managed, without any view to economy, that vast sums of the people's money have been expended here in making improvements which properly ought not to have been made. Paved streets have been extended into corn-fields; and for these improvements the people residing here do not pay the taxes, nor do the people who own the land through which the improvements have been made; but the tax is paid by the people of my district and the districts of other gentlemen on this floor. As I understand the present indebtedness of this city, the people of my district will have to pay $65,000 to relieve that indebtedness. They have a right to know why all this expenditure has been made, and I have an idea that one great reason why this extravagant outlay has been made is because people here who manage the affairs of this city have themselves paid but very little tax.

In my judgment the per cent. of taxation proposed in this bill ought to be increased. The gentleman from this District [Mr. CHIPMAN] has resided so long in this paradise where comparatively no taxes are paid that he thinks the people cannot pay 2½ per cent. The town in which I reside pays more than that percentage for school tax alone; and I think that on the average the people of the United States generally do the same. Yet the gentleman representing this District is not willing the people here shall pay a tax of 2½ per cent. for all the advantages which they enjoy. There is something strange about this.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I do not know how it is in the gentleman's State, but in most of the States the assessment is greatly below the actual value. Here, however, it is thought by the best informed to be almost up to the real value of the property.

Mr. FORT. I am speaking of school taxes alone. When it comes to speak of all manner of taxation, the average in the States of the West amounts to 5 or 6 per cent. of the assessed value. But I must hasten on as my time is brief.

The gentleman from Iowa has told us that they cannot here collect the enormous taxes imposed; that they are in default already to the extent of millions. This seems to me to be somewhat strange. Cannot the law be enforced here as elsewhere in the United States? Is it that the people do not wish to pay a dollar toward the support of their local government? I do not wish to saddle upon them too much taxation. I wish the Government to pay some of the amount necessary for carrying on the Government here, but I do not think the Government should pay it all.

This bill also proposes to impose a tax upon church property. I am not here as the champion of any church, or of the churches generally, but I do not believe in the policy of taxing church property. Churches here as elsewhere have been erected in obedience to Christian duty. When you allow church property to be taxed, as a matter of course, if there should be any delinquency in the payment of such taxation, that property set apart for religious purposes would be subject to levy and sale under execution for debt. I do not believe any gentleman here desires to see any such thing in this District. I do not suppose anybody here would look to see churches, built by those who have gone before us, sold for taxes. It may be that in some States church property is taxed; I do not know how that is; but it occurs to me the people of the United States would be willing to pay the proportion of taxes due from this church property. I care not whether the church property belongs to Catholics or Baptists, Methodists or Presbyterians, or to whatever religious denomination it may belong, it seems to me such property should be exempt from taxation. These are public institutions and exercise a good influence upon society. In my judgment it is bad policy to tax them at all.

Now this bill provides, as I understand it, for taxing all Government property except its money or bullion, or the notes belonging to the United States.

Mr. CHIPMAN. O, no.

Mr. FORT. If I am mistaken, I am happy to know it.

Mr. CHIPMAN. An amendment has been put into the bill covering that point.

Mr. FORT. The committee have come in here with a substitute, of which we have not a printed copy upon our tables.

Mr. CHIPMAN. O, yes; you have a printed copy.

Mr. RANDALL. No, there is no printed copy as the bill is presented.

Mr. CHIPMAN. It is the same bill with the exception that we have struck out some exemptions. The bill before the House is severer in its provisions than the printed one. It was an oversight these things were included in the printed bill.

Mr. FORT. I am glad to know the property of the Government has been exempted from taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, there shall be levied upon all real and personal property in said District, excepting only that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50 on each $100.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by adding the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the assessment and tax levied shall not be held to apply to any property real or personal owned by the United States.

Mr. COTTON. We have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to add as follows.

The Clerk read as follows:

And all property owned and used for church or charitable purposes shall be exempt from any such taxes.

Mr. FORT. That should come in in the eighth section.

Mr. RANDALL. I will reserve it then till we reach that section.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall detail a board of three officers of the Treasury, who shall make a careful estimate of the value of real estate owned by the United States in the District of Columbia, said estimate to be made as nearly as practicable on the same scale of valuation as on private property in the District, with a view to enable Congress to determine what share of the expenses of the said District the United States should pay.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say the thing most to be done to enable Congress to act intelligently in regard to its relation to the District of Columbia is that we should have some gauge by which to measure our obligations. We have never had that; and any man who has studied the subject of making appropriations out of the general Treasury for the District of Columbia has found that difficulty at every turn of the tide—at every step. There are and always have been differences of judgment about how much the United States ought to pay; what per cent. What I propose is that there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury from his own officers a board, who shall make a careful estimate of the value of property of the United States and report to Congress, so we may know where we are levying taxes in this District and making appropriations out of our own Treasury, by actual comparison of values, what proportion we should pay of the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to modify his amendment so that it shall not appear that the real estate belonging to the United States to be appraised includes the streets and avenues.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say "exclusive of streets and avenues."

Mr. DAWES. I make the suggestion because this District has been in the habit of appraising the streets and avenues as if they were building lots.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be modified in the way suggested.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the idea of a board of valuation obtaining in any such way a value of this kind is a mere delusion. There is property of the United States existing in public buildings like the Capitol, the Treasury, and the White House that are not to be rented; that have no value for any commercial or business purpose. Their value largely consists in the ornaments of architecture. Now it would not be just to the United States to take the $13,000,000 which this Capitol cost as a basis for taxation in the District. Then suppose you take the real estate which the United States owns and occupies by these public buildings, is that to be valued as at the time when the United States took possession of it? We took a square and put the United States Treasury, the Post-Office, or the Patent-Office upon it. That act confers whatever of value there is upon all the real estate in the neighborhood. Take away the property of the United States from that real estate, and the value of the entire city disappears.

It is just, undoubtedly, that Congress should pay a considerable share of the expenses of this District. And it is undoubtedly a question of great difficulty to determine what that just share is. But an attempt to get at it by having a board of officers to value the Capitol, Treasury, White House, Patent Office, &c., it seems to me would lead to endless difficulty and result in no practical good.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman suggest by what possible way we can arrive at it?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I am merely stating that in this way we cannot arrive at it.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is not enough unless you show a better way.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to say just one word in answer to the gentleman from Ohio. It seems to me that when we are desirous of arriving at a particular spot, and the gentleman from Ohio is asking us to go there under his lead by a particular road, if I point out that that road does not lead there, it is no answer for him to say, you must go that road unless you show me a better one.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman has shown that it is a difficult thing to come at; that is all.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. What I say is that it does not help us the least in the world, to determine what is the just share of the United States in the expenses of the District, to have a board of three arbitrators to value the Capitol, the White House, the Treasury building, &c. There is no value in them, either in the buildings or the land they stand on, for any commercial or business purpose whatever. To make such a valuation then, for such a purpose, is a delusion.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is the only standard we have for adjusting the Federal payments and the District payments.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a practical suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the committee. This Congress provided a joint committee to report, on this very subject. They failed to do it, but they stated in their report, which is before the House, the reason why they did not do it. And it is this: That upon their view of what ought to be done here, it is the duty of Congress to levy upon the property of this District belonging to private citizens what that property ought fairly and justly to pay for the benefits of local government, and that the Government should appropriate all that is necessary for the management of affairs in this District, because the United States are directly responsible for the legislation for the District. That is the theory of the Morrill bill, so called, which I am informed has been tabled in the Senate, which I fear is likely to be the fate of all efforts to give us a local government at this session. I think that is the just principle upon which this question ought to be settled.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] that the only gauge we have ever had thus far, by which we have attempted to adjust the fair proportion of the Federal payments and the District payments, has been the supposed relative value of the property of the people of this District on the one hand, and of the property of the United States in the District on the other hand.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him by a suggestion? In the bill we passed last winter, providing for the payment of the interest on the 3.65 bonds, we did not provide that it should be paid by the Government in proportion to the property it owned in the District.

Mr. RANDALL. We provided that the amount should come back to the Government.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not remember what the exact language was, but I know that in all our legislation in this matter, running through several years, we have attempted to base the relative payments of the District and the United States Treasury upon the supposed relation of the value of the property held by private citizens and by the Government in this District.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Suppose we should pull down the Post-Office building this year and put up a new one costing $5,000,000, would the gentleman from Ohio hold that the United States should pay taxes on $5,000,000 more of property in the District?

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, now, I simply say to the gentleman that I do not propose in this amendment to bind the United States to pay anything. I simply want something that shall help to inform the judgment of Congress on the question. It has been assumed hitherto for years, and all our legislation on the subject has gone on that assumption, that about four-tenths of the property of the District belonged to the United States and six-tenths was the property of private citizens. Now, if that be a fair proportion, that would be a fair guide for us to go by; but I take it that we can come in some reasonable, correct way by approximation at the proportion. How do boards of assessors estimate the value of property? Why, by the price for which it would sell for the purposes for which it was intended. Now, suppose you had no Capitol building, how much it would cost us to produce a Capitol building by purchase or construction would be a guide to us. That would be a fair ground in estimating the value of the property.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How would you estimate the value of the public parks?

Mr. GARFIELD. Just precisely as such property is estimated wherever it exists.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. As building lots?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not care in what way. I have already stated that it is a crude way; but it is the only way I know of by which we can get at some ratio of the proportion of the property owned by the Government and the citizens.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CHIPMAN. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio:

Add as follows:

And such small public parks as ought in their judgment to be maintained at the joint expense of the private and public property within the District.

I offer that to come in after the exception the gentleman has made in his amendment. He has already excepted public streets and avenues.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to oppose the amendment. I am opposed to both of these amendments. In the first place, the amendment last submitted contains an admission or recognition that the Government is liable and ought to pay for the privilege of furnishing and keeping up and guarding parks free of cost to the people of this city. Other cities furnish their own parks, and pay for them without aid from Congress. I know no reason why this city should not do the same, but it does not. Now it is a most marvelous thing that the Government of the United States should be taxed because it chooses to furnish free parks to the people here for their comfort and enjoyment and to ornament the city. No city in the Union has been so lightly taxed as this. No one has received so many favors from the Government. It is popular here to vote money out of the Treasury for the benefit of the people here. Plausible reasons are urged in favor of it. It is an unpleasant duty to resist the appeals that are made to us and to encounter the displeasure of those who make them. The owners of houses and lots here of course would find it much easier to let the Government pay largely the expenses of the District than to pay them by taxation.

Mr. BRADLEY. I think the gentleman is in error regarding the effect of my amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I cannot yield for interruption now, as I am limited to five minutes. I am equally opposed to the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD.] I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is no fair test in apportioning the tax between the people of this District and the Government to make an appraisal on the value of the Government property. A part of the expense which is to be apportioned between the Government and the people of the District consists in the cost of constructing wood pavements on the streets and avenues of the city. Suppose the Government owns buildings and a wood pavement is to be made for half a mile along them, and the citizens of this District own buildings and half a mile of wood pavement is to be made along them; the expense of the one half-mile and of the other will or may be exactly equal. Upon the ground owned by the Government there may be buildings which may be in value worth many, many millions of dollars, while the private dwellings along the street in front of them will be comparatively of but small value. But in such a case as that, if we assume that the Government should pay for wood pavements in front of its buildings, it should not pay more for a given amount of pavement than citizens for the same amount, simply because it has put on its ground buildings which are very valuable and expensive. The cost or value of the buildings does not affect or add to the cost of the pavement or furnish any reason why the Government should pay more than citizens for the same work. This plan of assessing by the value of the property is plausible, but it is deceptive and unjust. Citizens are not assessed according to the value of the houses they have erected. They are assessed for the cost of the work done in front of their grounds, whether they have buildings or not. They are assessed with a view to the benefits they derive. Why should the Government be treated differently? Congress is the guardian of its interests, and should take care of them; for if we do not, our constituents will be taxed for the benefit of the people here. I have no feeling certainly against the citizens of this District. I am willing to do them justice; but I want justice done to the citizens of the whole country as well.

This is the only city in the United States where the Government is called upon to pay any tax at all for its public buildings. We pay no tax on our public buildings in New York, Philadelphia, or any other city of the Union. There is no city so highly favored as this. The Government furnishes courts to the people of the District and pays the salaries of their judges. It furnishes them with a jail and pays the expense of keeping it and the prisoners therein confined. It pays for the whole expense of the administration of justice. Only a few days since money was appropriated from the Treasury to erect a school building in this District. The Government pays for the support of the benevolent institutions, the insane asylum, and generally everything relating to benevolent institutions in the District.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Do they not do that everywhere else?

Mr. LAWRENCE. In my State the people are taxed to support their own jails, courts, asylums, and all that; and I do not want them taxed besides for the support of all these here while the people here escape taxation anywhere.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there ought to be some apportionment, I know, between the United States and the citizens of this District for the improvements which have been made; but the value of the property owned by the Government and that owned by the citizens is no just mode of making that apportionment. Personal property in this city escapes all taxation. Is this just? Our constituents do not know all that is done here. This plan of piling burdens on them may escape notice for a time, but there ought to be and I hope will be an end to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to strike out the last word of the original text, in order to have an opportunity to say a few words.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is this amendment germane? Is it in order at all?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide that question at the proper time.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Has the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] exempting church property from taxation been adopted?

Mr. RANDALL. I have withdrawn that amendment for the present.

Mr. BRADLEY. If I understand the matter aright, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] accepted a modification suggested by some other gentleman, and therefore it became a part of his amendment. I have moved an amendment in addition to the amendment so modified.

I agree with what has been said regarding the necessity of having some estimate of the value of the public property in this city, and that it should be put in some form to be laid upon the desks of members, so that they may know the relative value of the public property as compared with that of private property. From day to day we are called upon here to vote upon propositions making appropriations for the benefit of the District and of the institutions within the District; and as yet there has been no information placed before members upon which they can predicate a calculation as to how much money this Congress ought to appropriate in order to arrive at something like the true proportion of the expenses of this District that ought to be borne by the Government of the United States.

I entirely agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the amendment which he has sent up should be incorporated into this bill, in order to obtain this estimate, and that in making the estimate the public streets and avenues should be excluded. And I also believe that there are certain small parks in this city that inure to the benefit of the whole city, such as any village or city throughout the country would maintain, which ought also to be excluded. I do not mean by this that we ought to exclude the large public parks that have been laid out and improved.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Allow me to make a suggestion which I think will be in furtherance of the gentleman's argument. It is that these little three-cornered parks scattered over this city are really made out of the streets and avenues of the city; and therefore the suggestion of the gentleman to exclude them is very proper.

Mr. BRADLEY. Some of them may be in that situation; but I apprehend that there are some others not so situated. Therefore I have offered the amendment that such small parks as, in the judgment of these commissioners, ought to be included in the streets shall also be excluded from the estimate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. The question of the proper amount to be paid by the General Government of the expense of maintaining the government of this District I admit is a very difficult one. It occurs to me, however, that there is a solution of this question, and that, too, in a different direction from that proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BRADLEY.] The question is somewhat complicated by reference to the immense value of the improvements upon the public property.

In the very nature of things those improvements must be of great value; they are made by the General Government for the benefit of the whole country. They must be permanent, and fire-proof, and valuable, and only valuable for a specific purpose. Let me suggest, as has been already suggested, that those improvements have no market value.

But let me suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that it will be very easy for us to arrive at the average rate of taxation in cities of this size throughout the country. Then we can levy that rate of taxation, whatever it may be, whether 1½ per cent., or 1 per cent., or 3 or 2 per cent., or any other rate, upon the property in this District; whatever is the fair average throughout the country of cities of this size could be levied upon the real and personal estate of residents of this city. And then the Government of the United States should pay whatever deficit there might be in the expenses of the government of this District, for we are responsible for the government of the District and for the maintenance of the improvements needed in the District. If we are responsible for the government of the District and for the expenditure of money, it would be proper for us to put Government officers in charge of the supervision of the expenditure of this money.

By adopting this plan, levying here the average rate of taxation of cities of this size throughout the country, we will do no injustice to the citizens of this District; we will do no injustice to private property in this District; for we will put it and them upon the same basis as in other cities of like size. We will put the citizens here upon the ground of equality with citizens of other cities of this size. And then whatever deficit there may be will be a proper charge against the Government of the United States. By this means we will get rid of this troublesome and perplexing question of comparison of value. By this means we will not only do justice to the people here, but also preserve the question of assessing property in our own hands, to be controlled by ourselves, and we can then strike a fair, reasonable, and just proportion of the expenses to be borne by the citizens of the District and by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BRADLEY. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BRADLEY to the amendment of Mr. GARFIELD; and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. GARFIELD; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. COTTON. I desire to submit a proposition to the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. COTTON.]

Mr. COTTON. The hour of half past four has now arrived, at which time it was understood an announcement was to be made to the House of the death of one of its members. I desire to procure the passage of this bill at an early day. I propose, therefore, to the Committee of the Whole to rise and report this bill to the House, with the amendments which have been agreed to. In the House I will permit gentlemen to offer amendments, and then I will ask to have the previous question seconded, after giving to every man a fair opportunity to propose his amendments.

Mr. SENER. No such agreement can be made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. The House will have to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. As long as gentlemen desire to offer amendments the Chair cannot entertain a motion that the committee rise and report the bill.

Mr. SMALL. I move to amend by adding to the first section of the bill the following:

Personal property for purposes of taxation shall include goods, chattels, and effects wherever they are; money at interest and other debts due to the persons to be taxed more than they owe interest for; public stocks and securities; stocks in moneyed and other dividend-paying corporations.

Mr. FORT. That ought to come in after section 8.

Mr. SMALL. I offer this amendment because it nowhere appears in the bill what the term personal property covers. Hence I think there may arise some difficulty in the construction of the law. Therefore I propose to insert this definition of the term personal property. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COTTON] will assent to it.

Mr. PELHAM. Wherein does the definition of personal property as given by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SMALL] differ from that of Mr. Justice Blackstone?

Mr. COTTON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TYNER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4728) for the support of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COTTON. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of fixing Wednesday evening next for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Wednesday evening is already assigned.

Mr. COTTON. Then I will say Friday evening for the consideration of this bill and other District business.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to the consideration of other District business.

Mr. ELDREDGE. There are some other important bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia; and we might possibly get through with some of them on that evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COTTON] can submit his motion in whatever form he desires.

Mr. COTTON. I move then to suspend the rules so as to order that the House meet on Friday evening next at half past seven o'clock for the consideration of this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and when this is concluded of any other District business. We have some very important bills which have been recommended by the commissioners of the District.

The SPEAKER. This order would not suspend the rules upon any bill containing an appropriation.

The motion of Mr. COTTON to suspend the rules, being seconded, was then agreed to; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

SESSION FOR PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. To-morrow evening was by order of the House assigned for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions; but in consequence of a melancholy event known to members the House will adjourn at two o'clock to-morrow. The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. RUSK, chairman of the committee on Invalid Pensions, asks, therefore, that Thursday evening be assigned for the consideration of reports from that committee as in Committee of the Whole, no other business to be transacted.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. STANARD. I move that the rules be suspended for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved That the rules be suspended so that the substitute for House bill No. 4620, for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, shall be made a special order for consideration in the House, to the exclusion of all other business, on Thursday, the 18th of February, 1875, at the hour of two o'clock p. m.; and that the previous question be called on the same at four o'clock on the same day.

Mr. DAWES. I trust that the House will not agree to this proposition. With so many appropriation bills pending and the revenue bill not yet disposed of, I hope the House will not undertake to assign in this way all its working time. I submit that the gentleman ought not to ask the House to tie its hands in this manner.

Mr. GARFIELD. All the evenings of this week are assigned by the action of the House.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; that is true.

Mr. STANARD. I have been unanimously instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask a suspension of the rules so that this bill may have two hours only for its consideration.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were ayes 82, noes not counted.

Mr. G. F. HOAR called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. G. F. HOAR and Mr. STANARD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 114, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. DAWES. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the motion. I will not object to the consideration of this bill if the gentleman will wait until those other bills I have mentioned are disposed of.

Mr. STANARD. You have had nearly two months to report those bills.

Mr. DAWES. Not any longer than you have had to report your bills.

Mr. STANARD. This is simply a business proposition—one of the first business propositions that has been brought before this House.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 23, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair there are not sufficient to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAWES. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question being taken on suspending the rules to adopt the resolution of Mr. STANARD, it was agreed to; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army be taken from the Speaker's table, disagreed to, and a conference with the Senate asked upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

DEATH OF HON. SAMUEL HOOPER.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, the mournful duty devolves upon me to make the formal announcement of the death of my colleague, SAMUEL HOOPER, the Representative of the fourth district of Massachusetts. He died of pneumonia, in his house in this city, at a few minutes after nine o'clock yesterday morning. He was in his seat in the House on Friday, the 5th instant, and on the evening of that day, feeling quite unwell, left the table at which he was dining with a company of friends at an early hour and retired to the bed from which he was never more to rise. His disease gained rapid ascendancy over his failing strength, and with little suffering he passed into a state of unconsciousness, in which, attended by the loving care of near kindred, his life at last closed peacefully and without a struggle.

In expression of the feelings of respect and esteem which we all feel for our departed friend I move the resolutions which I will send to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of seven members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to take order for superintending the funeral of SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of this body, which will take place to-morrow, Tuesday, at two o'clock p. m., and the House will attend the same.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these proceedings to the Senate and invite the Senate to attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at two o'clock.

Resolved, As an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair names the following as the members of the committee called for by the resolutions just adopted: Mr. POLAND of Vermont, Mr. WHEELER of New York, Mr. NIBLACK of Indiana, Mr. MAYNARD of Tennessee, Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania, Mr. LAMAR of Mississippi, and Mr. HOUGHTON of California.

Accordingly (at ten minutes to five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned till eleven o'clock to-morrow.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ARMSTRONG: Memorial of the Legislature of Dakota, praying for the division of Dakota and the organization of a new Territory from the northern portion thereof, to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of Dakota Territory, for an additional appropriation for the military wagon-road from the Big Sioux River to Fort Randall, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BRADLEY: Petitions of citizens of Au Sable, East Saginaw, and Bay City, Michigan, for an appropriation to construct a harbor of refuge at Au Sable, in the State of Michigan, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts: The petition of citizens of Gloucester, Massachusetts, for the donation of six bronze field-guns for monumental purposes, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Caleb Tompkins, of Cartersville, Georgia, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CAIN: The petition of depositors in the Freedman's Savings-Bank at Norfolk, Virginia, for relief, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. COBURN: The petition of citizens of New Jersey, for equalization of bounties, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRITTENDEN: Resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri, protesting against the further increase of the tax upon tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DARRALL: Papers relating to the claim of Edmond A. Guilbeau, of La Fayette Parish, Louisiana, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of André Broussard, of La Fayette Parish, Louisiana, to the same committee.

By Mr. FORT: The petition of M. H. Peters and 27 others, of Watseka, Illinois, for an appropriation to complete the Washington monument, to the Select Committee on the Washington National Monument.

By Mr. FRYE: The petition of citizens of Kingfield, Franklin County, Maine, for a pension to Benjamin C. Webster, late private Company F, Eighth Maine Volunteers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HANCOCK: The memorial of Eugene Armendiaz and others, praying for the right to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River at Brownsville, Texas, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey: The petition of citizens of Bridgeton, New Jersey, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of citizens of Munising, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. HUNTER: The petition of citizens of Monroe County, Indiana, for legislation to prevent the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors within the United States, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of William Orndoff, of Winchester, Virginia, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of several hundred citizens of Philadelphia, artisans, manufacturers, and workers in iron and coal, representing that the stoppage of great works of improvement and general depression of business have greatly lessened the demand for labor, and praying Congress under proper guarantees to extend the national credit to the completion of a great southern line to the Pacific, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: The petition of Belva A. Lockwood and others, of the District of Columbia, for extension of suffrage in the District without regard to sex, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MACDOUGALL: The petition of Hugo Hillebrandt, late major Thirty-ninth New York Volunteers, for arrears of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARSHALL: The petition of citizens of Hardin County, Illinois, for an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Ohio River, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a paper for the establishment of a post-route from Equality to Elizabethtown, in the State of Illinois, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MERRIAM: The petition of citizens of Little Falls, New York, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. NIBLACK: The remonstrance of wholesale liquor dealers and rectifiers of Evansville, Indiana, against any increase in the tax on whisky on hand, to the same committee.

By Mr. PARSONS: The remonstrance of tobacco manufacturers and dealers in Cleveland, Ohio, against a further increase of the tax on tobacco, to the same committee.

By Mr. PERRY: The remonstrance of tobacco manufacturers and dealers in Albany, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. PARKER, of Missouri: The petition of Mrs. M. L. Connelly, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, administratrix of Thomas Connelly, deceased, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: Resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, memorializing Congress to grant the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad right of way through the Indian Territory to Fort Smith, in Arkansas, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of citizens of Yadkin and Forsyth Counties, North Carolina, for a post-route from East Bend to Bethania, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio: The petition of citizens of Mount Gilead, Ohio, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina: Resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, concerning the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, concerning pensions to survivors of the Mexican war, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, concerning tax levied and collected on spirits of turpentine, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, concerning the New River Canal, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, for an appropriation to improve the Neuse River, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, for an appropriation to improve Edenton Harbor, to the same committee.

By Mr. STARKWEATHER: The petition of citizens of Ledyard, Connecticut, for a donation of condemned cannon for a soldiers' monument, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STONE: Resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, protesting against the further increase of the tax on tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of the Union Merchants' Exchange of the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, for the location of a branch mint at Saint Louis, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. SWANN: Remonstrance of wholesale liquor dealers and rectifiers of Baltimore, Maryland, against any increase in the tax on whisky on hand, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. THOMPSON: Petitions of citizens of Freeport, Armstrong County, and of Etna, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the same committee.

By Mr. WARD, of New Jersey: The petition of Charles E. Boggs, to be restored to his proper place upon the active list of the Navy, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WELLS: Resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri, protesting against a further increase of the tax on tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of the Union Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, for a branch mint at Saint Louis, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WHITEHEAD: Remonstrance of the Tobacco Association of Liberty, Virginia, against a further increase of the tax on tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, two petitions of citizens of Botetourt County, Virginia, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 16, 1875.

Prayer by Rev. EDWARD PAYSON INGERSOLL, D. D., of Brooklyn, New York.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in obedience to law, a copy of the report of Major F. W. Farquhar, Corps of Engineers, upon the examination of sites for reservoirs at the head-waters of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3341) to equalize the bounties to soldiers who served in the late war for the Union was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented the credentials of Hon. Algernon S. Paddock, chosen by the Legislature of Nebraska a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4001) to provide for the redemption of overdue bonds of the United States known as Texas indemnity bonds; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4727) explanatory of the act passed June 20, 1874.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2102) to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCREERY presented a petition of physicians of Kentucky, in behalf of the Medical Corps of the Army, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of that corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DENNIS presented a memorial of 291 business men of Washington, District of Columbia, and a memorial of 197 citizens of the District of Columbia, respectfully protesting against the passage of that part of the Morrill bill which refers to a municipal court, and chapter 13, sections 79 to 92, which provides for the abolition of justices of the peace in the District; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of W. H. Schieffelin & Co. and 8 other manufacturers, importers, and retail dealers in drugs, perfumery, &c., in the city of New York, praying for the repeal of certain stamp tax on drugs and perfumery contained in Schedule C; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented a memorial of Moses Whitson and others, citizens of Washington County, Maryland, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee and praying for the repeal of the law which reduced the duties on certain foreign goods 10 per cent.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOGY presented a memorial of druggists, manufacturers, and importers of drugs of the city of New York, praying for the repeal of certain stamp tax on drugs and perfumery contained in Schedule C; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEVENSON presented a memorial of D. Hillman, John Morrison, and divers other citizens of Trigg County, Kentucky, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee, the revival of internal taxes, and asking the repeal of the act of 1872 reducing the duties on certain imports 10 per cent.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of a number of dealers in tobacco, of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against any advance in the existing rate of tax on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRATT. I present a petition of sundry manufacturers of and wholesale and retail dealers in drugs, perfumery, proprietary medicines, and fancy goods, asking Congress to repeal that part of the internal-revenue laws known as Schedule C, by which a tax payable in stamps is imposed upon these articles. They say in conclusion that the law by which this tax is imposed is unjust and vexatious in execution, unclear in its provisions, and arbitrary in its interpretation, an obstacle to trade and a stumbling-block to the dealer, and a cause of wide spread and constantly increasing discontent and unpopularity. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a memorial signed by J. L. Aburnethy, of the city of Leavenworth, and various other citizens of that town, asking for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3656) incorporating the Eastern and Western Transportation Company. This memorial recites that "the importance of this enterprise is at once apparent to all who realize the prostrate condition of the agricultural interests of the West and South, and the cause is mainly to be ascribed to the reckless and extravagant manner of transporting the staple crops of the country to market, and the absence of creditable local governments in several of our most productive States." I cannot allow, Mr. President, an expression so unjust as that to pass unchallenged, even by my silence in the matter. I know of no State, productive or otherwise, that is distinguished by the "absence of a creditable local government." I move that the memorial be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT presented three petitions of citizens of Iowa, praying for the establishment of a mail-route from the town of Boone, in Boone County, to Webster, in Hamilton County, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Story County, Iowa, praying for the establishment of a mail-route from Nevada, in that county, to the center of Lincoln Township, in that county, the establishment of a post-office at or near the center of Lincoln Township, and the appointment of a postmaster at that place; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAMERON presented two petitions of citizens of Columbia, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, praying that in consequence of the prevailing prostration of all branches of business and the increasing distress throughout the country a bill be passed in aid of the speedy completion of the Texas Pacific Railroad now pending before Congress; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, in favor of the passage of the bill disposing of the Fort Kearney military reservation in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1240) to extend the time within which the board of audit for the District of Columbia may receive, audit, and allow certain claims that have never been presented to said board, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2279) for the relief of Richard Hawley & Sons, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Belva A. Lockwood, praying that any woman otherwise qualified shall be permitted to practice law in any United States court, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4441) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Greenbaum, president of the German Savings Bank of Chicago, Illinois, praying that a certain amount of taxes alleged to have been improperly collected on deposits may be refunded, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2073) restricting the refunding of custom duties and prescribing certain regulations of the Treasury Department, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Hilben & Co., praying to be refunded taxes twice paid, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress to pass a bill granting one hundred and sixty acres of Government land to soldiers and sailors of the late war without regard to occupation, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3923) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain condemned ordnance to the Joseph Warren Monument Association of Boston, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2911) to adjust costs, fees, and allowances in Federal courts, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Pottawatomie Indians, praying for payment of the award of commissioners under the treaty of August 7, 1863, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was recommended the bill (S. No. 1201) to establish certain telegraphic lines in the several States and Territories as post-roads, and to regulate the transmission of commercial and other intelligence by telegraph from one State to another, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3182) for the relief of the heirs of James Barnett, deceased, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel J. Beachley, praying for pay as United States surgeon and for repayment of moneys expended in Government service in 1864, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of G. H. Bernhardt, praying compensation for subsistence and lodging furnished to recruits for "Scott's Nine Hundred" cavalry and reimbursement for money expended in recruiting men for the United States Army, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the memorial of W. C. Kibbe upon the importance of constructing a double-track freight-railway, under Government auspices and control, from tide-water on the Atlantic to the Missouri River, as proposed by House bill No. 1194, as amended, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1185) for the relief of F. V. Hayden, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3208) for the relief of John Henderson, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Lake, praying compensation in the sum of $35,000 for damages alleged to have been inflicted by Willie P. Mangum, late consul to Japan, and Charles E. De Long, late minister to Japan, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

DISTRICT CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, which was instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire and report into the extent and meaning of the act of the 22d of June, 1874, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," &c., to return that resolution with a report, which, as it is not very long, I ask may be read, as it is on an interesting subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary respectfully report that on the 15th of December, 1874, the Senate adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the extent and meaning of the act of June 22, 1874, entitled 'An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' and particularly whether under or by its provisions persons charged with or indicted for libel or other crime in the said District of Columbia can be brought from a State or other place within Federal jurisdiction to said District to answer therefor; and also whether said act has any application to prosecution or indictment for the crime of libel in any case, and report thereon."

In obedience to this resolution the committee have carefully examined the subject.

The act of June 22, 1874, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," is in the following words:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the criminal court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of all crimes and misdemeanors committed in said District not lawfully triable in any other court, and which are required by law to be prosecuted by indictment or information.

"Sec. 2. That the provisions of the thirty-third section of the judiciary act of 1789 shall apply to courts created by act of Congress in the District of Columbia."

It having been considered that the provision in the act of June 17, 1870, establishing a police court in the District of Columbia, which conferred exclusive jurisdiction upon it of "all offenses against the United States not deemed capital or otherwise infamous," and which did not provide for trials by jury, were in violation of that clause in the Constitution which declares that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury," the first section of the act above quoted was passed in order to prevent a failure of justice in respect of a large class of crimes committed in the District, by giving the criminal court, with its jury, jurisdiction of such of them as under the Constitution could not, for the reason already stated, lawfully be tried in the police court.

By the second and only other part of the act in question it is declared "that the provisions of the thirty-third section of the judiciary act of 1789 shall apply to courts created by act of Congress in the District of Columbia."

The thirty-third section of the act of 1789, referred to, is in the following words:

"And be it further enacted, That for any crime or offense against the United States the offender may, by any justice or judge of the United States, or by any justice of the peace, or other magistrate of any of the United States where he may be found, agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State, and at the expense of the United States, be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by this act has cognizance of the offense. And copies of the process shall be returned as speedily as may be into the clerk's office of such court, together with the recognizances of the witnesses for their appearance to testify in the case; which recognizances the magistrate before whom the examination shall be may require on pain of imprisonment; and if such commitment of the offender or the witnesses shall be in a district other than that in which the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of that district where the delinquent is imprisoned seasonably to issue, and of the marshal of the same district to execute, a warrant for the removal of the offender and the witnesses, or either of them, as the case may be, to the district in which the trial is to be had. And upon all arrests in criminal cases, bail shall be admitted, except when the punishment may be death, in which case it shall not be admitted but by the Supreme or a circuit court, or by a justice of the Supreme Court, or a judge of a district court, who shall exercise their discretion therein regarding the nature and circumstances of the offense, and of the evidence and the usages of law. And if a person committed by a justice of the Supreme or a judge of a district court for an offense not punishable with death shall afterward procure bail, and there be no judge of the United States in the district to take the same, it may be taken by any judge of the Supreme or superior court of law of such State."

As the act of June 22, 1874, mentioned in the resolution of the Senate, only extended to the courts of the District of Columbia the provisions of the section just quoted, it follows that the inquiry is reduced to the simple question, what are the provisions of that section, which has been the law of the land for more than eighty years?

They are simple and clear.

First. The crime or offense upon which the section acts must be one against the United States.

Second. The offender can only be arrested upon the warrant of a court or judge of the State or district where he may be found. No court or judge can issue a warrant to arrest the offender in any other State or district.

Third. If the offender be thus arrested for an offense against the United States, and be brought before the court or judge of the district where he was arrested, he may be held for trial before such court of the United States as, by the act of September 24, 1789, had cognizance of the offense.

Fourth. The only courts having cognizance of any offense or case by that act are:

1. The Supreme Court of the United States.
2. The circuit courts of the United States established in the various States.
3. The district courts of the United States established in the various States.

No State court and no territorial court has by that act any jurisdiction whatever for the trial of any cause, civil or criminal.

Fifth. If it appears, when the offender is thus arrested and brought before the court or judge of the district of his arrest, that the offense was committed in some other district, it is made the duty of the judge to cause him to be removed to the district in which the offense was committed; the Constitution requiring all criminal trials to be in the district in which the offense was committed. It is scarcely necessary to say that the districts mentioned are the judicial districts of the United States created by acts of Congress in the several States.

Sixth. The section gives no power to a court or judge to send for or bring a person charged with crime into his district or jurisdiction under any circumstances. The authority given in this respect is only to remove the person charged from the district in the cases named.

The sum of the matter, therefore, is, that the second section of the act of June 22, 1874, confers upon the courts of the District of Columbia the power to arrest offenders found in the District who are charged with crime committed within the District and hold them for trial, (which was the law before,) and to arrest offenders found in the District who have committed crimes against the United States in some judicial district of the United States, and to send them to such district for trial. And that is all. No person can be brought into the District of Columbia under it, either for libel or any other crime. The committee are of opinion that both the sections of the act are necessary and proper, and in perfect accordance with the principles of justice and the course of civilized jurisprudence. Without provisions of this character the District of Columbia would be an asylum for offenders committing crimes against the laws of the United States and escaping hither.

It only remains to report, as directed by the resolution of the Senate, "whether said act has any application to prosecution or indictment for the crime of libel in any case."

We are of opinion that, as before stated, no person charged with the crime of libel can be brought into the District of Columbia under it, for no person can be brought here under it for any crime whatever.

And it is equally plain that no person charged with the crime of libel in any other district or place in the United States can be arrested here and sent to such district or place under it, for—

First. Libel is not a crime against the laws of the United States in any of the States, so that no case could arise in which a court or judge in the District of Columbia could be called upon to arrest a person here and send him to any State for trial for libel.

It should be here observed that the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in criminal cases is confined to offenses created by the statutes of the United States.

No offense at common law is indictable or triable in the courts of the United States. This was early determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, and is the settled law of the land. (Public Statutes; United States vs. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32; Bishop's Criminal Law, section 199.)

Second. If in any Territory libel is a crime by its laws, and if such laws could be held for such purposes to be the laws of the United States, the act under consideration provides no aid in sending a person from this District to such Territory, for the thirty-third section of the act of 1789 has no application whatever to the Territories.

The result is that the act of June 22, 1874, is not, in our opinion, obnoxious to any criticism; and in respect of the crime of libel it confers no power either to bring a person charged with it into the District of Columbia or send him out of it.

The report was ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4126) authorizing the Citizens' National Bank of Sanbornton, New Hampshire, to change its name, to report it back without amendment. In consequence of a portion of the town having been called by a different name, the correspondence of the bank goes to the wrong town. As the bill is very brief and there can be no objection to it, I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for changing the name of the bank to "the Citizens' National Bank of Tilton, New Hampshire," whenever the board of directors shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, confirmed by a vote of two-thirds of the stockholders, and cause a copy of such action, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FENTON. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4324) to authorize the change of the name of the Second National Bank of Jamestown, New York, to report it back with an amendment and ask that it may be passed. This bill simply proposes to change the name of a bank in the town where I reside, and as it is very brief I ask the consent of the Senate that it may be put on its passage at once.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the change of the name of the bank to the "City National Bank of Jamestown, New York," whenever the board of directors shall accept the new name by resolution of the board and cause a copy of such resolution, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "board," in line 7, the words "confirmed by a vote of two-thirds of the stockholders;" so as to read:

Shall accept the new name by resolution of the board confirmed by a vote of two-thirds of the stockholders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TO-DAY'S SESSION.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to make an inquiry whether under the order adopted last night in regard to the funeral services, it is expected that the Senate is to proceed in a body to the House of Representatives?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will.

Mr. MORTON. And at the conclusion of the services there return to this Chamber? The resolution reads:

Resolved, That the Senate will attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at two o'clock in the afternoon.

My inquiry is as to what will be the order at the termination of the funeral services in the House; whether the Senate will then return to this Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such has been the custom of the Senate on similar occasions.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on the Judiciary yesterday reported a House bill with one or two amendments, to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia, being House bill No. 4669. I stated yesterday that it was essential to the purposes of justice to individuals, one or more, as well as to the United States, that the bill should pass immediately. I then asked unanimous consent, but my friend from California [Mr. SARGENT] desired it to lie over. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill shall be taken up and considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent to consider the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. FLANAGAN. I object, although I dislike to do so very much.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. FLANAGAN. If I have the floor, I ask to take up the motion to reconsider the bill that passed the Senate some two or three weeks ago to change the bounds of the eastern and western judicial districts of the State of Texas, and fixing times for holding courts in the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That requires unanimous consent until the morning business is disposed of. The introduction of bills is now in order.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1310) providing for the extension of the time for completing the survey and location of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1311) providing for the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mails on railroad routes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1312) for the payment of certain Indian war bonds of the State of California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1313) to license, tax, and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1314) for the relief of Messrs. Gelatt & Moore; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TIPTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1315) authorizing the Brownville, Fort Kearney and Pacific Railroad Company to construct a ponton railway-bridge across the Missouri River at Brownville, in Nemaha County, Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1316) for the benefit of the loyal Creek Indians, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1317) for the preservation of game in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1318) to regulate the transmission of ores, metals, and other articles of merchandise by mail; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I now ask to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 736) to change the boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to fix the times and places of holding courts in the same, was passed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I object to taking up the bill this morning. I am not ready to reconsider it.

Mr. FLANAGAN. It is a motion to reconsider entered by my colleague some weeks ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be taken up until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I thought it was concluded. I gave way for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Resolutions are in order.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask for the consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands—

Mr. FLANAGAN. I object to passing the bill. That is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the remainder of the morning hour belongs to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Well, sir, having no bills to report from that committee, [laughter,] I ask to present this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the next committee must be called.

Mr. FLANAGAN. In lieu of bills from the Committee on Education and Labor, I ask to take up the motion to reconsider the bill to which I have referred, and I think we shall be very well educated on it before we get through. I hope not, however. I will hold back everything else and ask that this motion be taken up.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I object to the consideration of it.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I move to proceed to the consideration of the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order of the Senate, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call the next committee if the Committee on Education and Labor have no business to present.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Well, I ask this as a favor, Mr. President, and I do hope the Senate will extend it to me, for really I have not been very troublesome to them, as I know they will bear me out in saying; and this is a matter of great importance to me, and I ask for its consideration.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senator will have permission. Mr. CAMERON. I hope we shall all give way to the Senator from Texas. He occupies very little time.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I have not been troublesome.

Mr. CAMERON. Let us agree to what he asks by common consent.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I ask that the motion to reconsider be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the motion indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I expect petitions enough from Texas here to bury that bill so that it will never be heard of again; and I shall object to its consideration until I get those petitions.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Does one objection carry it over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection carries it over.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Then I ask a vote of the Senate. I want the question if I can get to it in any way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion cannot be entertained except by unanimous consent.

Mr. FLANAGAN. This motion to reconsider was made some weeks since. Of course my colleague never will call it up, and perhaps this is about the last opportunity I shall be indulged in even to make the effort. The motion has already been made, and now I ask to have it taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain the motion except by unanimous consent; and the Chair understands the colleague of the Senator to object.

JURIES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now that my friend from Texas has finished his business I hope he will not object to my taking up and passing the jury bill.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I think I shall be in a good condition now to object to anything under heaven.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not object to my friend's taking up his bill. I again ask unanimous consent to put this important bill which relates to the administration of justice on its passage; it will not take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit juries in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment reported by the committee was in section 2, to strike out in lines 9 and 10 the words "shall be able to read and write in the English language."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in section 3 the following clause:

The court shall examine each person summoned as a grand juror under oath touching his qualifications; and no indictment shall be quashed, nor shall any verdict be set aside or new trial granted or judgment be arrested in any case, civil or criminal, because of the want of qualification of any juror, unless such juror, after having been interrogated, shall have falsely answered in relation to his qualifications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert in section 4, after the word "compensation," in line 10, the words "not exceeding five dollars a day for the time necessarily employed;" so as to make the clause read—

Said commissioners shall be allowed by the court reasonable compensation, not exceeding five dollars a day for the time necessarily employed, for their services, to be paid by the marshal out of moneys in his hand for the payment of the expenses of said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That no person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor under section 102, chapter 7, title 2, of the Revised Statutes, who shall, during the session of Congress at which he was summoned as a witness, by the authority of either House of Congress, make proper answer to all questions pertinent to the question under inquiry, although for a time he may have failed to testify as required by law.

Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment may make it necessary to change the title of the bill by adding the words "and for other purposes;" but for the purposes of the bill as explained in the other House it is entirely germane. I suppose the Committee on the Judiciary would say that the object of most of the provisions of this bill is to enable the grand jury to pass upon the question whether a prominent defaulting witness before the other House shall be indicted before the statute of limitations shall touch the offense he has heretofore committed. I sympathize entirely with the object of the bill and do not wish to delay it for a single moment; but one or two cases have transpired recently which require that at the earliest opportunity something shall be done to make the law plain with regard to the question whether witnesses who, having once been summoned before either House and failed to answer, afterward come in and "make a clean breast of it" and answer all questions that can be possibly propounded and make acknowledgment of their failure to answer theretofore, shall still be liable to the penalties of misdemeanor. I refer to the case of Mr. Wetmore, a newspaper correspondent, who failed to answer one day and the next day made a speech to the House; I refer also to the case of Mr. Irwin, who refused for a considerable time and was imprisoned, but subsequently came in and has since, as I understand, made full and complete answers, or if he has not done so, is ready to do so at the service of the committee. In the proceedings in the habeas corpus case of Mr. Irwin it was stated in court by the prosecuting attorney that the misdemeanor was already complete in his case. If the misdemeanor was complete then, he was liable to punishment and is still liable; and without such an explanatory statute as that which I have proposed, even if he afterward came in and made all the amends possible and was discharged by the House of Representatives, his answers being perfectly satisfactory.

I think that point ought to be cleared up and these persons ought not to be subject to the pains of misdemeanor for this public reason: that if you take away the inducement of these persons to come in and make answer after they have once refused you never will get an answer from them.

I will not elaborate upon this matter, but I make the statement. I think the object of this bill as avowed in the House—and the chairman himself will admit that is the object—is to meet cases of this kind; and hence this hasty assembling of the grand jury ought to be accompanied with this explanation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can say to the Senator from California in the single minute or two that I have left that this bill has no application to the cases to which he has referred at all. If the persons to whom he has referred as having refused to testify and then having testified afterward are liable to prosecution, they are liable to prosecution at any time within two years from the date they refused to testify; so that this bill has no application to them at all. It has application to a different case, which the Senator may not have in his mind. It has application to that case only from the fact that it provides the machinery for assembling the grand jury to do justice to that man, as I should wish it to do justice to me if I were exactly in his position, by giving him an opportunity to vindicate himself instead of its being said "The statute of limitations has run on so that now there is no chance for me to vindicate myself at all." It does not touch my friend's case in the least degree. I implore him therefore not to press an amendment which will hazard the passage of the bill. I cannot dilate upon the question as the hour is about out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SWAMP LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask now the consideration of the Senate to a small bill that has been read once. The object of it is to give prior entry of swamp lands in Missouri to settlers. It will be remembered by the Senate that Congress by a law donated swamp lands to the State and the State gave them to the counties and the counties to individuals in tracts of eighty acres each; the individuals have resided on them; and the object of this bill is simply to enable those who have resided on them and paid $100 to have prior entry. That is all.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in all cases in the State of Missouri where lands have heretofore been selected and claimed as swamp and overflowed lands by the State and the various counties therein, by virtue of any act of Congress, and the lands have been withheld from market in consequence thereof by the General Government, and the State and counties have sold such lands to actual settlers, and settlers have improved the same to the value of $100, the settlers, their heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, who have continued to reside thereon, shall have priority of right to pre-empt or homestead all such lands as may be rejected by the United States as not being in fact swamp and overflowed lands.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there any report accompanying the bill?

Mr. SPRAGUE. The bill itself states all the facts of the case. These are lands which are not swamp lands that are under existing law retired from the market, that have been settled on by settlers in Missouri; and the only object of this bill, as I stated, is that those who have settled and paid their hundred dollars for tracts of eighty acres shall have a prior right of entry over other parties who may come in on ascertaining that they are not swamp lands, and are not within the law granting swamp lands.

Mr. BOGAY. There can be no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATTARAUGUS AND ALLEGANY RESERVATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the resolution of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] on which the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SARGENT. I think I can conclude my remarks in the hour that is left.

Mr. FENTON. I ask the Senator from California to yield one moment that a vote may be taken upon a conference report which is on the Clerk's table. The report was read and went over yesterday under objection.

Mr. SARGENT. If I yield, I suppose I must give up any hope of concluding my remarks within the hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator decline to yield?

Mr. SARGENT. If it will only take a moment I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases.

The report was concurred in, being as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments, and that the fourth section of the bill be stricken out and the following be inserted: "All leases of land situate within the limits of said villages when established as hereinbefore provided, except those provided for in the second section of this act, in which Indians of said Seneca Nation, or persons claiming under them, are lessors, shall be valid and binding upon the parties thereto, and upon said Seneca Nation, for a period of five years from and after the passage of this act, except such as by their terms may expire at an earlier date; and at the end of said period, or at the expiration of such leases as terminate within that time, said nation, through its councilors, shall be entitled to the possession of the said lands, and shall have the power to lease the same: Provided, however, That at the expiration of said period, or the termination of said leases, as hereinbefore provided, said leases shall be renewable for periods not exceeding twelve years, and the persons who may be at such time the owner or owners of improvements erected upon such lands shall be entitled to such renewed leases, and to continue in possession of such lands, on such conditions as may be agreed upon by him or them and such councilors; and in case they cannot agree upon the conditions of such leases or the amount of annual rents to be paid, then the said councilors shall appoint one person and the other party or parties shall choose one person as referee to fix and determine the terms of such lease and the amount of annual rent to be paid; and if the two so appointed and chosen cannot agree, they shall choose a third person to act with them, the award of whom or the major part of whom shall be final and binding upon the parties; and the person or persons owning said improvements shall be entitled to a lease of said land and to occupy and improve the same according to the terms of said award, he or they paying rent and otherwise complying with the said lease or said award; and whenever any lease shall expire after its renewal as aforesaid, it may, at the option of the lessee, his heirs and assigns, be renewed in the manner hereinbefore provided."

And the House agree to the same.

The committee of conference further recommend for the consideration of the two Houses that the first section of the bill be stricken out, and the first two lines of the second section be stricken out, and that the following be inserted:

"That all leases of land within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations in the State of New York heretofore made by or with the authority of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act, and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3623) to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed to clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1863.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 633) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 1283) for the relief of Thomas Day, of Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 2689) for the relief of Émile Lapage, surviving partner of the firm of Lapage Brothers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2688) for the relief of Albert F. Yerby, administrator of Addison O. Yerby, deceased, or whom it may concern;

A bill (H. R. No. 2690) for the relief of Mark Davis; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the relief of Mrs. Flora A. Darling, of New Hampshire.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by Mr. MORTON on the 8th instant:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, at the conclusion of my remarks yesterday I was endeavoring to show the vindictiveness of the White Leagues and their cruel operations in Louisiana. I desire to show that that vindictiveness is against republicans, white as well as colored, and native as well as northern; and to this point I cite the testimony of E. L. Pierson, who before the House committee testified to intimidation, murders, &c., in his parish, during which he recounted the attempt upon his life, first stating that he lived in Natchitoches since boyhood and that formerly his politics were democratic, but prior to the last election he was a republican; that for his change of sentiment he was ostracized even by a resolution adopted at a public meeting; that he came there; was appointed by Kellogg judge of the parish and returned, and was met within sixteen miles of his own home and told not to go home; he did go, and a number of his friends there told him not to attempt to discharge the functions of his office, that his life was in danger because of his being a republican. On going to his office next day he learned that his life would be attempted, and received a note from his wife asking him to come home; then his wife came, and he went; that his sister told him two armed men were lurking about the place, as she guessed, to take his life; that forty armed men were in town, and that she heard these two swear that they came there to kill him, and that he should not sit as judge; soon after that the committee of seventy held a meeting and sent a committee to his house to demand of him that he sign a written agreement not to take part in the coming campaign, which he declined doing, whereupon one of the committee pulled out his watch and told him that he had half an hour in which to sign a paper; that he refused, telling them if they meant to assassinate him to do it at his office or on the street, and to spare his family from witnessing the murder. That during the campaign he was insulted time and again; when he went to make a speech men congregated with bowie-knives in sight, but on the approach of a company of cavalry they secreted their arms. There was not, continued witness, a fair registration in the parish; republicans were prevented from taking an active part in the campaign; a mass meeting was held, and from that a committee was sent to call for the resignations of the parish officers, and threats were made to hang one of them. He then recounted the attempts made to take his life in the night; the votes were being counted when he was retracked to the court-house; reached his home and was kept there a week, fearing to leave lest his life be taken; finally escaped, but learned that two Texas desperadoes had resolved to take his life.

He testifies further to the same effect, but this I detail to show that a white resident from boyhood in that country, simply for being a republican, is harassed and threatened with murder to deter him from ordinary political action. But I ask why is there this general denunciation of northern men in the South? Have not our people a right to move from State to State? Have they not a right to carry their political principles? The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] denies that there is contempt and ostracism of northern republicans in Georgia, and as a proof he cites a telegram from a man who says he is treated better than he deserves. A true northern gentleman would not be likely to use such an expression. It sounds like those who—

Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning.

But by a mode or trick of expression the Senator betrayed the accustomed contempt of northern men entertained in his region by men of his political principles by speaking in his remarks of "a northern man but a gentleman." To his telegrams I cite a speech of his colleague [Mr. NORWOOD] last summer in the theater at Savannah, which is said to have "excited the admiration and sympathy of the audience." The Senator before that appreciative audience delivered himself of sentiments like these:

When driven by the frigidity of social ostracism from the North, he flies with marvelous instinct to the torrid and unctuous embrace of his African mates and peers among the swamps of our southern shore. As the crane fills his craw, so this creature fills his bag for the flight; and as the crane, when the days grow hot, flaps his wings, and, screaming through the air, returns to the North; so this ill-omened biped, when times become warm in the South—

But, sir, his colleague says times do not become warm in the South for these northern men, these republicans, these carpet-baggers—when times become warm in the South, gathers up his legs and flying with screams and shrieks away, perches on the wooden head of the figure of justice, commonly known as the Attorney-General, and drowns the air with croakings about southern outrage.

His shibboleth is "the republican party."

O no! there is no ostracism of republicans!

From that party he sprang as naturally as maggots from putrefaction. His relation to that party is that of pimp to a bawd, for his meretricious service is rewarded in proportion to the number of innocent negro victims he inveigles to gratify its lust for power. Like Wamba and Gerth, he never travels without wearing his master's collar; and he is equally content whether turned loose to chase like a sleuth-hound the monarch of southern soil, or called by a snap of the fingers to eat the garbage of his party. His collar is his passport to roam at large—

That is the collar of republicanism—and it matters not with what persistence he may break into a southern gentleman's close, his master will not permit him to be muzzled, for he is "the ox that treadeth out the corn" as well as "the ass that knoweth his master's crib."

Mr. NORWOOD rose.

Mr. SARGENT. I will yield for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. NORWOOD. A request, not a question.

Mr. SARGENT. Well, sir, what is it?

Mr. NORWOOD. It is this: that the honorable Senator will not garble, but give the whole.

Mr. SARGENT. I have read two long extracts from this speech, and what I have selected is a fair expression of the spirit of the whole; and probably the man was in the audience who telegraphed to the colleague of the Senator that he was treated in the South better than he deserved, because what he deserved I presume he got from the teachings of the Senator from Georgia whom I address, from whom he learned that opprobrium, that witty, I confess, but stinging insult is poured upon the heads of northern men without discrimination. The Senator by reading it now all the way through will find no line drawn; he can find not one word drawing a distinction between the gentleman who telegraphed to his colleague and any gentleman who might have sat by his side in that audience or any other northern man residing at the South.

Mr. NORWOOD. What do you refer to?

Mr. SARGENT. The gentleman's colleague cited a telegram of a northern man, who he said was a republican, to prove that there was no social ostracism of republicans in Georgia, and this telegram said he was treated better than he deserved—a remark that I say a northern gentleman would not be likely to use. There is this bitterness, which is appreciated in such audiences as that assembled in Savannah, created by the speech of my friend from Georgia. There is this continual contempt poured out on northern men. They are compared to beasts of prey and birds of prey; they are men of foul lusts; they are men who come to eat up the South. I ask again, has not a northern man a right to go to any part of the South that he sees fit, there to locate, to carry on business, ay to run for office if he sees fit, to carry his political principles there, to enjoy them without being condemned and insulted on account of the exercise of that preference? That it is not the northern man merely, but the republican that is objected to, is evident from the case of Gilbert A. Walker, who went from Chicago down to Virginia after the war, and who was there elected governor of the State and has been subsequently sent by the democratic party to Congress; and the New York Herald says of him that he is the right kind of a carpet-bagger. The difference is that he is a democratic carpet-bagger. It is the republican that is objected to. The Constitution of the United States, article 4, section 2, says that—

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

Is there not this right of intercommunication through travel and residence and the right of political opinion? In the old slavery days a northern man who went there and was not a democrat, and a pro-slavery one at that, was called an abolitionist, and he was ignored, ostracized by polite society, persecuted and stoned by the rabble. That has passed away with slavery, and the man who goes there now is a carpet-bagger who is subjected to these insults, these abuses, these injuries.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] talks of the "vials of hate poured out in this debate." It is untrue.

Mr. NORWOOD. I want to make one remark, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. SARGENT. Well.

Mr. NORWOOD. The remarks there apply to certain classes of men who are described in a previous part of the remarks I made. They do not apply and were not intended to apply to gentlemen like Mr. Morrill who is not a democratic carpet-bagger, but is a republican. That was the reason that I asked that the former portion of these remarks should be read, as they explain what follows.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to this whole thing going into my speech; but I do not see fit to take up my time by reading it. I will accommodate the Senator, who seems to be somewhat pleased with his effort at the Savannah theater, and for which I compliment him, by reading the further part of it to which he refers as explanatory, and it may then be seen that in every line of the part he refers to, not merely in that which I have quoted, though I quoted a fair specimen, but that in every line of it there breathes a spirit of hatred and contempt of northern men and northern republicans. You may disguise it as you choose; you may say republicans have no business to run for office, or they come down there and try to organize the blacks in behalf of republican principles and therefore you despise them. I say they have a right to do those very things, and I going from California have as much right to go to Georgia and live there a year and run for office or to associate together men of my political opinions, or make speeches on the stump, or publish newspapers and not have them thrown into the river, and not be abused in my own person or my property destroyed or I insulted in private or before public audiences in the manner in which northern men without distinction, unless they are democrats, are insulted by that speech made by the Senator in Savannah. The Senator insists that the introductory remarks made by him at Savannah will explain his meaning more fully than the extracts I have read. I will read the part of his speech entire that precedes the first extract I quoted from it. It is as follows:

The reconstruction acts have wrought immeasurable evils, but perhaps the greatest of all is the production of the carpet-bagger. I have great admiration for the genius who first used that word, carpet-bagger. What can be more expressive? His like the world has never seen, from the days of Cain, or of the forty thieves in the fabled time of Ali Baba. Like the wind he blows, and we hear the sound thereof, but no man knoweth whence he cometh or whither he goeth.

Natural historians will be in doubt how to class him. Ornithologists will claim him, because in many respects he is a bird of prey. He lives only on corruption and takes his flight as soon as the carcass is picked. In other particulars he resembles the migratory crane.

What such speeches mean, and how they operate, is in evidence from many sources. The Zion's Herald is the organ of the Methodist Church of New England, a non-partisan, moderate paper, and its relation of the experience of the "carpet-bag" ministers of its church is worthy of citation. It recently said:

While southern politicians, ministers, and laymen can express their sentiments, however obnoxious they are to the convictions of northern men, with the utmost freedom, in the pulpit, in the railroad car, in the hotel, on the corners of the street, with great demonstrations of earnestness and violent denunciations of others holding different views, the most guarded utterances made by northern men at the South, that can be distorted into opposition to prevailing sentiments, are met with impudent sneers or social ostracisms; and every form of personal and business opposition is put into requisition to drive away anyone daring thus to utter, in a perfectly gentlemanly way, an honest conviction. The eminent southern ministers that visited the northern camp-meeting last summer were shown every possible attention, and allotted every honorable opportunity to address our largest audiences. They were frank in the expression of their own sentiments, courteous indeed, but still not guarding severely their speech in social intercourse. No one thought of criticising the freedom of those eloquent guests. Has one of them, however, in southern prints attempted to secure a like return of courtesy for our eminent northern ministers who may providentially visit the South, or suggested that the pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church South should pay the respect to their northern brethren due to their office, their character, and the fraternal attentions they have vouchsafed to visitors from the South? Our most cultivated men, high in office, renowned for talent, accomplished scholars, men marked for their gentle address, enter cities and large towns where several southern ministers have churches, but not a man of them, although the fact is publicly known of their presence, offers a nod of recognition or proffers the slightest Christian courtesy. What is the significance of this? And this is not true simply of individual ministers who have been outspoken in their views upon southern sentiments, but of our most conservative, fraternal, and peace-seeking men. There are no conspicuous instances recorded where this unfriendly policy has been even temporarily interrupted. There have been no Round Lake camp-meetings in the Southern States.

The most singular fact is the apparent unconsciousness of the existence of this hateful, unmanly, and unchristian temper on the part of southern men, and the evident feeling of abuse which they manifest when northern persons infer and state that there is any lack of true courtesy or manly generosity among the better portion of the southern communities. There is no doubt that exaggerated and false statements have been made; and there is also no doubt that one-half of the personal and pecuniary injury to northern business men, the social and most offensive ostracism and positive violence and brutal abuse in portions of the South and Southwestern States has never been told.

The Senator's colleague [Mr. GORDON] talked about "vials of hate poured out" by us in this debate. It is entirely untrue, and calculated to mislead the people of his State. The speech was intended for circulation in Georgia rather than the ear of the Senate, as was evident by the large number of extracts which the Senator said he would not ask to be read but have put in his speech. If it was intended to influence the Senate, they should all have been read in the hearing of the Senate; but pages were put in without any other effect except to figure in the RECORD and go to his own people.

There have been no evidences of hate here. I myself yesterday, although speaking of grave matters and speaking with earnestness, spoke kindly in every instance, and I desire to do so. But he holds up to the Senate of the United States the republicans here in an unfavorable and untrue light when he talks about our pouring out the vials of hate on the Senator or any of his colleagues. We have pictured the injustice in the South and the barbarism there, and asked for justice, peace, and order. But I ask Senators to see how the hate of that audience at Savannah was stirred up indiscriminately against northern republicans going to the South. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] assumes that because some one speaks of the kindness of the republican party during the past years and now in amnesty measures, a reproach is cast on the rebels. The debate has been free from such reproaches; but it is well not to open that subject.

The Senator justifies those who embarked in the rebellion on the ground that they thought they were right. I presume they so thought, but that does not prove that they were right or lessen the magnanimity of the Government in forgiving them. The high priests who procured the crucifixion of Christ and the people who asked the release of Barabbas probably thought they were right. Those who tolled the bell of Saint Bartholomew and those who answered its call; the authors of the Sicilian vespers; those who drenched Savoy with blood; Torquemada watching the victims of the Inquisition on the rack, probably all thought they were right. Scroggs and Jeffreys may have thought they were right at the bloody assizes. The authors of the massacre of Glencoe may have thought they were right. The assassin of William the Silent may as much have thought he was right as did Wilkes Booth when he assassinated President Lincoln. But the enlightened judgment of mankind condemns them; and it will not do for those who rebelled against the best Government on earth to extend slavery, who drew the death line at Andersonville, who starved Union soldiers at Belle Isle and Salisbury and assassinated a President of the United States, the noblest and most loving heart of the ages, to recall these deeds in other than a sorrowful spirit.

But I am digressing. I was speaking of the condition of Louisiana and of the events that in panoramic succession led up to the seizure of the House of Representatives by a faction on the 4th of January. A little over a year ago an unprovoked massacre of negroes took place in Grant Parish, where eighty to one hundred negroes were killed in cold blood by a man with McEnery's commission in his pocket. Go back still further. In 1866 a peaceable convention assembled at New Orleans for the purpose of proposing amendments to the constitution of the State, were prevented from doing business by force, and some two hundred men were killed and wounded in an hour. Within sixty days of the presidential election of 1868 some two thousand men were killed for their political opinions. Such scenes as these—and I give but samples—led up to the Penn insurrection; so that the seizure of the legislative hall was but an incident to be plead with a continuando. Under these circumstances, with these surroundings, the President did right to employ the military to discharge his high constitutional obligation, and the action of the military was legal and commendable.

Democratic Senators say that the root of all the troubles in Louisiana is the presence of the military and the proper impatience of the people against the Kellogg government. Let us see. It may arise from the mercurial and intolerant character of the white men there. Such scenes long antedate the war or the presence of carpet-baggers. Intimidation and bloodshed at the polls in Louisiana are no new things. Charles Gayarré is entitled to eminence as a historian of Louisiana. On page 679 of his work he publishes the following facts under date of 1856:

In January the official relations of Governor Hebert with the State terminated. In his valedictory message he referred with deep mortification to the scenes of intimidation, violence, and bloodshed which had marked the late general elections in New Orleans—

There were no republicans there then, no carpet-baggers, none of these birds and beasts which the Senator from Georgia talked so spitefully about to the people of Savannah—

He said that the repetition of such outrages would tarnish our character and sink us to the level of the anarchical governments of Spanish America; that before the occurrence of those "great public crimes," the hideous deformity of which he could not describe, and which were committed with impunity in midday light, and in the presence of hundreds of persons, no one could have admitted even the possibility that a bloodthirsty mob could have contemplated to overawe any portion of the people of this State in the exercise of their most valuable rights, "but that what would then have been denied even as a possibility is now a historical fact."

Gayarré is talking about matters that occurred in 1856, not about scenes that occurred in 1872-'74—but how very close the parallel—and he quotes from a governor of the State and an executive message. Governor Wickliffe, succeeding Governor Hebert, after lamenting the mismanagement and recklessness of administration, in his message to the Legislature in 1857 he commented on this mob violence.

He said:

It is well known that at the two last general elections many of the streets and approaches to the polls were completely in the hands of organized ruffians—

How much that sounds like "banditti"— who committed acts of violence on multitudes of our naturalized fellow-citizens who dared venture to exercise the right of suffrage. Thus nearly one-third of the registered voters of New Orleans have been deterred from exercising their highest and most sacred prerogative.

Are we not to be believed when we say that by similar scenes recently occurring one-third of the people of New Orleans and Louisiana are deprived of their rights and twenty thousand men kept away from the polls?

The expression of such elections is an open and palpable fraud on the people, and I recommend you to adopt such measures as shall effectually prevent the true will of the majority from being totally silenced.

And it is for the results of just such frauds, more recently enacted, that the democratic party are contending. They must have the fruits; what matters it if men were kept away from the polls by bloody crimes like those stigmatized by Governor Wickliffe, the work of "organized ruffians," they claim to be allowed to pack a Legislature by such means? Wickliffe is not more explicit than Major Merrill in his recent testimony before the congressional committee:

I have been stationed in Louisiana since October, part of the time in New Orleans; have been in Shreveport; the Red River country is in a deplorable condition, and without the presence of troops there is no telling what would happen; colored men are terrified and are constantly in fear of violence; white republicans are ostracized that I know of; there was no free expression of political views, and the control was in the hands of a few war leaders of the conservative or White League party; they would like to overthrow the State government; there is antagonism to equal rights; an impartial election could not have been held in that country; several massacres have had the effect to intimidate the colored men; weeks and weeks after the Coushatta massacre colored men did not dare to remain at their homes at night, and I think that no free or fair election could have been held in Louisiana; white republicans are severely ostracized; I have no personal knowledge of the Coushatta murders; when I visited Shreveport there was but little semblance of law; there was a volunteer police, but I had no authority to act; it would not be safe for a stranger to travel through the Red River country and declare himself a republican; an office was vacant in that section, and two gentlemen who conversed with me about it stated they would not dare accept a commission; I think that the people generally consider that if a man is a republican he can have no integrity; it would make no difference how honest republican officials might be, they would not be respected in office or out; I am engaged in making a report of all the massacres and political murders in Louisiana since 1866; in numerous instances colored men were deterred from voting because of the fear engendered by massacres; I do not know of a single instance where a colored man voluntarily voted the democratic ticket; I do not believe a republican speaker would have been tolerated; in some instances he might have got half through, but under most circumstances he would have been drawn into a quarrel had he tried to avoid it.

It appears that in 1856 and previous years corruption existed at the polls at New Orleans as now, and the historian draws a melancholy picture of its effects. On page 634 he says:

This was the main cause which, by producing intense disgust, went much further than the fear of assassination to prevent honest citizens from resorting to the ballot-box. They knew all our elections to have been so hopelessly fraudulent that it was disgraceful to participate in them. They had retired from the political arena in sullen despair.

It is well to understand this. The lawless class-hate that assailed naturalized citizens at that time, assassinated them, kept them away from the polls, is now transferred to republicans, white and black. Force and fraud had such play that at the election where Kellogg and McEnery were candidates republicans practically could not vote, and any result declared in favor of McEnery would have been a gigantic fraud, a denial to the people of Louisiana of their rights. At the election in 1868 when Grant was a candidate the returns showed that in many parishes General Grant did not get even one vote, in other parishes he got two, in other parishes five, in others ten votes; but the important fact is that numerous murders, numbering as reported by a congressional committee over two thousand killed and wounded, had produced terror which between May and November made a change of seventy-three thousand votes.

I ask if history is not reproducing itself in Louisiana? The same assassination and terrorism existed at the last election, driving men to conceal in the woods, to keep away from the polls. Everybody knows that a fair election would have elected a Legislature overwhelmingly republican.

In the face of such facts and of the scenes at Vicksburg and elsewhere the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] asks "was there ever such provocation as that of the South since the war?" How the blood-thirsty black chickens persecute the White League fox! Provocation! by general pardon, by restoration to rights, by admitting to Congress fraternally even those who fought to destroy the Union. Provocation! because we condemn murder, because we ask for mercy to the helpless, because we insist on the liberty to live, labor, and enjoy the rights of a citizen of every man within your borders!

But he says we interfere between capital and labor. It was a maxim of slavery that capital should own labor. If the South have accepted the results of the war as the Senator insists they have, they have accepted emancipation. That and its results we insist on and will do so.

Let us see what arrangements between capital and labor we have interfered with, and how kindly southern capital provides for labor. I have here the laws which were passed by the States of the South when they first reassumed political power with reference to the colored people, declaring that even an insolent gesture of a black man toward a white should be punished by imprisonment, and the person could be sold from his prison to labor. I will not take up time to read these. They are to a certain extent familiar to the country. Congress intervened on account of the barbarism which was being exercised toward the blacks by capital, reducing them to a condition of slavery little better than that from which we had redeemed them. But in Arkansas recently, under their reconstructed constitution and Legislature, they are passing just such laws again. Capital, which it is said we interfere with, dominating in Arkansas, ay, and in North Carolina, too, is passing these very vagrant laws whereby men can be sold for not fulfilling a contract for labor, whereby they can be arrested on various pretenses when they are not engaged in regular employment, whereby traps are continually set for their feet, the penalty being all the time to transfer the possession of their persons to white men who will buy them for that purpose. Furthermore, they are passing laws that the stealing of two dollars shall be grand larceny, punishable as a felony, and are making all the county jails branch State prisons, because felony disfranchises the person who is guilty of it unless he is pardoned; and by these means they can succeed step by step until they have totally disfranchised the colored men in the South. The "second sober thought" of the South, now that they are getting the power into their own hands again, is in accordance with that which they had at first when they emerged from the rebellion.

Mr. RANSOM rose.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator shall hear enough about North Carolina if he will allow me to proceed. I have not done with it.

The democratic Legislature recently assembled and now in session in North Carolina passed a new charter for the city of Wilmington, in which they divided the city into three wards, and gerrymandered it as follows: One ward, containing two hundred and fifty voters, elects two aldermen; one ward, containing three hundred voters, elects three aldermen; and the rest of the city, containing thirty-one hundred voters, elects three aldermen. By great ingenuity in running lines in the blocks the two wards containing two hundred and fifty and three hundred voters, respectively, elect six aldermen, while the thirty-one hundred voters only elect three. The democratic member from that district published a letter in the Republican recently defending this action on the ground that it gave a better representation to property. That is the very point. That is modern democracy. That is to say, the jackass now, using Franklin's illustration, is to be recognized as the voter and not the man; that is to say, the poor and the humble are not to have equal rights in representation on this floor and in the other House, in legislative bodies, or municipal councils, and other places. Representation is to be taken away from the poor, and by a system of aristocratic laws put into the hands of property men. O, democracy, where is thy blush! Where is the democrat who can stand up and not blush with very shame at the idea that these things are done in its name? Trample down the poor and humble, and deprive the freeman of his rights under American institutions!

A bill is pending in the North Carolina Legislature, reported favorably from a committee, which will undoubtedly pass, which makes it a misdemeanor for any agricultural laborer to violate his contract with his employer. This even applies to minors, and its effect and intention is to establish a system of peonage.

The question is now pending before the Legislature of calling a constitutional convention, its object being to overthrow the present State constitution. This provision was submitted to the people by the democratic Legislature three years ago, and defeated by a large popular vote; but now, having a two-thirds majority in the Legislature, they think they can call a convention without submitting it to the people; and if they do not do so, it will only be because they are deterred by the admonitions of their friends here in Congress. A caucus was lately held by the democratic members of the Legislature at Raleigh in reference to this convention matter, and a very large majority were in favor of calling a convention. Communications were received from democratic members of Congress imploring them not to do so at this time, that they could wait and accomplish all they wish by and by. Therefore their not acting at this time is merely a question of policy.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President—

Mr. SARGENT. I will yield for a moment only.

Mr. RANSOM. Only one word. I desire to say in reference to the Senator's statement that he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. SARGENT. I hear the Senator's statement; but I have it on the very best authority. I have been extremely careful in my statement.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator cannot have it on as good authority as the Senator who now speaks, because I know about it.

Mr. SARGENT. I have a very high respect for the Senator. Does he tell me that there has been no effort to call a convention for the purpose of changing the constitution of the State?

Mr. RANSOM. It has been mooted in North Carolina and is now mooted—

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator say it has not been opposed by democratic members here?

Mr. RANSOM. I say that there has been and is now a movement in North Carolina to call a convention of the people to alter the present constitution of the State, but there has been no imploring dispatch sent by the North Carolina democratic delegation to a caucus of the democratic party not to do that act. The delegation have informed their friends in North Carolina of the state of opinion here, but they have been particular to do nothing else. But let me say to the Senator that if that convention is called and a new constitution is adopted, the new constitution will conform in all respects to the Constitution of the United States, and sacredly and tenderly respect the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments.

Mr. SARGENT. I trust the Senator is not mistaken in that. If, however, under the same influences and the same class of people, it should happen to turn out as the constitution of Arkansas, and be changed in the same way as it was in Arkansas, by fraud and violence, subverting the rights of the people instead of protecting them, I should not be at all surprised.

Mr. RANSOM. I protest against any such apprehensions being expressed by the Senator from California in reference to North Carolina.

Mr. SARGENT. Patrick Henry once said that he had no light for his feet except the lamp of experience. I have no opportunity to judge of southern affairs except by that which I see transpiring before my eyes every day. I see these things going on. I see constitutions overthrown, State governments subverted, sometimes by violence and force and fraud, as in Louisiana, sometimes by trick, by violation of the State constitution, and by force also, as in Arkansas. These things are occurring in these very reconstructed States; and although I have a very high respect for the Senator, I need something stronger than his guarantee to believe that these things now occurring are not likely to be repeated, and in his own State.

Horace Greeley was the nominee for President of the democratic party at the last presidential election, and I should like to show the Senator from North Carolina how well he understood the people of his section. I suppose I am quoting from democratic authority; at any rate he was indorsed by the Senator's party. He said in 1871, not long before his nomination:

It (the democratic party) would come into power with the chagrin, the wrath, the mortification of ten bitter years to impel and guide its steps. It would devote itself to taking off or reducing tax after tax until the Treasury was deprived of the means of paying interest on the national debt, and would hail the tidings of national bankruptcy with unalloyed gladness and unconcealed exultation. Whatever chastisement may be deserved by our national sins, we must hope that this disgrace and humiliation will be spared us. The democratic party of to-day is simply the rebellion seeking to achieve its essential purposes within and through the Union. A victory which does not enable it to put its feet on the necks of the black race seems to the bulk of its adherents not worth having. Its heart is just where it was when it regarded slavery and Constitution as two names for one thing. It hates the generals who led the Union armies to victory, and rarely misses a chance to disparage them—

Ay, they are not fit to "breathe the air of Heaven" or "the free air of a republic," as has been said on this floor—

It clings to that exaggerated notion of State rights which makes them the shield of all manner of wrongs and abuses. It takes counsel of its hates even more than of its aspirations, and will be satisfied with no triumphs that do not result in the expulsion of all active, earnest republicans from the South.

That which your candidate for President believed in 1871, I have seen evidence day after day down to the time I now speak to believe.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] dwelt on the necessity to the South of a correct public opinion at the North, and appealed to public opinion to exonerate him and his section from censure for the things to which I have referred. Public opinion is a two-edged sword, and he has more to fear from it than those who denounce this system of slavery and the atrocities that lead up to it. There are other appeals coming from the South to public opinion. I have here one in the New Orleans Bulletin published on the 6th of February where they appeal as follows:

Patriots of the North, let the voice of Grant's victims in Louisiana warn you in time. Arm yourselves without delay; band yourselves together in military array; organize by States, and have your worthy and trusty leaders chosen. Let those who love liberty know each other, and get used to concerted action. Put aside funds, munitions, and stores enough for a prolonged campaign. Be ready when duty demands it to take the field in such numbers as to crush out tyranny before it becomes supreme. You can depend upon most of the old soldiers of the armies who fought for the Government and Union if you organize and prepare in due season. Your country, your threatened liberties, and the palpable encroachments, plain intentions of your enemies, call for active preparation. In the name of liberty we conjure you to heed this warning and be ready.

The public opinion of the North is appealed to for another rebellion, to engage with the South in overthrowing the constituted authorities of the Government; but, as I say, this public opinion is a two-edged sword, and the men who fought down the former rebellion can be relied upon, they and their sons, to put down another!

But these things are the natural outgrowth of democratic policy avowed in grave public documents. The Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] in a congressional report, amplified and enlarged upon the necessity of excluding colored men from political power. The report is made by Frank P. Blair, T. F. BAYARD, S. S. COX, JAMES B. BECK, P. Van Trump, A. M. WADELL, J. C. ROBINSON, and J. M. Hanks. I will not read at length on account of my desire to close. After going on to state that the phrase used long prior to the war that no government could exist half slavery and half free should be paraphrased, and it was a proposition equally true that no government could exist half black and half white, and saying that the minds of thinking men are coming to this conclusion, they say:

Such a state of things—

This half black and half white political equality, this voting power and right of the negro—

Such a state of things may last as long as the party shall last which had the power and audacity to inaugurate it, and no longer. But whenever that party shall go down—

Ay, sir, when the republican party shall fail—whenever that party shall go down, as go down it will at some time not long in the future, that will be the end of the political power of the negro among white men on this continent. Men in the frenzy of political passions may shut their eyes to this fact now, but it will come at any time when the negro shall cease to be a party necessity in the politics of this country.

That is what the republican party accuse the democracy of. They say that is the very tendency of your measures; that you keep that end steadily in view to destroy the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution; that you design to re-enslave the African; that you design that all the fruits of the war shall pass away; and I charge it here on the floor of the Senate that that is the design of the democratic party; that it is evinced by their reports on the condition of the South that they intend to overthrow all the fruits of the war; that the results of the long struggle which cost hundreds of thousands of lives and hundreds of millions of dollars shall go for naught; that the blacks shall again be enslaved; that this black blot shall be again upon the American escutcheon and an American citizen can no longer hold up a fair front to heaven and before the nations and say, "Within our broad boundaries there treads not the foot of a slave." That is democratic policy; and there are the signatures of those Senators and members of the House in a grave public document stating these views openly and fully.

Will not the country arouse to these tendencies? Is it possible that the country can sleep when these dangers impend? What difference does it make about the petty speeches of little stump orators in localities, when before the Congress of the United States in a document of that gravity so plainly is put forth the avowed design of the party to overthrow the rights which have been secured by the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States?

These operations at the South are all in pursuance of the plan outlined by this congressional committee. They design to take State by State. Where they cannot grab a whole State at once as in the case of Louisiana and Arkansas, they intend to take a section of it as at Vicksburg in Mississippi, and to hold it by force and violence. They intend to subvert the State constitutions, to eliminate from them every vestige of right, of freedom of thought and action of colored men, or of anything except pure, unadulterated, old proslavery democracy. That is their deliberate purpose; and all these operations, all these plans tend to that very thing. I doubt not that that is well understood and is abetted by northern democratic leaders. If it were not so, why should we see such documents as this which I have read, where the result is pointed at but with a lack of hopefulness not customary to that party they do not think it can be accomplished until the republican party is entirely banished from power. They have started even before the republican party is entirely banished from power to work these nefarious ends, and they hope to complete them when they get supreme control.

I believe that these things are well understood and encouraged by the leaders of the northern democracy, and any further ulterior purposes that there may be on the part of the southern agitators in regard to the destruction of the Union of these States, because I find by the history of the rebellion and the circumstances which accompanied its opening that leading democratic politicians and statesmen were in close communion with the rebellious leaders at that time and encouraged them to retire from the Union. I might quote the letter of Franklin Pierce, a former democratic President of the United States, written on the 6th of January, 1860, nine months before the first State seceded. I might quote also from the language of Keitt in the South Carolina convention where he said they had a right from the assurances which were given by the northern democrats to expect assistance, and that they had been disappointed, and that the northern democrats had gone back upon their pledges through a cowardly fear for their own safety if they had dared themselves to stand up in the face of the Government and the people of the North. I have here an unpublished essay written by a gentleman of Louisiana in which, to do him justice, he belabors all parties right lustily. After making a remark which would have fitted very well into something that I said yesterday and which I will first quote, he goes on to speak of this matter. Speaking of the democratic party, he says:

Measured by its own arrogant boasts, it was the sole fitting expounder and only faithful defender of the Constitution in its primitive purity. There were some, however, who, even in palmy days, contended that by actual measurement it was but a juggling charlatan, "sticking for the letter of the Constitution with the affectation of a prude, and abandoning its principles with the effrontery of a prostitute." Whether the boast or the sneer contain the most truth, it is not now pertinent to inquire.

In 1860 the maxims of state-craft it had cherished through the long years of its jealous rule were repudiated by the popular voice, the reins of government it had grasped in lineal and almost unbroken succession, from Jefferson to Buchanan, were decisively wrested from it and placed in the hands of a party representing new ideas. Whatever its virtues, (and it must have been endowed with many, else how would it have retained its hold upon the popular heart so long,) patience under ostracism from the control of public affairs does not appear to have had a place in the catalogue. The southern leaders, maddened by defeat, proclaimed the right of secession, and flew to arms to vindicate it. It was generally believed at the time that large promises of material aid had been given by the northern portion of the democratic brotherhood. If ever given, those promises were redeemed very much after the fashion of Monsieur Parolles, when he so valiantly undertook to recover the captured drum. After having gulled their impulsive southern allies into "the imminent deadly breach" they coolly stacked arms! The more respectable, keeping up a show of consistency by a fusillade of negative and diluted sympathy; recruiting the confederate armies with shadowy battalions of emotional substitutes in lieu of the active physical aid promised.

That is even better than Keitt's speech or Pierce's letter. These things are understood at the North by northern democratic leaders, and I think so from many circumstances. Marr headed the mob who demanded the abdication of the State government of Louisiana on the 14th of September. From that bloody field he went to the Manhattan Club, on December 29, at New York, and there made a speech. Why he should have gone there and then returned to take part in the subsequent proceedings, why he found there the sympathizing friends which his operations required, may perhaps be explained by some one, but I can only draw inferences. In this speech he said:

I am astonished that the thunders of public indignation were not heard, and that the President was not told "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther."

Observe this was in reference to the Penn insurrection to overthrow the State government, not what took place afterward in the Legislature.

Yet the telegrams from Washington announce that it is the determination of the President to deal with Louisiana with a rough hand; for friends have said be patient; wait a little longer. Well, we have been patient; we have waited, and we have been injured beyond comprehension, except from actual experience. We mean to preserve the public peace as far as it is possible for us to do so. I mean no menace, no threat, when I say it is the fixed determination of the people of Louisiana to sweep these men from power.

And by what means they are going to do it we know by his participation in the massacre of the 14th of September. Not sweep them from power, according to the American sense of the term, by a peaceable election, by allowing the will of the people to be expressed through the ballot-box. O no, sir; but by mobs, by muskets, and bullets.

And they will do it, unless they are prevented by the direct interposition of the Federal soldiers. [Applause.]

Yes, sir, they meant by violence to subvert the State government. This was on December 29, only a very few days before the event happened in the Legislature on the 4th of January, showing their purpose to overthrow the State government by violence unless the Federal troops interfered to prevent. And then shall it be said that there was no necessity for the use of the Federal troops; that the constitutional guarantee could not properly be called into exercise when this vaunt was made by this man Marr who headed the just previous insurrection and bore his complaints and made his promises to the bosom of his friends of the Manhattan Club?

I say these are but parts of a concerted plan to conquer State after State. Look at Arkansas. In defiance of the provision of the State constitution the government of that State has been overthrown by an illegal convention, officers elected for four years ousted, and the rights of the people prostrated. The Legislature was emptied of republican members by the illegal action of the governor, and his own emissaries put in as preliminary to this work. Thousands of men were disfranchised to elect a new Legislature, and that Legislature is passing bills as atrocious as those to which I have referred. Terrorism there suppresses the least murmur of discontent. Baxter found a contest to his right to act as governor before the Legislature. He emptied of his own motion the Legislature of republican members, thirty-three in the house and several senators, by pretended appointments to office; and when these appointments were made he declared the seats vacant and ordered a new election. Not remitting the question to the respective houses to ascertain if there were vacancies, as was required by the laws of the State, he himself decided that there were vacancies, in violation of law, and ordered an election. He thereby divested the Legislature of the constitutional right to pass upon the qualifications of its own members. He turned out the registrars appointed in 1872 for two years by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and put in his own creatures. These registrars conducted the election for vacancies, and he called an extra session, held elsewhere than in the State-house, surrounded the building with troops, and admitted no one except on a military order. There was no quorum present, and yet this illegal assembly admitted the governor's creatures in order to make up a quorum, and then they proceeded to pass a law calling a convention of the people, although there was no provision in the State constitution of Arkansas by which such convention could be held. The constitution provided the means of its own amendment by the passage of those amendments through the two houses of the Legislature and submitting them to the people. All these more than forms, the very essence of the right of the people, the right to have their organic law amended only in a constitutional manner, were stricken down by this illegal body by the connivance of the governor of that State.

Mr. President, the time has arrived, I suppose—

FUNERAL OF HON. SAMUEL HOOPER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the order heretofore made the Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of Mr. HOOPER. At the close of the ceremonies Senators will return to their Chamber.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral ceremonies of Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of that body from the State of Massachusetts.

When the services in the House of Representatives were concluded, the Senate returned to its Chamber at two o'clock and forty minutes p. m.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana to change his motion, and make it that when the Senate adjourns now it be to meet at half past seven this evening.

Mr. MORTON. I have no objection to that form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is modified accordingly.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate do now adjourn until tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion takes precedence.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to say in explanation of the motion that for the purpose of continuing the memorial services of to-day it is proper that an adjournment should take place from this time until to-morrow morning, according to what I believe to have been the uniform custom of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. MORTON. I ask for a division.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the condition of the Senate is an unpleasant one. I beg the Senator from Indiana to withdraw his motion.

Mr. MORTON. I withdraw the motion on that appeal.

Mr. HAMLIN. The motion to adjourn then is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to take a recess is withdrawn. Are the yeas and nays insisted upon on the motion to adjourn?

Mr. BAYARD and others. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and at (two o'clock and forty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 16, 1875.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order of business, as that will give everybody a fair chance.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business coming over from Friday last—bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and now upon their engrossment and third reading.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with the recommendation that they do pass without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2688) for the relief of Albert F. Yerby, administrator of Addison O. Yerby, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 2689) for the relief of Emille Lepage, surviving partner of the firm of Lepage Brothers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the relief of Mrs. Flora A. Darling.

The bill (H. R. No. 633) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee, was reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with an amendment.

The amendment was concurred in, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The votes by which the bills were passed were severally reconsidered, and the motions to reconsider laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER. The following bill comes over as unfinished business. It is a bill (H. R. No. 4692) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, reported from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. COBURN. I ask by unanimous consent that Monday night be given to reports from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MYERS. I do not object if we have one night for the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let this bill be disposed of first.

Mr. GARFIELD. I must object to any special agreements.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move to dispense with the reading of the pending bill. It gives a long list of persons in whose favor claims have been allowed.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. DAWES. I move to suspend the rules to go into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill which I have the right to report at any time. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill (H. R. No. 4729) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; and move that the same be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order for to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The bill was received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made the special order for to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

TENNESSEE AND HOLSTON RIVERS.

Mr. DONNAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to move that certain maps accompanying report of survey of the Tennessee and Holston Rivers be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed with the report which they accompany.

The motion was agreed to.

GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY OF TERRITORIES.

Mr. DONNAN submitted an adverse report on the printing of a map accompanying a letter of the Secretary of the Interior relative to the geographical and geological survey of the Territories; and the same was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL STATISTICAL CONGRESS.

Mr. DONNAN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed of the report of the delegates from the United States to the international statistical congress, at St. Petersburg, six hundred extra copies bound; three hundred for the Department of State and three hundred for the delegates.

FEES OF MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. SENER. I rise to present the report of a committee of conference. The report was read, as follows:

The conferees appointed by the Senate and House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House bill No. 3923, entitled "An act to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved February 26, 1853," report:

That having met, after full and free conference they have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the thirteenth amendment of the Senate to said bill, and agree to the same modified as follows: After the word "four," in line 10 of said amendment, insert the words "and prior to the 1st day of January, 1875." And in lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 strike out all after the word "passed," in line 13, and insert the following words: "and from and after the 1st day of January, 1875, no such officer or person shall become entitled to any allowance for mileage or travel not actually and necessarily performed under the provisions of existing law;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

And that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the fourteenth amendment of the Senate to said bill, and agree to the same.

JAMES B. SENER,
G. G. HOSKINS,
R. M. SPEER,

Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
A. G. THURMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SENER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I ask the House to concur in a trifling amendment by the Senate to the bill H. R. No. 3915.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for consideration of the tax and tariff bill; and pending that motion I move that all general debate be limited to three hours.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. There is a special order for to-day at one o'clock. If the House goes into committee now and continues in session until two o'clock, the hour fixed for the funeral of the late Mr. HOOPER, will that special order be lost?

The SPEAKER. It would be. But the Chair will remark that he would construe the special order as entitling the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] to the floor at twelve o'clock to-day. It was intended to be the order one hour after the reading of the Journal and the hour of meeting has been changed.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suggest to my friend from Massachusetts that if there is to be further general debate on the tax and tariff bill, to-morrow be taken for that purpose. This will give more time for the three hours proposed to be allowed for general debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to go on to-morrow with the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. There is a great deal of general business pressing upon the House, and I would not urge this unless I felt that I was performing a public duty. Nothing is so unpleasant to me as to interfere with other gentlemen bringing before the House measures of which they have charge.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, communicated to the House of Representatives the resolutions of the Senate on the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

THE LATE HON. SAMUEL HOOPER.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions of the Senate. The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE, February 15, 1875.

Resolved, That the Senate has received with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the Senate will attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. While this is before the House the Chair begs to state that the committee on arrangements have instructed me to ask members occupying the front three tiers of seats on the right and the front tier on the left to vacate them before the hour of two o'clock for the accommodation of the Senate and members of the Cabinet and others who may attend the funeral.

COMPENSATION OF BANK EXAMINERS.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to submit the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act, and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with the following amendments, namely:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "thirty-one of the national-bank act" and insert in lieu thereof "5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or in any one of the States of Oregon, California, and Nevada, or in the Territories."

Strike out all after "than," in line 12, to and including "dollars," in line 14, and insert in lieu thereof "three hundred thousand dollars, twenty-five dollars."

Strike out "redemption cities," in line 27, and insert in lieu thereof "the cities named in section 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or in any one of the States of Oregon, California, and Nevada, or in the Territories."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

HORACE MAYNARD,

C. L. MERRIAM,

M. J. DURHAM,

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN SCOTT,

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,

T. F. BAYARD,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is merely a settlement of some details which it was thought could be better adjusted in the committee of conference than by amendments in the House; and unless some gentleman desires to be better informed as to the recommendations of the committee, I will move the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman state simply what the substance of this change of the law is?

Mr. MAYNARD. The bill, as we passed it, fixed the rate which the national-bank examiners should be paid, a rate graduated upon the capital of the bank. The evil complained of which we sought to relieve was that mileage had been charged; and where two or three banks were in the same community there was double mileage, so that it made the services incommensurate with the amount received, while in other instances the pay might not have been enough, although as to that we heard no special complaint. This bill was an attempt to regulate this matter. It went to the Senate, which modified it by substituting references to the Revised Statutes, instead of the references to the national-bank act.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is sufficient. I make no objection to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. AVERILL. Some time ago, on the call of the committees by the Speaker, the Committee on Indian Affairs was given the right to report on some other day. I ask now if it is in order for them to report?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order if the House does not go into Committee of the Whole on the Calendar.

Mr. AVERILL. Does that take precedence without a vote of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is only by a vote of the House that the House can go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to say that I do not want to be pressing the revenue bill on the House unseasonably, and if the House does not want to pass that bill I wish they would save themselves trouble and save me the pain of putting myself in the position of pressing it at every chance I can get. I do not do it from any personal motive, but I am acting under the instructions of the Committee on Ways and Means, and under a sense of pressing duty; but of course the House can take the responsibility off our shoulders if it declines to go on with the consideration of that bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I want to say this to the House, that I hope that to-day it will not go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There is the southern claims bill, involving a large amount, which can be passed between now and twelve o'clock; and then there is a special order at twelve o'clock, the bill for the reorganization of the Treasury Department, which, if the House will let me, I can finish in less than two hours and before the hour fixed for the funeral ceremonies. I think it better, therefore, that, instead of resolving ourselves into a debating society upon the tariff question, we should consider that bill. My friend from Massachusetts knows that the bill was prepared in part in consequence of his appeal to the House for retrenchment in the management of the Departments of the Government. If that bill can be allowed to be taken up I will agree to put it through within the time remaining without talking about it, for I have no desire to make a speech upon it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] will allow the bill to be passed for the claims allowed by the commissioners of claims.

Mr. DAWES. I have only one word to say, and then I leave the responsibility to the House. I shall feel that I have discharged my duty by bringing this matter before the House, and the House and the country will see, if my motion be defeated, how much easier it is to get money out of the Treasury than it is to get money into it. If we do not address ourselves persistently to the effort to pass some such bill as the one which I ask the House now to consider, the Treasury will fail to meet the demands upon it, and we shall force an extra session.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. How much debate does the gentleman from Massachusetts ask upon this bill?

Mr. DAWES. I have moved that general debate be limited to three hours.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Then I move to amend that motion so as to limit it to one and a half hours.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I want to say a word in reference to this tariff bill. I do not want that members who are interested in this question shall be deprived of an opportunity to be heard at all.

Mr. FIELD. Three hours is short enough time.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. ALBRIGHT; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. DAWES that general debate on the tariff bill be closed in three hours.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. In case the general debate be limited to three hours, will it be a debate between the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, or will other representatives of interests that are to be affected by this bill be heard?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about the debate in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. There are some of us who want an opportunity to present the interests of our constituents to the House.

Mr. DAWES. I will state what I know about the disposition to debate. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] has the floor. I understand that he does not intend to occupy a full hour. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, wants an hour, which he proposes to distribute among his friends on the other side of the House. To the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] I have promised half of the last hour, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] desires a few minutes. That is all I know about the disposition to debate the bill.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Well, that would leave no time for gentlemen who are interested in the bill who are not on the committee to discuss it at all.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DAWES to close debate; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. DAWES to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill; and on a division there were—ayes 56, noes 69.

Mr. DAWES. I feel it my duty to call for tellers on this question.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 96.

So the motion of Mr. DAWES was not agreed to.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I now call up the bill (H. R. No. 4692) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, reported from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BRADLEY. Does that bill make an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BRADLEY. Then I raise the point of order that it must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The Committee on War Claims was authorized to report this bill at any time.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but not for consideration in the House. The Committee on Appropriations is authorized to report bills at any time, but only for reference. This bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I then move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on this bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then I ask that the bill be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AVERILL] is entitled to a certain period allotted to him to submit reports from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Chair thinks that to-day that right could not be enforced, because the rules were suspended so as to bring before the House for consideration to-day the bill for the reorganization of the Treasury Department. The order in relation to the Committee on Indian Affairs does not hold good against a specific order made under a suspension of the rules.

EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill to give compensation to crippled doorkeepers and other employés of the House who have not been paid since the beginning of the session.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, making appropriations to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay fourteen disabled soldiers in the service of the House from December 7, 1874, to April 1, 1875, $6,000; five pages from December 7, 1874, to April 1, 1875, $1,450; six folders from July 1, 1874, to December 1, 1874, $3,400; and six colored laborers from December 7, 1874, to April 1, 1875, $1,400; the several amounts to be disbursed under the direction of the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 4730) was received, and read a first and second time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I sought to introduce this bill a few mornings since, and objection was made to it that three or four persons who had served during the whole term and had not been paid were not included in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to add four pages who are in a like condition.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are five pages included in the bill. The bill was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and the chairman of that committee [Mr. BUFFINTON] went over it carefully and put in all that should be included. The following letter from the clerk of the House of Representatives will explain the necessity for the bill:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1875.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry of yesterday, I have the honor to state that the following amounts will be required to pay the employés of the House named: For fourteen crippled soldiers from December 7, 1874, to March 5, 1875. . . $1,267 20
For four pages from December 7, 1874, to March 4, 1875. 880 00
For one page from January 1 to March 4, 1875. 157 50
For six colored laborers from December 7, 1874, to March 4, 1875. 1,049 46
Very respectfully,

CLINTON LLOYD,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

R. J. STEVENS, Esq.,
Clerk Committee on Appropriations.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed and referred to the Committee on War Claims a bill making appropriations for the payment of claims reported to Congress, under section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 16, 1874, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. Not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules that could not be done.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 4731) was received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING OF NATIONAL-BANK NOTES, ETC.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Banking and Currency a bill to provide for the engraving and printing of the national-bank notes and United States notes, and other securities of the United States, to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not object, upon the understanding that the bill is not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider, and that the minority shall have a right to submit their views.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 4732) was received, read a first and second time, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. MYERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4733) to return to the government of Japan one-half of the indemnity fund paid by that government to the United States under the convention of October 22, 1864, and to dispose of the balance of that fund; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PACKER. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report a bill to establish certain post-routes. There is no legislation whatever in the bill, and I ask that it may be considered and passed now.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 4734) was received, read three times, and passed.

Mr. PACKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HYGEIA HOTEL, FORTRESS MONROE, VIRGINIA.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe be taken from the Speaker's table, and that a verbal amendment of the Senate be concurred in. The bill as passed by the House, in referring to the joint resolution which limits and guards the rights of the Government, uses the number 226 instead of 46. The Senate has corrected that verbal error.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent reported back adversely from the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill (H. R. No. 164) to carry out certain Indian treaties and to organize the Territory of Oklahoma; and moved that the bill be laid on the table and the adverse report printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF NEW YORK DISTRICT JUDGES.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1294) to fix the salaries of the district judges of the northern and southern districts of New York was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

DEBTS DUE FROM SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1938) to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from southern railroads, and for other purposes," were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CHINA.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1609) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and China, concluded on the 8th day of November, 1858, at Shanghai," approved March 3, 1859, and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in certain cases; and moved that the bill be laid on the table and the report ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON, CINCINNATI AND SAINT LOUIS RAILROAD.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the president of the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company, asking aid from Congress for that road; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON WHISKY.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, against any increased or additional tax upon whisky; which were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. They are as follows:

CINCINNATI, February 13, 1875.

To Hon. MILTON SAYLER and Hon. H. B. BANNING:

The following unanimous action was taken to-day by the chamber of commerce on the whisky-tax bill.

C. M. HALLOWAY,
President, Chamber of Commerce.

Whereas a proposition has been made in the Congress of the United States to materially increase the internal taxes on the production of distilled spirits; and whereas this city's interests are seriously involved in this movement, this chamber of commerce would respectfully present to the members of the present Congress the following facts as justifying the earnest protest which we hereby make against proposed changes:

The movement of whisky at Cincinnati for the year ending September 1, 1874, according to the statistics of this chamber, reached 674,315 barrels; the value of which movement in and out of this city was $37,776,375. The production of spirits for the year in the three cities of Cincinnati, Covington, and Newport was 8,510,589 gallons, the article in its various forms contributing to the revenue of the Government in round numbers $6,000,000. This amount, $37,776,375, represents financial and industrial interests too serious to be lightly disturbed, whether as to local considerations or as to the collection of the revenue itself. The amount of tax paid into the Treasury of the United States by the first district of Ohio is over $5,000,000 annually; but when the whisky from other districts seeking a market here, as is shown by the foregoing statement, is taken into consideration, it will be seen that spirits having paid a tax of at least $11,000,000 pass through the hands of dealers here; and the stand taken here against fraudulent goods absolutely guarantees this amount of tax to the Government. The addition of thirty cents per gallon tax would, as will be seen from this, amount to a requirement that this city should bear the burden of supplying the money for nearly five millions additional taxes; and as all the better grades require age to be properly marketed, and goods are sold on time, it would demand at least $2,500,000 more capital; and as this money is sent directly away from the city, it would draw heavily on banking capital needed for other branches of business. It may be added that these statements would equally apply to the States of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois.

This chamber is persuaded that an increase of tax would encourage fraud in the collection of the revenue, by which increased burdens would be laid on those engaged in honest production, and by which it would become even problematical whether the aggregate revenue would be thereby increased, and that the legislation would be one peculiarly injurious to the interests of the West. This chamber would therefore enter its solemn protest against any change in the present law.

REIMBURSEMENT TO MARYLAND.

Mr. GUNCKEL, by unanimous consent, presented from the Committee on Military Affairs a report to accompany the bill (H. R. No. 4138) to reimburse the State of Maryland for arms and munitions of war taken from said State by the United States in 1861; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

CONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HURLBUT, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the Continental Railway Company, upon the subject of standard and narrow-gauge railways for general transportation purposes and as trunk lines; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

FLORIDA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. WALLS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4735) to amend the acts of Congress in relation to agricultural colleges, so as to extend the time within which the State of Florida may comply with the requirements of said act of Congress; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WALLS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be put on its passage now. It relates to the State of Florida only.

The bill was read. It provides that the conditions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and December 13, 1872, in relation to colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts be amended so as to extend the time for the location of said college and the other requirements of those acts to the State of Florida for two years from the approval of this act.

Mr. MONROE and Mr. KASSON. This bill should be referred to a committee.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair the bill, if referred, would properly go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MONROE. I move that reference, though I do not care whether it goes to that committee, or to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I hope the bill will be passed now. It is all right.

Mr. KASSON. It should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STORM. The Committee on Education and Labor have already had the subject under consideration.

The motion of Mr. MONROE to refer the bill to the Committee on Education and Labor was agreed to; and the bill was also ordered to be printed.

JOHN KIRK.

Mr. DANFORD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4736) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to give to John Kirk, late second lieutenant of Company E, of the Ninety-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, an honorable discharge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM SPRIGGS.

Mr. DANFORD also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4737) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to give to William Spriggs, late second lieutenant of Company H, One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, an honorable discharge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AARON A. TURNER.

Mr. FIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4738) for the relief of Aaron A. Turner, of Trenton, Michigan, for duties illegally collected on ship plank imported by him; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW LOUDERBACK.

Mr. BUNDY, by unanimous consent, introduced by a bill (H. R. No. 4739) granting a pension to Andrew Louderback, late of Company D, Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES J. WARING, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Mr. WALDRON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4246) for the relief of James J. Waring, Savannah, Georgia, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. COBURN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the following cases, and moved that they be referred to the Committee on War Claims; which motion was agreed to:

The petition of Ellen J. Brosman, of Washington, District of Columbia, for compensation for stock of goods taken by the Second Army Corps; and

The petition of William S. McKnight and James W. Richardson.

BILLS RELATING TO BANKING AND CURRENCY, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House, transmitting an index of bills introduced into the House from the First Congress to the Forty-second Congress, inclusive, relating to banks, currency, public debt, tariff, and direct taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEWIS HINELY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I have the honor to return herewith House bill 2332, entitled "An act granting a pension to Lewis Hinely;" from which I withhold my approval for the reasons given in the accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 12, 1875.

The message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

OREGON MILITARY WAGON-ROAD.

Mr. HANCOCK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back letters of the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to a military wagon-road in Oregon; and the same were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday, on the bill (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, upon which there were disagreeing votes between the two Houses, the House ordered a conference committee. The Chair announces as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. MACDOUGALL of New York, Mr. DONNAN of Iowa, and Mr. NESMITH of Oregon.

REORGANIZATION OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The House under a suspension of the rules ordered that the bill (H. R. No. 2978) to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes, should come up at this time.

Mr. KELLOGG. I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment in the form of a substitute which has been unanimously agreed to by the committee and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

That on and after July 1, 1875, the organization of the Treasury Department, and the several offices thereof, and the annual salaries paid to the persons therein, shall be as follows, namely:

In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury:

The Secretary, $8,000; two assistant secretaries, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; one chief of division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations, $3,000; seven chiefs of division, at $2,800 each; eight assistant chiefs of division, at $2,400 each; two disbursing clerks, at $2,800 each; twenty-five clerks of class four; stenographer to the Secretary, $2,400; twenty-six clerks of class three; twenty-one clerks of class two; eighteen clerks of class one; thirty-one clerks, at $900 each; eleven messengers; and eleven laborers; one clerk of class four and one clerk of class one, to assist the chief clerk in superintending the building; one captain of the watch, $1,400; one engineer, $1,600; one machinist and gas-fitter, $1,200; one store-keeper, $1,400; sixty watchmen, at $720 each, and, additional to two of said watchmen, acting as lieutenants of watchmen, $220 each; twenty-five laborers, at $720 each; one assistant engineer, $1,000; nine firemen, at $720 each; and ninety char-women, at $180 each.

In the Construction Branch of the Treasury:

Supervising Architect, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,500; one photographer, $2,500; one principal clerk, at $2,400; two clerks, at $2,000 each; one assistant photographer, at $1,600; two clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; two clerks of class one; two clerks, at $900 each; and one messenger.

In the office of the Commissioner of Customs:

The Commissioner of Customs, $4,500; deputy commissioner, $2,500; three chiefs of class four; seven clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; nine clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer.

In the office of the First Auditor:

The First Auditor of the Treasury, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; four chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; two clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; eight clerks of class two; thirteen clerks of class one; one messenger; and two laborers.

In the office of the Second Auditor:

The Second Auditor of the Treasury, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; five chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; six clerks of class four; thirty-five clerks of class three; seventy clerks of class two; forty-five clerks of class one; one messenger; and twelve laborers.

In the office of the Third Auditor:

The Third Auditor of the Treasury, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; five chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; six clerks of class four; twenty-five clerks of class three; seventy-five clerks of class two; forty clerks of class one; ten clerks, at $900 each; two messengers; seven laborers; and one char-woman, at $450.

In the office of the Fourth Auditor:

The Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; three chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; two clerks of class four; eighteen clerks of class three; eleven clerks of class two; ten clerks of class one; six clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and three laborers.

In the office of the Fifth Auditor:

The Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; two chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; two clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; five clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and two laborers.

In the office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department:

The Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; eight chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; eight clerks of class four, and additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk, $200; fifty-four clerks of class three; sixty-nine clerks of class two; thirty-seven clerks of class one; one messenger; and nineteen laborers; twenty assorters of money orders, at $1,000 each; also, fifteen female assorters of money orders, at $900 each.

In the office of the Register:

The Register of the Treasury, $4,000; one deputy register and one assistant register, at $2,500 each; seven clerks of class four; ten clerks of class three; fourteen clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; eight copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; and four laborers.

In the office of the Treasurer:

The Treasurer of the United States, $6,500; assistant treasurer, $3,800; cashier, $3,800; assistant cashier, $3,500; five chiefs of division, at $2,700 each; two principal book-keepers, one at $2,600 and one at $2,500; two tellers, one at $2,700 and one at $2,600; one chief clerk, at $2,700; two assistant tellers, at $2,350 each; thirteen clerks of class four; thirteen clerks of class three; nine clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; sixty clerks, at $900 each; seven messengers; five laborers, at $720 each; and seven laborers, at $240 each.

In the office of the Light-House Board:

The chief clerk of the Light-House Board, $2,500; two clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; one clerk of class two; one clerk of class one; one clerk at $900; one messenger; and one laborer.

In the office of the Comptroller of the Currency:

The Comptroller of the Currency, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $3,000; four chiefs of division, at $2,400 each; nine clerks of class four; fourteen clerks of class three; twelve clerks of class two; eleven clerks of class one; thirty-three clerks, at $900 each; four messengers; four laborers; and two night watchmen.

In the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; deputy commissioner, $3,500; seven heads of division, at $2,500 each; one stenographer, at $2,000; thirty clerks of class four; forty-two clerks of class three; fifty clerks of class two; eighteen clerks of class one; seventy clerks, at $900 each; five messengers; and fifteen laborers.

In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury:

SEC. 2. In the office of the Treasurer:

Seventeen clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; nine clerks of class one; one hundred and forty-five counters and copyists, at $900 each; nine messengers; and twenty-six laborers.

In the office of the Register of the Treasury:

Five chiefs of division, at $2,500 each; one disbursing clerk, at $2,000; twelve clerks of class four; twelve clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; five clerks of class one; one hundred counters and copyists, at $900 each; eight messengers; and six laborers.

In the office of the First Auditor of the Treasury:

Four clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; and two clerks of class one.

SEC. 3. That the duties heretofore prescribed by law and performed by the chief clerks in the several Bureaus named shall hereafter devolve upon, and be performed by, the several deputy comptrollers, deputy auditors, deputy register, and deputy commissioner herein named.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take over five minutes in explaining this bill, and not more than half that time if it can be done within so short a period. And if the House will give me its attention for from two to five minutes, I will try to explain what changes are made in the bill from the present organization of the Department.

There are really very few changes in salaries, except in those of the Auditors, which were fixed at $3,000 in 1799 and in 1817—the last of them, except the Sixth Auditor's, more than fifty years ago, and in the heads of divisions in the Comptrollers' and Auditors' offices. The salaries of those officers were then fixed at $3,000, while others then fixed at $1,500 and $2,000 have been raised to $4,500 and above that.

The Auditors I should say received $4,000 salary for several years. As long as we had the "slush fund" $1,000 was assigned to each of

All other clerks (each not exceeding)

By act of March 2, 1799, the heads of Departments were authorized to vary the compensation theretofore established for clerks, and a specific sum was appropriated for each Department as the aggregate of the clerk hire therefor; the average of each clerk not to exceed $500. This system continued for many years; Congress, however, increased this compensation by voting, yearly, an addition thereto of 15 per cent.

By the act of April 20, 1818, the salaries of clerks were established as follows:

	Per annum.
Chief clerks of Departments	$2,000
Chief clerks of Bureaus	1,700
	1,400
	1,150
Under clerks	1,000
	800

By act of March 3, 1853, the clerks of the Departments were classified, and their salaries fixed as follows:

	Per annum.
Chief clerks of Departments	$2,200
Chief clerks of Bureaus	2,000
Fourth-class clerks	1,800
Third-class clerks	1,600
Second-class clerks	1,400
First-class clerks	1,200

This is their present compensation.

The salary of Treasurer, originally $2,000, was raised to $3,000 in 1804; to $5,000 in 1862; and to $6,500 in 1866.

The only salaries that have remained stationary are those of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Auditors.

It will be noted that whenever new Bureaus have been created, since 1861, the salaries of their respective heads have been fixed at rates much above, and in one instance more than double, those of the heads of accounting Bureaus.

Chiefs of divisions have been authorized by law in the Internal Revenue Bureau at a compensation of $2,500 per annum, in the Treasurer's Office at $2,700 per annum and in the Register's Office at $2,500 per annum. It is now proposed to recognize chiefs of divisions in the several Bureaus of the Department at a compensation of from $2,100 to $2,400 each.

We have endeavored to make the different Auditor's Bureaus conform to other Bureaus in the recognition of divisions, and also the offices of the Comptrollers. There they have had chiefs of divisions for years, with only eighteen-hundred-dollar clerks, men of experience, who have been there ten, fifteen and twenty years. We fixed the salaries of the chiefs of divisions in the offices of the Comptrollers at $2,400, the same as the assistant chiefs of divisions in the Secretary's office; and in the offices of the Auditors at $2,100, which is certainly not too large for competent men. As the law now stands, you have chiefs of divisions in the Treasurer's office, at $2,700; in the internal-revenue branch, $2,500; five of them in the Register's office, at $2,500 a year each. And in that same Register's office they are under a chief clerk or deputy register, whose salary is only $2,000. We have raised that to $2,500, making his salary equal to the salaries of those five men who are under him. We have endeavored to remove the inequalities now existing between the different branches of the Departments so far as we could do it. We have given the subject a great amount of attention and labor, and I have here a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury thoroughly approving and indorsing the bill, and requesting that it may be passed. I will send up the letter to the Clerk's desk and have it read.

Mr. MERRIAM. I desire to ask the gentleman what is the actual reduction of salaries in the Treasury Department by his bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. The salaries we have changed are those of the Auditors and their chief clerks, whom we have made deputies, the chiefs of divisions, and a few others, and we have raised instead of reducing them; and we have reduced the force in the office of the Second Comptroller and other places, where we were satisfied that we could do it without injury to the public service, more than enough to counter-balance this increase—

Mr. MERRIAM. The gentleman has not answered my question. What I wish to know is the aggregate reduction of salaries by the action of this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have already stated the aggregate reduction as nearly $20,000. The exact figures of reduction below the appropriation bill we have already passed this session are $16,980, and more than $500,000 below what it was before last year—

Mr. MERRIAM. Let me ask the gentleman another question. This bill, as I understand it, proposes to make these changes take effect on the 1st of July. Does not that conflict with the provisions of the appropriation bill which has passed the two Houses?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say in reply to the gentleman that if this bill is passed soon enough, the necessary correction may be made in the appropriation bill.

Mr. TYNER. The appropriation bill is now before the conference committee, and there are amendments before the committee in connection with which changes such as the gentleman suggests can be made.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is true. But if too late for that bill, we can add a clause to any appropriation bill before we get through, providing that a sufficient sum of the amount appropriated shall be used in paying the amounts specified in this bill.

Mr. TYNER. But the gentleman was mistaken in saying that the saving would be $20,000. I find from the figures that it is only $16,980.

Mr. KELLOGG. I gave the exact figures, $16,980; but I said it was nearly $20,000. I did not of course mean to deceive the House. I send up to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington D. C., January 13, 1875.

SIR: I have carefully examined the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed to be submitted by Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to the bill (H. R. No. 2978) to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes, and fully approve of the same.

In view of the fact that many of the offices and clerkships of the Department are authorized from year to year by the annual appropriation bills, I deem it highly important that they should be provided for in the form of permanent statute, no reorganization of the Department having been made by law since 1853; and it is very desirable that the reorganization proposed in this bill should now be perfected.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

HON. STEPHEN W. KELLOGG,
Chairman Committee on Reform in the Civil Service,
House of Representatives.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. What provision is there in this bill in regard to the steamboat inspectors' division? Does it provide that there shall be a chief deputy, as there is in other divisions of the Treasury Department?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is provided for already by law or by an appropriation bill, as I understand it, and this bill does not affect it at all, for it makes no reference to it.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I understand that there is no such provision, and I understood that the Secretary of the Treasury had written to the gentleman from Connecticut, advising that such a provision should be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman wishes to make an amendment of that kind I shall not object to his offering it.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. That Department of the Government has charge of five thousand vessels, and inspects them, and has a revenue of $300,000; and no provision is made in this bill for any chief clerk or deputy. I understand that it is the desire of the Secretary of the Treasury that some such provision should be made.

Mr. KELLOGG. I was assured by Mr. Conant, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, that it was a proper thing to do, and I have no objection that such a provision be placed in this bill. The bill we have prepared relates to those officers who are provided for in the regular legislative and executive appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire, with the permission of the gentleman, to call attention to two or three aspects of this bill. Quite a number of salaries are raised by this bill, and I call attention to it that the House may come to a better understanding of the bill when they know precisely what salaries are raised. I understand that in the office of the First Comptroller there is a deputy comptroller provided for, when now there is only a chief clerk, and at an increased salary, a salary of $2,800, whereas the present clerk receives only $2,000. That is a larger salary than is now paid.

Mr. KELLOGG. We made that provision in order to remedy what would be an injustice, there being a deputy or assistant in the Treasurer's office, and one in the Internal Revenue office, and one in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency; and we give $2,800 to the deputy comptrollers, and $2,500 to the deputy auditors. We make it correspond with the legislation of late years in other Bureaus.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I only desire that the House may understand the bill and the details to which it applies. I understand that it applies, in the office of the Comptroller, to the deputy comptroller, whose salary is fixed at $2,800, and to the chiefs of division, whose salaries are fixed at $2,400, and who are now only fourth-class clerks, receiving a salary of $1,800. The deputy comptroller is now represented by the chief clerk, who has a salary of $2,000.

Now, if the gentleman will allow me further: In the office of the Commissioner of Customs, the salary of the chief clerk, who is made a deputy, is increased to $2,500. The same is the case in the offices of the Second, Third, and Fourth Auditors, and also in the office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department. In the office of the Register there is provided a deputy register and an assistant register, at $2,500 a year each, where there is now merely a chief clerk and assistant register, at a salary of $2,000 each.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to say that in the Register's office you have five divisions whose heads are paid $2,500 a year; and then there is an assistant register at only $2,000 salary, and a chief clerk at $2,000, who in the absence of the register and assistant register has control of the business of the office and the power of recommending removals over its employés. We have tried to equalize the salaries in these Bureaus as Congress has already done in the offices of the internal revenue collector and Register of the Treasury. Your assistant register and chief clerk now have $500 each less than their subordinates, which is all wrong.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I hope the gentleman does not understand me as saying that the salaries proposed are too large. What I want is that the House shall understand the provisions of this bill. In the office of the Light-House Board the salary of the chief clerk is raised from $2,000 to $2,500. In the office of the Comptroller of the Currency of the Treasury, a deputy comptroller is provided for, at a salary of $3,000, an office which does not now exist.

Mr. KELLOGG. I want to say that all the national-bank notes of the country pass through this Currency Bureau. You have a deputy comptroller there now—the gentleman is mistaken as to that point—and you compel him to give $50,000 bonds and pay him only $2,500 salary. There is no chief clerk there, but there is a deputy comptroller; and $3,000 a year is not too much for a person competent to fill so responsible a position.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. In that branch also there are four heads of divisions provided for at $2,400 each, who are now eighteen-hundred-dollar clerks.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; the same as in the Comptroller's Office; they have millions passing through their hands every year.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Can the gentleman state from any computation he has made—

Mr. KELLOGG. I want to say one word. I was satisfied there were places there where there were very poor clerks, who did not do full work. The Secretary of the Treasury, I think, was satisfied that he could get along with less force; but he wanted to keep the best men he had there, men of experience and ability, and who could not long be retained at the salary they are now receiving. We thought they ought to receive $2,400 each, and we have reported in favor of giving that sum. But the whole bill, with all these increases, involves the expenditure of about $17,000 less than we have already appropriated for this Department by the appropriation bill, which is now in committee of conference. That is to say, we have reduced the force, and we have so arranged it as to provide for having more work done.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How many clerks and employés have you cut off?

Mr. KELLOGG. We took out three from the Second Comptroller's office, three below what we appropriated for this session, and several more below what we appropriated for last year. Then we took out eleven from the Third Auditor's office, four from the Fifth Auditor's office, one from the Sixth Auditor's office, and thirteen from the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. That makes thirty-two in all.

Mr. KELLOGG. That makes thirty-two.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understand, then, that the increase of salaries as provided for in this bill is more than compensated by the reduction in the number of clerks and employés, leaving a balance to the credit of the Government of nearly $17,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Now, if we could be entirely sure that this reduction of clerks would be maintained hereafter, that they would not be put back again, as we at this session have had an effort made to put back some that we had dispensed with in other Departments by law, then this might be a very proper bill to pass. That doubt, however, is one worthy of consideration. However much we may try to reduce the force in any Department, it seems absolutely impossible to keep it down. We tried last year by reorganizing the War Department to reduce the force there. The bill that was brought in here for that purpose was accompanied by a statement, which on the face of it was true, that it would reduce the expenditures of the War Department $200,000. But I believe the Senate this year have put on the legislative appropriation bill the very force which we by that bill took out of the War Department.

Mr. KELLOGG. Only a part of it, in connection with the Surgeon-General's Office and Adjutant-General's Office, where it is found by experience that there was too great a reduction.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. But the most mischievous part of it; a provision that enlisted men might be employed as clerks, which means that you may enlist men as clerks.

Mr. KELLOGG. That was the old law; not so now. So far as this bill is concerned I pledge myself to the House that if it goes to a committee of conference and I happen to be on it I will not agree to any appropriation beyond what we have already appropriated this session in the legislative bill, and I think we can hold it there; we can keep it within the limits of the appropriation bills heretofore passed by the House.

Mr. FORT. Is this bill now open to amendment?

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman has any particular amendment to offer, I will hear it.

Mr. FORT. I wish to propose an amendment to reinstate a clerk that was left out by inadvertence in the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have inquired into that matter, and I find that none has been left out. The law provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall designate one of the chiefs of division as chief clerk. The number of divisions in that Bureau is put at seven, expressly to cover the one person referred to, if I am correctly informed.

Mr. FORT. I understand that there are seven heads of divisions already.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes, and the chief clerk is one of them. I will agree to support an amendment of that kind, if it is found necessary, and is put on in the Senate.

Mr. FORT. I am afraid that will be too late.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the bill passes at all, it will not be too late.

Mr. FORT. This clerk has been left out, as I am informed by him.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have made inquiry at the Department, and I have examined the law. If I am correctly informed, he is provided for as one of the seven heads of division. For that reason I hope my friend will not press the amendment. If I find hereafter that I am wrong, I will endeavor to do justice in this respect.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. How many in all of these chiefs of divisions with increased salaries, at the rate just brought out by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD,] does this bill provide for?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the gentleman that we have left the chiefs of divisions in the Secretary's office, in the Treasurer's office, in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and in the Register's office precisely as the Committee on Appropriations left them in the appropriation bill; we have made no change in them. We found that the Comptrollers and Auditors had heads of divisions, and had had them for years. While they had a slush fund they were paid like the others; but since then they have all been cut down to $1,800 clerks. We found it to be the fact that in many of these offices—in the Comptroller's office, in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and in other offices—there were men with years of experience who would find it impossible to continue in their places unless their salaries were increased. We have tried to equalize the matter by giving $2,400 heads of divisions to the office of the Comptroller and the Comptroller of the Currency; and $2,100 heads of divisions to the Auditor's office. I can give the gentleman the exact number if he wishes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That may be all extremely interesting and valuable for reflection; but I do not know (for I have not yet had time to examine the matter) how many chiefs of divisions in all with increased salaries of $2,500 or $2,800 are created by this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Not over eight at $2,400 in the two Comptrollers' offices, and none at $2,500 or $2,800.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Not over six or eight heads of divisions in all the Bureaus?

Mr. KELLOGG. Not over eight in the two Comptrollers' offices; and no heads of divisions created by this bill are to receive $2,500 or $2,800. That was the gentleman's question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. How many heads of divisions in all are created by this bill, whatever may be their salaries?

Mr. KELLOGG. There are eight in the two Comptrollers' offices who are to receive $2,400; there are also several in the Auditors' office who are to receive $2,100 each. The gentleman can count as well as I can.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have not studied this bill as the gentleman from Connecticut has done.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman has had plenty of time to study it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I would like to ask the gentleman how many salaries in all are raised by this bill? He ought to know more about it than I or anybody else in the House. He has been working at this matter for two years; and he always improves his time, as the House knows.

Mr. KELLOGG. There are somewhere about thirty-five or forty in all that are increased. Some in the Auditor's office are increased to $2,100. I have not the honor to be an old member, like my friend from Maine, or I might have had additional tables for his benefit.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman is just as old a member as I am.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not happen at any rate to be on the Appropriation Committee; and some men grow old a great deal faster than others on this floor. Of these thirty-five or forty increased salaries some twenty or more are in the Auditor's office, their salaries being fixed at $2,100—an increase of just $300 over the present salary, which was fixed long before the war—in 1853, when everything was on a gold basis. We now propose to increase those salaries of $1,800 to $2,100. Does my friend from Maine think the latter figure too high?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am afraid the gentleman will be a great deal older than he is before I get an answer to my question. Can the gentleman tell me the whole number of salaries raised anywhere in this bill—the exact number?

Mr. KELLOGG. I have already told the gentleman as nearly as I could without stopping to count them.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. How many?

Mr. KELLOGG. I told the gentleman between thirty-five and forty. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the House, as there is other business pressing—

Mr. CESSNA. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut one question before he closes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There are two or three further questions that I wish to ask. This is an important bill, and the gentleman is pushing it through very rapidly. The House ought certainly to understand it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly; and I think the House does understand it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does not this bill of the gentleman, which provides increased salaries, provide also in many cases for new officers—new designations by which officers shall be known?

Mr. KELLOGG. It does.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That being the case, when the bill passes will there not be these new offices to be filled by somebody?

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I wish the gentleman would explain why, if the bill creates new offices, there will not be new offices to be filled if the bill should pass.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman, before asking his question, had looked at the last three or four lines of the bill, he would have found this provision:

That the duties heretofore prescribed by law and performed by the chief clerks in the several Bureaus named shall hereafter devolve upon, and be performed by, the several deputy comptrollers, deputy auditors, deputy register, and deputy commissioner herein named.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That does not cover any particular person. Of course the duties performed by chief clerks and clerks, at salaries of $1,600 and $1,800, are to be performed by the persons who if this bill should ever pass will be known as heads of divisions. But the bill legislates nothing with reference to persons, and as I understand there is nothing to prevent every one of these thirty-five clerks now getting $1,600 and $1,800 a year from being displaced, so as to put in new men as heads of divisions. I ask the gentleman whether there is anything in this bill to prevent that?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly; and I will tell the gentleman why. It will be observed that wherever we have provided for heads of divisions, the number of eighteen-hundred-dollar clerks has been reduced. Wherever we have provided for a deputy we have made no provision for a chief clerk. At present by law these chief clerks are in some instances recognized; but wherever, during the last fifteen or twenty years Congress has created a Bureau—for instance, the Bureau of the Currency or the Bureau of Internal Revenue—we have invariably provided for a deputy instead of a chief clerk. For instance, the assistant register acts as Register in the absence of the Register, and we provide for a deputy instead of a chief clerk in the Bureaus. In this reorganization we have simply applied to the other Bureaus of the Treasury Department the same principle that has been adopted by Congress in its legislation of the last twenty years. We have omitted the office of chief clerk and put in a deputy instead.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Perhaps I can aid the gentleman in his comprehension of my question. In certain cases this bill abolishes the office of chief clerk and establishes heads of division, and I would like to know what becomes of the chief clerk when his office is abolished. Is he not out of office? What becomes of the new position of head of division if it is not to be filled?

Mr. KELLOGG. The chief of division has nothing to do with the chief clerk. It is the deputy who takes the place of the chief clerk; that is, instead of being called chief clerk, as now, he is hereafter to be called deputy; in other words, the chief clerk is to be called deputy, and there is no new position to be filled.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. But you do here in this bill make a chief of division.

Mr. KELLOGG. If you will examine the Comptrollers' and Auditors' Offices you will see that I have taken from the number of the higher class of clerks, that is, clerks receiving $1,800 a year, so as to make the number in the aggregate conform to the appropriation bill we have passed. So, then, in making these chiefs of division by the transfer of these eighteen-hundred-dollar clerks the gentleman must notice that there is only the same number of men you have already appropriated for.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not make any question in reference to the transfer of the eighteen-hundred-dollar clerks, but the gentleman does not yet see the point I am seeking to bring to his attention. It is a fact, I believe, that this legislation, according to the gentleman's own statement, will open up some thirty or forty places with increased salaries, into every one of which a new man may be put and the old clerks, good men, who have discharged the duties at lower rates and who still retain their places, may be left out entirely. I do not know that it will be done, but I have been trying to get the gentleman to tell us whether this bill does give us the power to do it.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Secretary will have the same power under this bill that he has now to remove a clerk who gets a salary of $1,800 a year or any other salary. He has the same right to turn out any one of these eighteen-hundred-dollar clerks and to put in a new man, and under this bill he has no more power and no less. It leaves him entirely with the same power which he now possesses.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The Secretary might hesitate, I can very well understand, to remove a clerk who now receives $1,800; but when you abolish one office and establish another and higher office, what I wish to know from the gentleman is whether new men will not be put into these higher offices established by this bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. There the gentleman is mistaken if he thinks the present Secretary would be likely to do such a thing. We have not by this bill abolished the office, but in every instance, as I have already stated, in every Bureau where we have made divisions, we have only provided for the promotion where it is deserved of the present officers. My friend will remember we reduced the number from sixty or seventy to thirty-two; that we fixed thirty-odd heads of divisions, but we have taken out of this bill so many eighteen-hundred-dollar clerks.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does the gentleman believe from his examination into these Departments that it is a good practice to divide and subdivide these small Bureaus, and to make so many heads of division? I can say for one, although I have not given so much time as the gentleman has to the investigation of this whole subject, that from my experience and observation in every small Bureau of every Department of the Government which starts simply as a Bureau it not only seeks to aggrandize in the number of offices, but in a little while seeks to subdivide; and over three, four, or five men will be found some one man who wishes to be called chief of division. I find in this bill in some Bureaus where the number of clerks is not more than thirty or forty, there will be three, four, or five subdivisions, with heads of divisions, at $2,000 or $2,500. My experience differs from that of the gentleman in this regard. I do not believe there is any necessity for dividing twenty-five, thirty, or forty clerks and putting three or four men over the subdivisions as heads of divisions, when a good clerk, with $1,800 or $2,000 a year, if you chose, is man enough to take care and see that the men under him properly discharge their duties.

Mr. KELLOGG. I believe I have yielded to the gentleman from Maine long enough. If he will turn to his Congressional Directory, pages 94 and 95, instead of saying that he does not believe in creating new divisions, he will find that I have reduced them in most cases from one-third to one-half in the number now existing in practice. At the close of Johnson's administration there were twenty-three divisions, which we reduced to twelve.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That was long ago.

Mr. KELLOGG. They were reduced to twelve last year. The bill reduces them to eight. If the gentleman from Maine will turn to page 95 of the Congressional Directory he will see that the Second Comptroller who now has eight is reduced to four, while the Commissioner of Customs who now has five is reduced to four.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman from Connecticut says that the Commissioner of Customs who now has five is reduced to four. While the other Bureaus have chiefs of divisions, I do not find the office of Commissioner of Customs, one of the oldest in the Government, one of the most important—I find the gentleman has not given that very important office a single chief of division. I am glad the gentleman has referred to that, for I might have forgotten it, so brief has been the scrutiny I have been able to give to this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I find I spoke of the wrong Bureau. I was referring to the Comptroller of the Currency. The Commissioner of Customs did not require chiefs of division, and none were given him. There are none given to him by this bill. It was the Comptroller of the Currency whom I had in my mind when I said Commissioner of Customs. We have not given divisions here except where they were actually called for, or existing in fact by usage. If the gentleman will take the Congressional Directory, where these divisions are classified, he will find I have reduced the number of divisions from one-third to one-half in all these Bureaus. On the other hand, there are some of the most important men in the Department whose salaries were fixed fifty-odd years ago and which ought to be increased, the justice of which has been recognized by every Committee on Appropriations. I have endeavored to do justice by all the Bureaus and branches.

Mr. CESSNA. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let the gentleman answer me one question, and I think I will stop then. Why is it that the gentleman has found it necessary in some of these Bureaus with just about the same force as in the office of the Commissioner of Customs to give three and four sub-divisions with heads of division, while in the office of the Commissioner of Customs with twenty-nine clerks he does not give a single sub-division or a single chief of division?

Mr. KELLOGG. None was called for there, and my friend knows that there is not such a variety of matters before the Commissioner of Customs as there is in some of the other Bureaus. His work is all confined to the customs. But take for example the Third Auditor's Office, which has to deal with pensions, war claims, quartermasters' accounts, and a great variety of other accounts. These divisions are necessary. We have simply tried to do justice to the best men in the various Bureaus.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. When the gentleman says that he did not do this in this particular Bureau because it was not called for, does he mean that he did not do it because the head of the Bureau did not insist before the committee that it should be done.

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Or does he mean to intimate that these heads of divisions have been created where there was most importunity?

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all. We took the divisions where we found them existing and said to the heads of the Bureaus, "Can you consolidate the divisions?" We inquired if it could be done, and in the Second Comptroller's Office we consolidated them into four; perhaps too small a number; and so in the office of the Third Auditor and elsewhere we consolidated the divisions, making them one-half or two-thirds the number they were before.

Mr. CESSNA. Now I want to ask the gentleman some very brief questions. The first question I desire to submit to him is what he has done or proposed to do with reference to the Bureau of Statistics?

Mr. KELLOGG. The Bureau of Statistics has been left out of this bill in reference to the Committee on Appropriations of this House for them to determine whether they would keep the old Bureau or create a new one to be called the Bureau of Statistics and Commerce.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman from Connecticut seems to be undergoing a civil-service examination.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is so; and I propose to pass it the best I can, but would like to get through with it soon.

Mr. CESSNA. As I understand, the Committee on Appropriations, which hitherto has made a provision for that Bureau, has at this time omitted it entirely. It is omitted in this bill, and is left to depend on some future action by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KELLOGG. The law will stand as it is now if there be no action taken. If the new provision pending in the committee of conference is adopted the intention is to ask the Senate to put it on the bill there. I should not of course venture or presume to interfere with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CESSNA. I have another question to ask the gentleman. Does he not think that this bill does great injustice to the Register of the Treasury?

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all; it leaves his salary untouched; unless you think it ought to be raised.

Mr. CESSNA. Does the gentleman not know that all the incumbents of that office prior to the present incumbent have received $1,000 in addition to their salaries for signing bonds, and that in the conscientious discharge of his duties the present incumbent of the office declined to receive that additional $1,000, while he was all the time performing the duties for which other men have received $5,000 and $6,000? This bill only gives the Register of the Treasury $4,000, while his predecessors have been allowed $5,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the gentleman offer an amendment? I think the Register never had $5,000.

Mr. CESSNA. I will offer an amendment very readily if the gentleman will help me to carry it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will yield for the gentleman's amendment, if he desires to offer it, before I call the previous question.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I also desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CESSNA. I offer the following amendment:

In line 117 strike out "$4,000" and insert "$5,000;" so that it will read, "The Register of the Treasury, $5,000."

Mr. KELLOGG. I will admit that amendment that the House may act on it.

Mr. CESSNA. Now, I desire to say right there—

Mr. KELLOGG. How many amendments are in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have each amendment voted on as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA.]

Mr. SPEER. That amendment should not prevail unless the law under which previous Registers of the Treasury received an extra $1,000 for signing bonds is repealed; because if a less conscientious incumbent occupied that office hereafter, he might construe the law differently and get the $1,000 in addition to this increased salary.

Mr. CESSNA. I will accept an amendment that this may be repealed at any time.

Mr. SPEER. It should be provided in the amendment that this addition should not be made to the increased salary.

Mr. CESSNA. That is all the Register will receive, and all he has received, while the Treasurer of the United States gets $6,000, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue $6,000, the Comptroller of the Currency $5,000, and the First and Second Comptrollers each $5,000.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. CESSNA, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. COBURN. I offer the following amendment: To insert after the word "dollars" in line 150, in the clause relating to the Internal Revenue Bureau, "deputy commissioner, $3,000."

I will state the object of that amendment. Under the present law there are two deputy commissioners, but this bill proposes to abolish one of them. The deputy commissioner whose office it is proposed to abolish has charge principally of the banking department of the Internal Revenue Bureau. I send to the Clerk's desk the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and ask to have read the passage which I have marked, showing that this officer has saved to the Government millions of dollars. It is an important branch of the service, and I desire the Clerk to read the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Of the tax against banks and bankers, which remained unchanged by law, there was collected during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873—

Capital	$736,950 65
Circulation	24,778 62
Deposits	1,835,993 20
	$2,597,721 96

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1874:

Capital	916,878 15
Circulation	16,738 26
Deposits	2,067,118 77
	3,000,735 18

Showing an increase of 403,013 22

It is believed that this increase may, in a great degree, be fairly attributed to the new system of assessment, as the period in which the increase occurs includes the fall of 1873, memorable for the great financial disasters which occurred at that time. This opinion is further sustained from the circumstance that during this year more than seventy banks have been for the first time assessed, although doing business and liable to be assessed during previous years.

Mr. COBURN. The House will perceive that the Commissioner himself attributes a large increase in the receipts from this branch of taxation to the efforts of this deputy who has it in charge. I hold in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 15, 1875.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 13th instant inquiring whether the interests of the internal-revenue service will admit of the reduction of the force of this Bureau proposed by the bill for the reorganization of the Treasury Department introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. KELLOGG on the 18th of January last. I beg to say that the number of officers and employees belonging to this Bureau cannot, in my judgment, be further diminished with advantage either to the service or the Treasury; the work now devolving upon them being so great as to occupy their full time besides requiring many of them to be present in their respective divisions at night for the transaction of urgent business; and in view of the fact that this work, so far from being decreased, is likely to be increased by projects of law looking to an increase of the revenues of the Government, now under consideration in Congress, I venture to express the hope that neither the diminution of my force proposed by the bill in question, nor any diminution, will be made.

As to the proposed abolition of the office of second deputy commissioner of internal revenue, I need only say that I regard the marked increase of the amount of tax collected from banks and bankers other than national as largely attributable to the special experience in that line of business of the gentleman now holding that office, and should greatly regret the loss of his services.

Very respectfully,

J. W. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN COBURN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. COBURN. The House will perceive from the reading of that letter that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue regards the system that has been adopted by this officer as of the very best character, and regards the services of this officer as of the highest importance. I have only to indorse what has been said by the Commissioner. There is no more able, efficient, or better officer to be found within the entire range of those employed in the Treasury Department. It strikes me that it would be a public disaster if he should be removed or that his position should be abolished. A large amount of labor and attention is constantly required to supervise the operations of the bank commissioners, and that letter which I sent to the Clerk's desk and had read states that this officer is employed sometimes long after sundown and far into the night in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Speaker, I have no fault to find with the service performed by the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Indiana refers, and I shall allow that amendment to be pending. But I wish to say that we formerly had three deputies in this office at the rate of $3,000 a year each for two of them and one at $3,500. At the suggestion and upon the report of our committee one of these offices was abolished last session and $3,000 saved; and I am entirely satisfied from inquiries I have made that we now need only one deputy commissioner, and can save another $3,000. I therefore reported a bill providing for only one deputy commissioner, at a salary of $3,500 a year. I left out two deputies because I thought that one deputy commissioner was enough, and I think the Secretary of the Treasury, though I do not quote him on that point, would say that one is enough. Nevertheless I will allow the amendment to be considered as pending, and I must now call the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I withdraw the call for the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I offer the following amendment:

Provided, That on and after January 1, 1876, the patronage of this Department shall be so arranged as to be equally distributed between the several States of the United States, according to population.

Mr. KELLOGG. That would be a difficult proposition to carry out, but I will admit it.

Mr. HUBBELL. I would ask the gentleman from Connecticut if this bill does not create new offices which are to be filled by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. KELLOGG. They are all so filled now.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is it not a proposition for the Secretary of the Treasury to remove men of long standing and good service in the Department and supply their places with new men?

Mr. KELLOGG. If my friend from Michigan thinks the present Secretary of the Treasury would do that, he does not know him; but the object of this bill is for the very purpose of providing that men of long standing in the service and valuable in their place shall be properly compensated for their services.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is not a bill allowing the Secretary such power as that a good bill to come from a Committee on Reform in the Civil Service?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is just the right kind of reform.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I desire to explain my amendment. I find on referring to the Blue Book that the appointments and other patronage of this Department are almost entirely absorbed by Massachusetts and three or four of the other States. I believe this is not only very unjust, but very ungenerous, and calculated to produce great injury to the public service. The benefits of the Federal Government should be conferred equally upon all the States of the Union, as the responsibilities are shared by all. I for one shall never be satisfied until I see my State fully, according to her population, represented in the Army, the Navy, and in every Department and branch of the Government. I shall hope to see the provisions of this amendment prevail in all of the Departments, and in the short time in which I have to remain in this House I shall lose no opportunity to have such a provision placed upon every appropriation bill that comes before the House. The manner in which the public patronage is now distributed is in my opinion calculated to produce great dissatisfaction and discontent throughout the country. There are certain States of this Union whose names are rarely to be seen on the rolls of the Army and the Navy, and in fact all of the branches of the public service. My State is one of them. Sir, these offices and places belong to the people of all the States, and I trust the day is near at hand when Congress will take hold and regulate this matter. I hope the amendment which I have offered will receive the sanction of the House.

Mr. TYNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KELLOGG. Let there be a vote on the amendments which are now pending.

Mr. FORT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. YOUNG] that he should make some provision in his amendment in regard to the District of Columbia. It now has a large representation in the Departments, as it should have. I believe the State of Massachusetts has more persons appointed in the Treasury Department than any other three States of the Union. I have no objection to that.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I will include the District of Columbia in my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] to provide for a deputy commissioner of internal revenue at a salary of $3,000, in addition to the one provided for by the bill at $3,500.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment of Mr. COBURN; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, noes 54; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COBURN and Mr. KELLOGG were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 32, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That on and after January 1, 1876, the patronage of this Department shall be so arranged as to be equally distributed between the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia, according to population.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. What does the gentleman from Georgia mean by "patronage?"

Mr. FORT. I suggest to the gentleman to use the word "appointments" instead of "patronage."

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I will do that.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. And also to include the Territories.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I will do that too. This amendment, if adopted, will give the Secretary of the Treasury one year to provide for carrying it into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FIELD. I move to amend the paragraph in relation to the Comptroller of the Currency by reducing the salary of the Comptroller of the Currency from $5,000 to $4,000, the same as the Auditors receive.

Mr. KELLOGG. His salary was fixed at $5,000 when the office was created, and it is too responsible a position to be cut down in salary. His bond is $100,000.

Mr. FIELD. The Comptroller of the Currency has not one-half the responsibility that one of the Auditors has, and I do not think he should have more pay.

The amendment of Mr. FIELD was not agreed to; upon a division there were ayes 28, noes not counted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I now call the previous question upon the bill and the substitute as amended.

Mr. TYNER. Would a motion be in order to strike out the enacting clause of the bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. We are not in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The House is considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TYNER. If the motion is in order, I will make it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let us have a square vote on this bill.

Mr. TYNER. That is precisely what I want to do. I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

The motion of Mr. TYNER was not agreed to; upon a division there were ayes 15, noes not counted.

The question recurred upon seconding the call for the previous question; and being taken, the previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

The substitute, as amended, was adopted; and the bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. TYNER. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 92.

So (one-fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 30, not voting 79; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DURHAM said: My colleague, Mr. ARTHUR, is necessarily absent from the House upon the committee of arrangements for the funeral of Mr. HOOPER.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. KELLOGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations and to confirm existing leases.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 4324) to authorize the change of the name of the Second National Bank of Jamestown, New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri; and

An act (H. R. No. 4626) authorizing the Citizens' National Bank of Sanbornton, New Hampshire, to change its name.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce a bill (H. R. No. 4740) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JAMES SINCLAIR, DECEASED.

On motion of Mr. NESMITH, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 940) granting 641.64 acres of land to the widow and heirs of James Sinclair, deceased, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

SENECA NATION OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

Mr. SESSIONS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments, and that the fourth section of the bill be stricken out and the following be inserted: "All leases of land situate within the limits of said villages when established as hereinbefore provided, except those provided for in the second section of this act, in which Indians of said Seneca Nation, or persons claiming under them, are lessors, shall be valid and binding upon the parties thereto, and upon said Seneca Nation, for a period of five years from and after the passage of this act, except such as by their terms may expire at an earlier date; and at the end of said period, or at the expiration of such leases as terminate within that time, said nation, through its councilors, shall be entitled to the possession of the said lands, and shall have the power to lease the same: Provided, however, That at the expiration of said period, or the termination of said leases, as hereinbefore provided, said leases shall be renewable for periods not exceeding twelve years, and the persons who may be at such time the owner or owners of improvements erected upon such lands, shall be entitled to such renewed leases, and to continue in possession of such lands, on such conditions as may be agreed upon by him or them and such councilors; and in case they cannot agree upon the conditions of such leases or the amount of annual rents to be paid, then the said councilors shall appoint one person and the other party or parties shall choose one person as referee to fix and determine the terms of such lease and the amount of annual rent to be paid; and if the two so appointed and chosen cannot agree, they shall choose a third person to act with them, the award of whom or the major part of whom shall be final and binding upon the parties; and the person or persons owning said improvements shall be entitled to a lease of said land and to occupy and improve the same according to the terms of said award, he or they paying rent and otherwise complying with the said lease or said award; and whenever any lease shall expire after its renewal as aforesaid, it may, at the option of the lessee, his heirs and assigns, be renewed in the manner hereinbefore provided."

And the House agree to the same.

The committee of conference further recommend for the consideration of the two Houses that the first section of the bill be stricken out, and that the following be inserted: "That all leases of land within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations in the State of New York heretofore made by or with the authority of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians."

B. W. HARRIS,
W. L. SESSIONS,
A. COMINGO,

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN J. INGALLS,
W. B. ALLISON,
LEWIS V. BOGY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SENNER. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SESSIONS] whether this is the same report that was recommended in the Senate yesterday because it undertook to interfere with legislation that was not in dispute between the two Houses?

Mr. SESSIONS. That has been corrected by the committee of conference, who have unanimously agreed upon this report.

The report was agreed to.

ESAU PICKRELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4741) for the relief of Esau Pickrell and the legal representatives of William H. Eades, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. COTTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4742) donating condemned cannon to the county of Muscatine, Iowa, for monumental purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, presented a remonstrance of manufacturers and dealers in tobacco, of Richmond, Virginia, against any increase of tax on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, manufacturers and dealers in tobacco of Richmond, Virginia, would very respectfully but earnestly petition your honorable bodies to make no advance on the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, for the following among many other reasons which could be given:

First. Tobacco, on the average value of the entire amount which enters into consumption, is now more heavily taxed than any other article, either of domestic or foreign production.

Second. The great preponderance of this tax falls upon the laboring portion of the community, the consumers of cheap tobacco, who not only pay the tax but about 50 per cent. additional caused by the expense of packing in accordance with the requirements of law, and the interest upon the tax which is paid in advance.

Third. It must be apparent, from the repeated action of the House of Representatives to abolish all tax upon leaf-tobacco for consumption, that under the general reduction of wages which now exists, a large class of consumers severely feel the burden of this great tax upon an article of home production and which is indispensable to them.

Fourth. The revenue now obtained from tobacco far exceeds in amount that which was contemplated by Government during the highest days of taxation, when the currency and all business was greatly inflated; and when it is remembered that every reduction of this tax resulted in increased revenue, is it not fair to believe that in view of all these evils and difficulties, an advance of the tax now would fail to enrich the Treasury.

Pilkinton & Co., George S. Prince, W. J. Yarbrough & Sons, L. H. Frayser & Co., Thos. C. Williams & Co., James Thomas, Jr., R. A. Patterson & Co., John K. Childrey, A. M. Lyon & Co.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to present a privileged report. The Committee on Elections, who were authorized to report at any time upon this subject, have directed me to report back without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) proposing an amendment of the Constitution in respect of the election of President and Vice-President.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. They were authorized to report at any time.

Mr. HARRISON. I will simply allude to the importance of the question now brought before the House of Representatives, and to the necessity there seems to be for some action on the part of Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the joint resolution be read before discussion begins.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment of the Constitution in respect of the election of President and Vice-President.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution, to wit:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The President and Vice-President shall be elected by the direct vote of the people in the manner following: Each State shall be divided into districts, equal in number to the number of Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress, to be composed of contiguous territory, and to be as nearly equal in population as may be; and the person having the highest number of votes in each district for President shall receive the vote of that district, which shall count one Presidential vote; but no voter in any State shall vote for candidates for President and Vice-President who are both citizens in the same State with himself.

SEC. 2. The person having the highest number of votes for President in a State shall receive two presidential votes from the State at large.

SEC. 3. The person having the highest number of presidential votes in the United States shall be President.

SEC. 4. If two persons have the same number of votes in any State, it being the highest number, they shall receive each one presidential vote from the State at large; and if more than two persons shall have each the same number of votes in any State, it being the highest number, no presidential vote shall be counted from the State at large. If more persons than one shall have the same number of votes, it being the highest number in any district, no presidential vote shall be counted from that district.

SEC. 5. The foregoing provisions shall apply to the election of Vice-President.

SEC. 6. The Congress shall have power to provide for holding and conducting the elections of President and Vice-President. The returns of such elections shall be made to the Supreme Court of the United States within thirty days after the election. Said court shall, under such rules as may be prescribed by law, or by the court in the absence of law, determine any contest in respect of such returns, canvass the same, and declare, within ninety days after such election, by public proclamation, who is elected President and who is elected Vice-President.

Sec. 7. The States shall be divided into districts by the Legislatures thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter the same.

Sec. 8. No person who has been a justice of the Supreme Court shall be eligible to the office of President or Vice-President.

Mr. LAMAR. I rise to inquire of the Chair how this report comes in?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HARRISON] makes the report from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. LAMAR. Does it come from the committee without any dissent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot know anything in reference to that.

Mr. LAMAR. I ask to get the information from the right quarter; and I also wish to make the statement that there is a minority of the Committee on Elections who dissent from the views presented in this report and the measure it proposes, and have reserved the privilege of submitting to the House their views in opposition thereto. I have been in bad health for the last few days and have not been able to prepare any report on the part of the minority. If the question is not called up for consideration within the next few days, I may do so yet if my health will permit. I am now just out of a sick bed and have only come here to attend a funeral ceremony.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that there is a minority report signed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] chairman of the committee. The majority of the committee have directed me to make the report, which recommends the adoption of the joint resolution the Clerk has just read. The minority of the committee recommend changes in the joint resolution, which I understand are to be offered in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. LAMAR. There are other members dissenting not only from the views of the majority but from the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. POTTER. It is a minority opposed to any change of the Constitution.

Mr. LAMAR. Yes, sir, opposed to any change, but most especially to those changes proposed, as fraught with the gravest mischiefs. Does the chairman of the committee call this matter up for action at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is reported regularly from the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. It is reported regularly but it has not been printed.

Mr. HARRISON. The joint resolution was presented two weeks ago, and was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to say, as one member of the Committee on Elections, that I was not present when this matter was considered, and therefore do not wish to be bound by the report of the committee or by the joint resolution itself read at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. As the hour has nearly approached for the funeral ceremonies, business had better be dropped at this point and the seats intended for Senators vacated.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will this be the first business in order when we next go to business?

The SPEAKER. It comes up to-morrow as unfinished business after the reading of the Journal.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1012) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont; and Joint resolution (S. No. 15) authorizing Thomas W. Fitch, engineer, of the United States Navy, to accept of a wedding present sent to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch.

EASTERN BRANCH OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. AVERILL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 15, 1870, a report in relation to the duty of the district attorneys and Attorney-General of the United States to institute and prosecute suits against the present and former agents of the eastern branch of the Cherokee Indians; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BUFFINTON, on account of ill health, was granted indefinite leave of absence.

HON. WILLIAM J. PURMAN, OF FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from the Clerk:

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1875.

SIR: The secretary of state of Florida informs me by telegraph, in reply to an inquiry made of him by me, that Hon. WILLIAM J. PURMAN resigned his seat in the Forty-third Congress on the 25th of January, 1875.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD MCPHERSON,
Clerk House of Representatives, United States.

HON. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Upon this statement the Chair directs the name of Mr. PURMAN be stricken from the roll. It is the only notification the House has had of his resignation officially.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. MOREY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill (S. No. 38) for the better regulation of the United States courts in Louisiana as reported from the Committee on the Judiciary shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SENER. I object.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF MR. HOOPER.

At two o'clock the members of the Senate, preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by the President pro tempore and Secretary, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, entered the Hall, and were conducted to the seats assigned them.

At ten minutes past two the casket containing the remains of the deceased Representative was brought into the Hall, preceded by the Chaplain of the House and the committee of arrangements and followed by the relatives of the deceased and the Senators and Representatives from Massachusetts.

The Chaplain of the House, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., read appropriate selections from the Scriptures.

Rev. Dr. ADDISON, rector of Trinity church, Washington, District of Columbia, offered the following prayer:

O almighty Lord, who art a most strong tower to all those who put their trust in Thee to whom all things in heaven, in earth, and under the earth do bow and obey, be now and evermore our defense, and make us know and feel that there is none other name under heaven given to men in whom and through whom we may receive help and salvation but only the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Most just art Thou, O God, in all Thy dealings with us, and our punishment is less than our sins deserve. We adore Thy majesty; we revere Thy justice; we magnify Thy mercies.

Sanctify to the bereaved family this afflictive dispensation of Thy providence. May the lively sense of the bereavement which they have sustained lead them to cleave more closely to Thee their God. In all their troubles may their whole trust and confidence be placed in Thy mercies. Awakened by this visitation of Thy providence to a deep sense of the uncertainty and vanity of human life, may they resolve to seek supremely those things which are above, to resign themselves and all their concerns to Thy disposal, and in the fullness of resignation to say with the holy Job, the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. In the instance of mortality before us Thou dost solemnly teach us that death is the end of all men. Grant us who are living grace to lay it to heart; so to lay it to heart as to live above the world, to seek Thy favor, to study Thy will, to observe Thy law, and in all our actions to aim at Thy glory, at the salvation of our own souls and the souls of our fellow-men. And when we go the way of all the earth, may Thy presence go with us, to sustain and comfort us, and to lead us to a rest eternal in the heavens.

Spare us, good Lord! Spare us, O merciful Father, till we have truly repented of our sins and made our peace with Thee. For Thy Son Jesus Christ's sake forgive us our sins. For His sake turn away Thine anger from us. Enter not into judgment with us, but after the multitude of Thy mercies look upon us and visit us with Thy salvation. Quicken us, Almighty God, from the death of sin unto a new and holy life, that, being partakers of the death of Thy Son, we may also be partakers of His resurrection of perfect and endless bliss, both in body and soul, in Thy heavenly kingdom. And may the good examples of all those who have departed this life in the true faith of Thy holy name and the hope of their eternal blessedness excite us to press with the more earnestness toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

O God, whose days are without end and whose mercies cannot be numbered, make us, we beseech Thee, deeply sensible of the shortness and uncertainty of human life, and let Thy Holy Spirit lead us through this vale of misery in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives, that when we shall have served Thee in our generation we may be gathered unto our fathers, having the testimony of a good conscience, in the union of the Catholic Church, in the confidence of a certain faith, in the comfort of a reasonable, religious, and holy hope, in favor with Thee our God, and in perfect charity with the world. All which we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Listen to us mercifully, O Lord, in these our supplications and prayers, and dispose the way of Thy servants to the attainment of everlasting salvation, that among all the chances and changes of this mortal life they may ever be defended by thy most gracious and ready help, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Lord bless us and keep us, the Lord make His face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us, the Lord lift up His countenance upon us and give us peace, both now and evermore. Amen.

The Chaplain of the House announced that the services would be concluded at Oak Hill Cemetery.

The remains were then removed, followed by the Massachusetts delegation, the committee of arrangements, and the relatives and friends of the deceased, to be conveyed to Oak Hill Cemetery; and the President of the United States and members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, and the members of the Senate retired from the Hall.

And then, on motion of Mr. SCOFIELD, (at two o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLAINE: Petitions of the Methodist Episcopal church of North Yarmouth, Maine, and of citizens of Fairfield, Maine, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDWELL: The remonstrance of Willard Warner and others, of Alabama, against the imposition of duties on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COX: Several remonstrances of tobacco manufacturers and dealers in the city of New York, against an advance in the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, to the same committee.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of V. D. Stockbridge, for an appropriation of $3,000 for the transfer to the Patent Office of the copyright and remaining copies of his digest of patents relating to breech-loading fire-arms from 1836 to 1873, inclusive, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HAGANS: The petition of Riley H. Smith, of Tyler County, West Virginia, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey: The petition of the New Jersey State Temperance Alliance, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAMPORT: The petition of the Easton Monthly Meeting of Friends and of Good Templars, and other citizens of Easton, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. LOWE: Resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in reference to Louisiana affairs, to the select committee on that portion of the President's message relating to the condition of the South.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, memorializing Congress to grant to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad right of way through the Indian Territory to Fort Smith, Arkansas, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MORRISON: The petition of the heirs and legal representatives of John Rice Jones, deceased, concerning unsatisfied private land claims in the State of Illinois, to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. SAWYER: The petition of C. R. Gallet, mayor, and 197 citizens of Portage City, Wisconsin, asking, in the interest of cheap transportation, that appropriations be made to complete the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers within four years, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of Appleton, Wisconsin, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SCUDDER, of New York: The petition of citizens of New York, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: Paper relating to the claim of Dr. J. N. Powell, of Henrico County, Virginia, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STANARD: Resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri, protesting against further tax on tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STORM: The memorial of manufacturers and importers of and dealers in drugs, perfumery, &c., praying Congress to repeal Schedule C of the internal-revenue laws, to the same committee.

By Mr. WALLS: Papers relating to the claim of Mrs. Caroline Clark, of Fernandina, Florida, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER: The petition of the trustees of the Saint Regis Indians of New York, for the donation of a flag, cannon, &c., to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WHITELEY: The petition of A. Burgess, for an addition to the Army appropriation bill of an item for the trial by the Ordnance Department of the Burgess magazine arms, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 633) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 1283) for the relief of Thomas Day, of Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 2689) for the relief of Emille Lapage, surviving partner of the firm of Lapage Brothers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2688) for the relief of Albert F. Yerby, administrator of Addison O. Yerby, deceased, or whom it may concern;

A bill (H. R. No. 2690) for the relief of Mark Davis; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the relief of Mrs. Flora A. Darling, of New Hampshire.

The bill (H. R. No. 4727) explanatory of the act passed June 20, 1874, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. No. 4001) to provide for the redemption of overdue bonds of the United States known as Texas indemnity bonds, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I suggest that that bill go to the Committee on Claims. It is a claim of the State of Texas against the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of communication from Captain J. B. Campbell, commanding Sitka, Alaska, in regard to the illicit traffic in liquor in Alaska, for consideration in connection with the letters of the 3d ultimo and 4th instant, relative to the arrest of John A. Carr and the sale of liquor in Alaska; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a petition of a great number of citizens of Northern Dakota, praying that in the contemplated division of that Territory the city of Fargo, on the Red River, may be made the capital of Pembina; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of physicians of Minnesota, asking for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COOPER presented a petition of physicians of Tennessee, in behalf of the Medical Corps of the Army, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of that corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a memorial of citizens of Bridgeton, New Jersey, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties upon foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I present also the petition of manufacturers and importers and of wholesale and retail dealers in drugs, perfumery, &c., asking the repeal of that part of the internal-revenue law known as Schedule C, by which a tax collected by stamps is imposed on articles in which they deal, giving for a reason that all other taxation on manufactures is repealed; that the tax is vexatious and involves unnecessary expenditure and loss; that the law is deficient in precision, and is the occasion of entrapping dealers. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN presented a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in relation to the Ridgeway Battery; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TIPTON presented a petition of members of the Nebraska State Medical Society, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SCOTT presented three petitions, of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that in consequence of the prevailing prostration of all branches of business and the increasing distress throughout the country a bill be passed in aid of the speedy completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad now pending before Congress; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Blair County, Pennsylvania, praying that the aid of the national credit be extended to the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition signed by the workmen of the Lochiel Iron-Works, near Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, praying that the aid of the national credit be extended to the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, praying the passage of the bill in aid of the speedy completion of the Texas Pacific Railroad now pending before Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Blandon, Berks County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WEST presented a petition of the medical faculty of the State of Louisiana, asking for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of Mrs. Catherine M. Pritchard, of New Orleans, Louisiana, praying to be paid certain rentals, costs of repairs, &c., upon her property in New Orleans occupied by the United States during the rebellion, or that her claim for the same be referred to the commission of claims or to the United States Court of Claims for adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, presented a memorial of the physicians and surgeons of the Connecticut Medical Society, in behalf of the Medical Corps of the Army, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of that corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FLANAGAN presented a petition of citizens of Texas, praying for the establishment of a post-route from the town of Longview, Gregg County, to Clarksville, Red River County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of John F. Henry and others, manufacturers and importers of drugs and perfumery, praying the repeal of Schedule C of the internal-revenue law, imposing a stamp tax on articles prepared by them; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAYTON presented nine petitions of members of the medical profession of the State of Arkansas, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY, (Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, in the chair.) The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, giving an account of the property belonging to the United States in his possession, have instructed me to report back the same and recommend that the report be printed. This I do for the same reason that we recommended the printing of the other lists of the same kind, because our democratic friends are afraid that mischief will happen if it is not done, not because I think it is of any use, but they seem to think it is.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print one thousand copies of the President's message on Louisiana affairs for the use of the Senate, have instructed me to report back the same and recommend the adoption of the resolution. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That one thousand extra copies of the message of the President in response to the resolution of the Senate relating to the employment of the Army in Louisiana be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1303) to authorize the board of audit of the District of Columbia to receive, audit, and adjust certain claims for damages by reason of the change of grade of Pennsylvania avenue, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 534) to pay Samuel Adams for services rendered in exploring the Colorado River and its tributaries, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WEST, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 338) for the relief of William J. Healy, late assistant paymaster in the United States Navy, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1207) to restore Lieutenant George M. McClure to the active list of the Navy, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

The petition of L. J. Draper, late assistant surgeon United States Navy, praying to be restored to his former rank and position in the Navy, from which he was dismissed by the Secretary of the Navy in 1865;

The memorial of Charlotte S. Dupont and others, heirs of General A. Henderson, United States Marine Corps, praying to be allowed the difference between the pay of a colonel and the pay of a brigadier-general, on account of services rendered by General Henderson from January 1, 1846, to January 6, 1851;

The petition of John D. Smith, acting assistant surgeon of the United States Navy, praying to be placed on the retired list of the Navy;

The petition of H. L. Gamble, widow of the late Lieutenant-Colonel John Gamble, United States Marine Corps, praying compensation for the capture by her husband, during the war of 1812, of the vessel Seringapatam;

The petition of R. L. Laws, commander in the United States Navy, praying to be restored to the position in the Navy that he occupied prior to July, 1866, next below Captain W. W. Low; and

The petition of Captain Alexander C. Rhind, now on the active list of the Navy, praying to be restored to his proper position on the Navy Register next below Captain Aaron K. Hughes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 937) repealing a portion of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies," approved March 3, 1873, and disapproving and annulling a portion of the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia of the date of August 23, 1871, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon accompanied by a joint resolution (S. R. No. 18) authorizing the relinquishment to the United States of certain lands in the city of Washington ceded to the Washington Market Company by the act of May 20, 1870, incorporating said company.

The joint resolution was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1198) authorizing the President to nominate Henry S. Wetmore a lieutenant in the Navy upon the retired list, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Frederick Francis Baur, praying to be commissioned a lieutenant in the United States Navy and placed on the retired list in consequence of wounds received in the line of duty, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1319) to provide for the appointment of Frederick F. Baur on the retired list of the Navy.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Turner Merritt, praying compensation for one hundred and thirteen bales of cotton taken by order of General Banks for the use of the United States Army for the construction of fortifications at Port Hudson, Mississippi, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1320) to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Turner Merritt.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSOM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 910) for the relief of William G. Ford, administrator of John G. Robinson, deceased, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the memorial of the members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, protesting against a decrease of their salaries and asking an increase thereof, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was recommended the bill (H. R. No. 2101) for the relief of the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen, reported it without amendment.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. CAMERON. I give notice that I will ask the Senate on Friday or Saturday to give half an hour to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the annual report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, have instructed me to report a resolution. Last year we printed no copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the use of Congress, but printed three thousand copies for the use of the Coast Survey officer, and this resolution is the same. The committee felt instructed by the vote of the Senate last year not to report any for distribution by members. If any Senator objects to that, there is an opportunity to controvert it now.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year 1874 three thousand copies for the use of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask whether the Committee on Printing have considered how these public documents shall be transmitted through the mails? There was some provision made in regard to postage at a low rate upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, containing the debates of Congress; but I must ask the Senator from Rhode Island, who has charge of this business, whether he considers it wise to continue the publication of these voluminous documents without providing methods for their transmission through the mails or for their distribution. There are now in the rooms of this Capitol, I suppose to speak moderately, a cord, more or less, of documents awaiting the order of any Senator who sees fit to prepay their postage to his constituents. There is no appropriation made for the payment of that postage, and as the benefit is the benefit of the constituent solely and in no degree of the Senator or Representative in Congress who is charged with their distribution, they remain undistributed.

I do not desire to embarrass the resolution, but I do desire to call attention to the fact that we are accumulating a vast bulk of these documents simply to lie and perhaps to rot in the vaults of the Capitol. Unless, therefore, there shall be some appropriation made for the transmission of these documents so that they may fulfill the theory upon which they are printed, that it is for public enlightenment in regard to governmental affairs, I submit that it is scarcely worth while to waste the paper and the labor and the printer's ink and the binding in having them printed and published.

As this committee is a very capable one, I wish when it reports resolutions for the publication of these voluminous documents, it would report some means by which they can be circulated through the country, not at the individual cost of members of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. This resolution does not contemplate any distribution by members of Congress. The whole edition is given to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for distribution. Of course, these maps are of no sort of use unless they are distributed to the mercantile and navigating interests of the country. I believe any public document can be sent now on a postage of ten cents; but, of course, if these documents are distributed except at the request of individuals who send the postage, I suppose the Government will have to pay the postage; and if the postage does not cost the Government anything except printing the stamps, it is not a matter of any great consequence. We have hardly reported anything this year for distribution by members of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, in the chair.) The question is on the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to express my concurrence in all I heard of the remarks of the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Rhode Island makes a tolerably good answer to the Senator from Delaware in this case because he says that somebody beside a Senator is to distribute these documents. From that it follows, as the Senator implies, that this other agent whoever he may be, is to be furnished from the public purse with the postage which will carry the documents. Were he a Senator, he would not be, of course, because in these times of high attainment in morals and in courage the Senate has not come up to the point of paying the postage imposed upon its members from the public purse. The Secretary of the Treasury might just as well be charged with the postage involved in conducting his Department. I know of no reason why his private pocket should not respond as does the private pocket of every Senator to the demand of postage. But he again is not a Senator and not a member of Congress; and therefore the sense of justice of the two Houses teaches them that it would be a gross imposition to visit upon him all the postage paid to the Post-Office Department for transmitting the business of the Department through the mail.

I rose, Mr. President, rather to call attention to this feature of the existing law than to say anything about this resolution; and as I am upon this subject, I venture to make one personal remark. Having kept myself or had kept an account of my own postage for one week, it amounted to nine dollars, including no documents, but relating to the correspondence which is sent to me, no part of it being my private correspondence, all being in respect of public and official matters. And yet, although we vote appropriations to enable other agents of the Government to distribute books, many of which are never read, and seeds many of which never come up, we omit as part of the reform which the abolition of the franking privilege commenced to furnish to members of this body or of the other House recompense in respect of the postage they are compelled to pay from their own pockets touching the affairs and concerns of the nation, and which have no more private relation to them than they have to the head of a Department or the clerk in a Department to which they are transmitted, or to the clerk of a committee of the Senate which considers them.

Now, Mr. President, I wish hereafter as often as I find the opportunity to vote against the publication of any more documents until, as the Senator from Delaware says, provision is made to carry those documents to those for whom in theory they are intended, and I wish on every appropriate occasion to ask the attention of the Post-Office Committee of the Senate and of the whole Senate to the question whether it is right, whether it is admissible, that the members of the Senate and the members of the House should be selected from the whole body of public officers as those who alone are compelled to pay the public postage from their private pockets. To Senators, if there be such, who can afford it readily, it is a matter of very little moment. Perhaps in the personal injustice it involves, it is trivial at all events, because the inconvenience of individuals must be admitted to be trivial when compared with the public interests. But as matter of right, as matter of self-respect, as matter of legislation and of public conduct, I submit it is worthy the attention of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island if this resolution proposes the publication of the usual number?

Mr. ANTHONY. The number that we printed last year. It is less than we have usually printed heretofore, and there are none for members of Congress as I stated. I quite agree with what the Senator from New York has said, but it does not apply to this document. There is provision made for distributing this document. Of course, it would be a very unwise expenditure of public money to go to the expense of surveying the coast and making the maps and charts, and then not place them in the hands of the people who navigate vessels. This is for the security of property and life.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is that provision for distribution to which the Senator refers?

Mr. ANTHONY. Distributed by the Coast Survey itself, which is provided with postage-stamps to do it, the same as we ought to be; I quite agree to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then, if it comes to that, it is simply another method of publishing documents or another method of distribution. I thought we had come to the conclusion, when the abolition of the franking privilege took place, that we would not publish any more documents for gratuitous distribution. Here are three thousand copies of this document to be printed for the use of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey. There is nothing said about distribution in any way. He has no means of distributing them unless we make an appropriation to him by which he can distribute them. That therefore is a gratuitous distribution, and I suggest of the most doubtful character, because it gives them to one officer of the Government to distribute as he pleases. It comes within the objection, it seems to me, of the general rule. If my friend will allow the resolution to lie over until to-morrow morning, I will look into it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I cannot object to that, but really this document ought to be printed, and the resolution has to go to the other House. You might just as well say that the people should pay for light-houses as pay for charts of the coast. It is intended for precisely the same purpose, for the security of navigation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The misfortune about that is that we did say we would not print any more documents for gratuitous distribution; and the people who want this, of course can afford to pay for it. That is the principle on which we have gone. This is a departure from that principle.

Mr. ANTHONY. The people who want light-houses might afford to pay for them, but we want these documents distributed whether the people wish them or not, because the information they contain is for the safety of life and property on the ocean. It stands on a different basis from almost any other document. The old custom always was to print a certain number for distribution by the Senate, a certain number for distribution by the House, and a certain number for the Coast Survey. We have struck off those for members of Congress.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But this document is in no sense for general distribution; it is for distribution to a special interest in the country.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That ought not to be a gratuitous distribution unless our whole theory is wrong, as I am half inclined to think it is; but we agreed when the franking privilege was repealed that we would not go into the publication of documents for gratuitous distribution, and yet every session that is insidiously coming back upon us, and everybody is having the franking privilege restored to him except only members of Congress, who, as the Senator from New York said, are not to be intrusted with anything like the distribution of documents.

Mr. ANTHONY. I assented to the Senator's remark that this document is for a particular interest. I should not have agreed to that assertion, for it is wrong. It is not for a particular interest, unless you mean that the safety of navigation is a particular interest. It is the interest of everybody who ever has life or property at sea. However, I will let the resolution lie over and call it up another time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine when Congress said that they would not print any documents for gratuitous distribution? I understood that Congress said that they would not intrust members of Congress with the distribution of documents unless they paid the postage. That is all we have ever said. We have never gone so far as to isolate this Government entirely from the people as to make all the information that the Government gathers valueless after it is obtained at an expense of millions.

The remarks of the Senator from Maine, and the Senator from New York also, criticising the abolition of the franking privilege I think do not come very well from them, because they voted for its abolition, and I do not see that they take any measures to restore that communication which ought to exist between Congress and the people. I know as well as every other Senator does that it is a great burden to the members of the Senate to have the franking privilege, but it is the right of the people to have the information.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is true, as the Senator says, that I voted to abolish the franking privilege, but I voted for it as some lady is said to have got married, under protest. [Laughter.] I stated at the time that such a hullabaloo had been got up by the press of the country against this privilege and against what was supposed to be its corrupt use, that Congress could not afford to stand under such an imputation, although I believed that that action was just as wrong as anything in principle could be. Still I was disposed, for the reason I stated, to vote for its abolition, and I have said ever since and on all occasions, and I continue to say now, that until that sentiment is corrected in the country Congress cannot afford to be peddling documents, publishing them, and distributing them either by themselves directly or covertly through the heads of the Departments.

Now we appropriate some $2,000,000 for postage for the Departments to make these distributions; but I will say to my honorable friend that the policy which I understand to have been established in regard to these documents is that we would not publish them for gratuitous distribution, but that they should be published to the end that the people might have all the information that Congress had or the Government had upon public concerns, that it should be made accessible to persons who wanted it at the cost price. That is what I understand to have been the policy attempted to be established by Congress since the abolition of the franking privilege, and which it seems to me is exactly the proper thing to observe; but if this resolution goes over until to-morrow, I will endeavor to look into it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to remind Senators on both sides of one fact, that at the last session the Committee on Printing reported a bill authorizing the sale of documents and tried very hard to get it through the Senate, but did not succeed; and I think the Senator from Maine did not favor it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not sure, but I think I did. I have always been with the Senator upon that question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Perhaps I am mistaken. If the Senator is with me, I shall feel still stronger that I am right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw his motion for present consideration.

Mr. ANTHONY. I must, I suppose, if the resolution is objected to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4730) providing for the payment of certain employes of the House of Representatives; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1012) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) authorizing Thomas W. Fitch, engineer of the United States Navy, to accept a wedding present sent to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1321) regulating the salaries of judges of the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1322) establishing rules and regulations for the government of the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLANAGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1323) to establish a mail-route in Texas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1324) for the relief of Walter J. Lee, late a second lieutenant in the Twenty-eighth Michigan Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five hundred additional copies of the Navy Register for 1875 be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the Army Register for 1875 be printed for the use of the Senate.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish to the Senate a copy of the last annual report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad.

MANAGERS OF VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to report the same back without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know the necessity for that.

Mr. SPENCER. I will explain. These are the present managers of the present institution. Their time expires in April, and it is necessary that they should be continued in office. The resolution has come from the House of Representatives, been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and reported favorably.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It reappoints as managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate a national military and naval asylum for the relief of the totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States,' approved March 21, 1866," John H. Martindale of New York, Hugh L. Bond of Maryland, and Erastus B. Wolcott, of Wisconsin, whose terms expired on the 21st of April, 1874.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it correct that their terms expired in April, 1874?

Mr. SPENCER. I think that date is incorrect; I think it should be 1875; but I will inquire of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. The correction ought to be made before the joint resolution passes to a third reading.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest that the bill be passed over informally for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be laid over.

Mr. SPENCER. The date in the joint resolution appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, I find on inquiry of the chairman of the committee, is correct, and I ask that the joint resolution be disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. I prefer that it should go over. I should like to be informed as to the necessity of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie over.

Mr. SPENCER subsequently said: I ask that the joint resolution in relation to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers be disposed of. The Senator from West Virginia withdraws his objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I have examined the joint resolution, and I withdraw the objection, believing it might be injurious to disabled soldiers to insist upon it.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF RETRENCHMENT COMMITTEE.

Mr. WRIGHT. I believe this morning, by the order of the Senate, is assigned to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment; and as chairman of the committee I am entitled to the floor for the remaining part of the morning hour, and such other time as the Senate may give. I want to make a statement and then make a request.

A bill passed the House yesterday that will go to the committee this morning, and is a bill which it is important should be considered at this session if it can be. I ask now the consent of the Senate that we shall have Saturday morning instead of this morning and not lose our place, but take our place on Saturday morning in lieu of this morning, in view of the fact that this bill to which I have alluded will be referred to us. It is important that we should consider it, and the committee perhaps will not have an opportunity again to be heard unless at that time. Of course there are other committees to be heard between now and that time, but I ask unanimous consent that we have on Saturday morning the same time, instead of this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that Saturday instead of to-day be assigned to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINDOM. That is for the morning hour only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For the morning hour alone.

PEABODY SCHOOL IN SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA.

Mr. HOWE. What is the next committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the other day I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which a bill passed making a grant of land for a school in Saint Augustine, Florida. The Senator from Florida [Mr. GILBERT] is very anxious that that motion should be disposed of. The motion answers my purpose entirely if my purpose is to defeat the bill, but I do not wish that the bill should be defeated in that way. I should like to have a vote of the Senate. I call attention to it now, being perfectly ready to take the vote of the Senate on the question if it is the pleasure of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks consent to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 782) to provide a site for a public free school in Saint Augustine, Florida, was passed. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion is before the Senate. The question is, will the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed?

Mr. HOWE. My object in reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed is to once more ask the sense of the Senate upon the amendment which was moved by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] The bill proposes to grant some land, I suppose not very large in amount, perhaps not very valuable, to some individuals in the State of Florida for educational purposes, and the Senator from Vermont moved to amend the bill, making the grant conditional upon the fact that no person should be excluded from the school to be founded upon the grant, on account of color or of race. In this Senate in the early part of the year of our Lord 1875 that amendment was rejected. It was not at all strange that it should have been, because although I am now asking the Senate to reconsider that vote, I do not think there is one Senator in ten on this floor who knows what the proposition is. There probably was not more than one in fifty who knew what it was at that time.

As I do not think it worth while to spend much time in debating a question for the consideration of one-tenth of the Senate, I will content myself with what I have already said and ask the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the pending bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the motion to reconsider the Senator from Wisconsin has asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would be glad to know something of the value of this land. I have a belief, from a slight personal acquaintance with Saint Augustine, that there is no land there belonging to the United States that ought to be given away even for a school. There are one or two parcels of land within the limits of Saint Augustine, one of which I know to be essential to prospective use by and of value to the Government. I do not know where this lot of land lies, but I have no belief that the Government ought to give it away. In general the true rule for the Government in every city or considerable town of the country is to hold whatever land it possesses. When we come to purchase for public use we pay the very highest price; and when we happen to have a piece of land that is not in immediate use we are called upon to give it away. Saint Augustine is likely to be a place of considerable importance hereafter, although it is a place of small consideration now; and even though the amendment proposed were introduced—for which I shall certainly vote if I have an opportunity—I think the bill ought to be defeated; and it is a very poor way of administering public charity, a very poor way of supporting educational institutions, for the Government of this country to be considering whether it will make a small donation here or there. There are great principles of education which the Government of the country should keep in view. There may be great systems which the Government of this country can do something to introduce or maintain; but by donating a lot of land here, a lot of land there, the fruits of which generally get into the possession of classes in society or sects in religion, the object which the Government should have in view is prevented. Therefore I say that unless something can be shown which takes this proposed appropriation out of the general rule, it should not be made; and especially it should not be made if we are to set up in one of the towns of principal resort in the South a model for influence among the people of the South in the exclusion of colored children; and as the bill stands now it does exclude them. I am against the bill for two reasons: First, because it excludes them; and, second, for the stronger and more fundamental reason that it is an appropriation that ought not to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boutwell, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Scott, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Boreman, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCree, Morrill of Vermont, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Stockton, and Tipton—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Ferry of Connecticut, Gordon, Logan, Merrimon, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Pease, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, and Washburn—17.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the passage of the bill; but the hour of one o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, being the resolution for the admission of P. B. S. Pinchback, on which the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] is entitled to the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Alleghany reservations, and to confirm existing leases.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia.

The message also announced that the House non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, and asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLINTON D. MACDOUGALL of New York, Mr. WILLIAM G. DONNAN of Iowa, and Mr. JAMES W. NESMITH of Oregon, managers of the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4978) to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. No. 1076) to facilitate the disposition of cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by Mr. MORTON on the 8th instant:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

Mr. MORTON. Before the Senator from California resumes his remarks, I beg leave to request the Senate to stay here without adjournment until this question is disposed of. The time of the session is now so short that I feel the necessity of making this request, and making it an urgent one, that the Senate will remain without adjournment until this resolution has been disposed of.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the Senate will not do anything of the kind.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, I certainly hope that the appeal which has been made by the Senator from Indiana may not be regarded by the Senate. This resolution was called up on Monday; the Senator from Indiana made a few remarks; the Senator from California occupied all the rest of Monday, the hour which we had yesterday after the morning hour, and he still has the floor for to-day; and now to insist that those who feel in conscience bound to oppose this resolution shall stay here to-night all night to make speeches to empty benches upon a subject graver than almost any that has arisen before this body, in my remembrance at any rate, seems to me monstrous.

I desire very briefly, for my physical strength will not permit me to speak at length upon this or any topic, to submit some views upon this subject. I do not feel that I can do so in the small hours after midnight; and although so important do I deem the vote upon this question that I will remain here to vote, yet to insist upon closing the discussion and closing this question without an adjournment will certainly deprive me, and I think others, of that which we are entitled to, a fair hearing in the Senate upon a question of the very gravest public importance.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator will see—

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a motion on a bill which is very important to the District, and will occupy no time.

Mr. SARGENT. After a remark I will yield to the Senator from Virginia. On Monday last after the close of the morning hour and after an hour and a half or two hours had been devoted to a thrilling discussion of a point of order, which was finally decided wrong, I obtained the floor to speak on the Louisiana matter. I was enabled to proceed for some time when I was interrupted by a message from the House announcing a very sad event, and the Senate at that time adjourned. On yesterday, after all the morning business had been gone through with, I was enabled to occupy a short time until again interrupted by a similar circumstance. I think that I am entitled to call the attention of the Senate to this to relieve myself of any reproach of having occupied the time of the Senate for two days and now proceeding to a third.

Furthermore, during the whole time which was at my disposal I had perhaps too good-naturedly yielded to Senators all around me who wanted to pass some little bill or get in some report or something of that kind, which were continually interrupting my progress. I will yield now with that good-natured purpose to my friend from Virginia, provided his bill will not cause discussion, remarking, however, that I presume I shall be able to conclude my remarks in half an hour after I begin.

Mr. LEWIS. I move to take up a bill reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, being the bill (S. No. 1212) explanatory of the act passed June 20, 1874, in regard to paying for sweeping the streets of this city. When that bill is up then I wish to have the House bill which has already passed the House substituted for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent to lay aside the pending business informally and to take up the bill indicated by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. A bill passed the House yesterday which is identical to this. I move to take up the House bill instead of this Senate bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let us hear the House bill read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the House bill has been sent to the printer.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I ask that this bill be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator from Virginia would explain this bill a little and state how much it involves.

Mr. SARGENT. This seems to lead to discussion. I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California claims the floor.

Mr. SARGENT. When the Senate took its recess yesterday I was discussing the condition of affairs in Arkansas, and showing that an illegal Legislature, illegally supplanting a legal Legislature, and supplanting it in order to prevent a legal inquiry into the right of the governor of that State to hold his place, had called a convention for the purpose of overthrowing the constitution of the State. I say of overthrowing the constitution rather than of amending it, because there was no power in the constitution of the State existing authorizing a new constitution to be made in the manner proposed. The constitution of the State of Arkansas expressly provided the method by which it might be amended, and if there is no security or guarantee for organic law in the organic law itself, then we are governed by mere mob power; then there is no security for the stability of our institutions, and a whim of the populace or a breath of public opinion may at any time sweep away the most valuable barriers erected for public safety. Article 13 of the constitution which was supplanted provides that amendments to the constitution shall be proposed by the respective houses of the Legislature and subsequently those amendments submitted to the people, but there is no provision in the constitution for the calling of a constitutional convention for the purpose of an entire change of the instrument. Before that can be constitutionally done, by all the precedents which have ever been passed upon by courts, the constitution must be amended in this manner to confer this power upon the Legislature and upon such constitutional convention. The question is by no means new. It has been passed upon directly by many courts where the question has been raised. The supreme court of Illinois in the case of Field vs. The People, 2 Scammon, 79, passed upon a kindred question. I will refer only to the syllabus of the case, because I find on reference to the opinion that it is a fair rendering of the judgment of the court in the matter, and they exhaustively considered the subject. They say:

It is a general rule, that when a constitution gives a general power or enjoins a duty, it also gives, by implication, every particular power necessary for the exercise of the one or the performance of the other. But this rule is modified by this very rule, that where the means for the exercise of a granted power are also given, no other or different means or powers can be implied either on account of convenience or of being more effectual.

The constitution of Arkansas provided means by which it might be amended, and it was unconstitutional, a violation of the organic law, to take any other or different means upon any pretense that it would be more convenient or more effectual. The supreme court of Delaware, in 4 Harrington, advert to the question of the right of the people by a constitutional convention thus irregularly called to change the constitution of a State. In Delaware formerly there was no such power of amendment of the State constitution, and the court uses an apt illustration, familiar to them, in their reasoning in this case. In this case of Rice vs. Foster, 4 Harrington, 488, the supreme court say:

The legislative, executive, and judicial powers compose the sovereign power of a State. The people of the State of Delaware have vested the legislative power in a General Assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives; the supreme executive powers of the State in a governor; and the judicial power in the several courts mentioned in the sixth article. The sovereign power, therefore, of this State resides with the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. Having thus transferred the sovereign power, the people cannot resume or exercise any portion of it. To do so would be an infraction of the constitution and a dissolution of the government. Nor can they interfere with the exercise of any part of the sovereign power except by petition, remonstrance, or address. They have the power to change or alter the constitution; but this can be done only in the mode prescribed by the instrument itself.

The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] when the President's message came in objecting to these illegal proceedings by which the government of Arkansas was subverted, was astounded by such declaration on the part of the President; and yet by the authorities, well considered, of various States of the Union where this question has been determined, it has been uniformly held that this would be an illegal subversion of the constitution of a State. I ask what is astounding in the President of the United States calling attention to this fact and asking that Congress take measures to remedy the mischief?

The supreme court of Delaware say:

The attempt to do so in any other mode is revolutionary. And although the people have the power, in conformity with its provisions, to alter the constitution, under no circumstances can they, so long as the Constitution of the United States remains the paramount law of the land, establish a democracy, or any other than a republican form of government. It is equally clear that neither legislative, executive, nor judicial departments separately, nor all combined, can devolve on the people the exercise of any part of the sovereign power with which each is invested. The assumption of a power to do so would be usurpation. The department arrogating it would elevate itself above the constitution; overturn the foundation on which its own authority rests; demolish the whole frame and texture of our republican form of government, and prostrate everything to the worst species of tyranny and despotism, the ever-varying will of an irresponsible multitude. The powers of government are trusts of the highest importance, on the faithful and proper exercise of which depend the welfare and happiness of society. These trusts must be exercised in strict conformity with the spirit and intention of the constitution by those with whom they are deposited.

Mr. BAYARD. As the Senator has referred to the decisions of the courts of my State, with which I am entirely familiar, I would beg leave to say to him that the members of the court that made the decision he has just cited held their offices under a constitution which was adopted in direct derogation of the requirements of the constitution that preceded it. The constitution of 1792 provided that certain articles should never be changed, and when the constitution of 1829 under which the court that gave this decision was appointed was adopted, it was in violation of the terms of the constitution that had preceded it. The case which he has cited has nothing to do with the question he is now discussing. It was a question there of the power of the Legislature to delegate their power to the people, so that they should give a law vitality by popular vote and let it depend on the popular vote for its force as a law. The court decided that that could not be. There was no question before them in the case of Rice vs. Foster as to the power of the State to change its constitution in a mode not pointed out by the constitution itself, and it was not before them, not considered, not decided. What has been read was an obiter dictum in the very strongest sense of the term, but the court that uttered it held their places under a constitution that had been adopted in violation of the provisions of the preceding constitution.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not desire to discuss the good or bad faith of the courts of Delaware; I do not wish to say whether by this decision they passed condemnation upon themselves or not; but I do say that they most distinctly lay down in aid of the main proposition in the case that there is no power to amend a constitution except through the method which the constitution itself points out. I know that there is another method not recognized by courts, that there is what may be called violent revolution and there is peaceful revolution. But I am talking about law, not revolutions, which are outside of and subversive of law. These were peaceful revolutions in the case of New York and Illinois, where, the constitution being changed otherwise than as provided by the instrument, the question was never raised in the courts or brought to the attention of Congress. There was general acquiescence and satisfaction of the people in the results; and such cases are merely instances, they are not precedents showing what the law is.

The supreme court of Massachusetts, on a question submitted by the house of representatives of that State, also sustained strongly the principle of the reasoning of this supreme court of Delaware. The questions submitted in that case were, whether the Legislature could submit to the people the proposition whether there should be a State convention for the reformation of the constitution, when there was no provision in the existing constitution authorizing such a body. And the supreme court of Massachusetts, advising, says in 6 Cushing, 575:

Under and pursuant to the existing constitution, there is no authority given by any reasonable construction or necessary implication by which any specific and particular amendment or amendments of the constitution can be made in any other manner than that prescribed in the ninth article of the amendments adopted in 1820. Considering that previous to 1820 no mode was provided by the constitution for its own amendment, that no other power for that purpose than in the mode alluded to is anywhere given in the constitution by implication or otherwise, and that the mode thereby provided appears manifestly to have been carefully considered, and the power of altering the constitution thereby conferred to have been cautiously restrained and guarded, we think a strong implication arises against the existence of any other power, under the constitution, for the same purposes.

I think that this is the current of decisions all the way through, and in no case can you find that a court stultified itself by saying that that is law which is in violation of law; that that is constitutional which is subversive of the constitution. The only thing that can be insisted on is that a constitution shall stand where there is a peaceable revolution in which the people acquiesce, the question not being raised; but such assumption fails where a forcible revolution like that which occurred in Arkansas happens, and the protests of the people bring it to the attention of Congress.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator whether his position is that if a State constitution shall forbid the alteration of certain of its articles in any mode whatever, they are not to be changed at any time by any action of the people?

Mr. SARGENT. That would be anti-republican and might justify a peaceful revolution if the people should be satisfied so to change their organic law. Or it might justify a forcible revolution if the oppression was great. But in either case it would be the will of the people. But the will of the people was overruled in the case of Arkansas, as all the facts show, and there were no oppressive provisions in the constitution of that State.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator thinks that an immutable condition in a constitution would be anti-republican?

Mr. SARGENT. I believe that the old constitution in Rhode Island discussed in Luther vs. Borden, with its disfranchising, unchangeable clauses, was anti-republican. I think an immutable constitution is anti-republican, because their institutions should not be beyond the legitimate control of the people. I have no question about that; but that was not the constitution of the State of Arkansas. In that constitution there was a specific and plain method by which the constitution could be amended, and ample means afforded to the people, and means which a few years before they had exercised to amend the instrument.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator thinks an immutable provision in a State constitution is anti-republican. Does he consider that the United States, under its guarantee to each State of a republican form of government, may interfere at any time to change that constitution in those features?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator might ask a great many questions. I am not here to discuss abstract propositions. When that proposition comes before the Senate I will discuss it. The Constitution of the United States simply guarantees a republican form of government, and if there is a republican form of government established by the people, established honestly and fairly, expressing the will of the people, it is within the guarantee of the Constitution. But the Senator will observe he is diverting me from the case of Arkansas whose every step was gained by force and aided by fraud. For instance, the very Legislature which passed through in one day the bill for the calling of a constitutional convention was surrounded by Baxter's troops, and no member of the Legislature or other person was allowed to pass through the lines without a regular pass from Baxter, and consequently there was no quorum present, for that and for other reasons, on account of the disturbed condition of affairs there. He gave passes to men who had been elected by an illegal election, where the people could not be registered, where the registry law itself had been tampered with; and this illegal body gave the first foundation for this whole proceeding. Do you call that acting on the will of the people? Is that the manner in which a republican form of government can be established or amended? To assert it is simply to assert an absurdity. The authorities are ample upon the question of the absence of right to alter a constitution without reference to a fair discretion of the people in accordance with the terms of the instrument which gives the power to amend. For instance, in 35 Pennsylvania Reports, 265, The Commonwealth ex rel. Baxter, the court say:

It is a natural principle of humanity that the will of a man is regulated by his habits, and that of a people by their settled customs and institutions; and without this neither can have any character by which their actions can be judged. Law means the settled customs and institutions of a people, and if these do not exist there is no law, and courts, if there be any, must be mere arbitrary powers. Law will have lost one of its essential elements when the mere will of the people shall prevail over the settled principles of their social life. Even a people, therefore, must conform to their own institutions if they are to have any government.

Here was an existing constitution of the State of Arkansas which had been in operation for years, which provided adequate means and a mode for its amendment, and as the supreme court of Pennsylvania says, if the people of Arkansas have any security for law it must be in accordance with law and the constitution should have been followed in order that the subsequent convention which assembled could be legal, or that any amendment of the constitution could be recognized by the United States or the people of that State as the constitution of the State.

But more than this, the constitution of the State provided that the ballot should be secret. The object of the secrecy of the ballot, especially in communities like this, or in any community, is obvious enough. It is that a man may not be deterred by intimidation or by social influence from casting his vote as he pleases, and this right was secured by the constitution of the State of Arkansas, which has been overthrown. By an ordinance of the new constitutional convention, providing the method by which this constitution should be submitted to the people, it was declared in section 14—

That the names of the electors shall be numbered, and the corresponding numbers shall be placed upon the ballots by the judges when deposited.

Thus creating a system of espionage over the voters of the State; thus giving the strong and influential classes, the property classes, the control of the poor classes, with ample means to know how they voted, to execute vengeance upon them if they did not vote as they desired. They struck down the secrecy of the ballot, and in defiance of the constitution itself.

I will not cite authorities to the point that an ordinance accompanying a new constitution cannot have the force of law to repeal provisions of the old constitution before it is replaced by the new. To insist upon that, I say, would be to insist upon an obvious legal absurdity—that a constitutional convention meeting to propose a new constitution can by an ordinance set aside the provisions of the old constitution before that constitution is replaced by the new or adopted by the people; and yet that is just the thing they did here in Arkansas and in the most vital point, by striking down the purity of the ballot-box by destroying its secrecy. In 13 New York Reports, page 27, in the case of the People vs. Pease, there is a discussion of the question as to the right of a citizen to the secret ballot under a law merely providing for the secrecy of the ballot, and the judge says:

I have already alluded to the policy of the law providing for a secret ballot. The right to vote in this manner has usually been considered an important and valuable safeguard of the independence of the humble citizen against the influence which wealth and station might be supposed to exercise. This object would be accomplished but very imperfectly, if the privacy supposed to be secured was limited to the moment of depositing the ballot. The spirit of the system requires that the elector should be secured then, and at all times thereafter, against reproach or animadversion or any other prejudice on account of having voted according to his own unbiased judgment; and that security is made to consist in shutting up within the privacy of his own mind all knowledge of the manner in which he has bestowed his suffrage.

That was the intention of the constitution of Arkansas, that the voter should be allowed thus to lock up in his own mind the knowledge of the manner in which he cast his vote; but all this was stricken down by the illegal proceedings which I have mentioned. This subject was discussed in 35 Black, Indiana Reports, 90-96, and the pertinency of the decision is so great, and it illustrates so fully the illegality of these Arkansas proceedings, as well as the wrongs that the actors inflicted on the voters of that State, that I take time to read the facts stated in the opinion, as well as the conclusions of the able judge who made it:

The complaint alleges in substance that on the 11th day of October, 1870, at a general election held pursuant to law for the election of divers officers, the defendant was the duly appointed inspector of elections for a legal precinct of Fairfield Township, in Tippecanoe County, known as precinct No. 2, and officiated as such; that on said day the plaintiff was a resident of said township and a duly qualified voter, &c.; that he gave his ballot, which was in all respects a legal ballot, to said defendant as such inspector, and demanded that it should be put into the ballot-box without any distinguishing mark or number being placed upon it; but that defendant, as such inspector, against the protest of plaintiff, unlawfully numbered the same, &c., whereby plaintiff became damaged in his constitutional privileges and franchises, &c.

The defendant has demurred to the complaint for want of sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action against him. The question raised by this demurrer involves the constitutionality of section 2 of an act of the Legislature approved May 13, 1869, which section reads in these words, namely:

"It shall be the duty of the inspector of any election held in this State, on receiving the ballot of any voter, to have the same numbered with figures on the outside or back thereof to correspond with the number placed opposite the name of such voter on the poll-lists kept by the clerks of said election."

It will be seen that the acts of the defendant of which plaintiff complains are not only authorized, but enjoined, by the section quoted, and if the same is valid there is an end of plaintiff's case. It is claimed, however, that this law is void because in conflict with section 13 of article 2 of the constitution of Indiana. Section 13 reads thus:

"All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and all elections by the General Assembly, or either branch thereof, shall be viva voce."

I am not unmindful of the rule that all doubts are to be solved in favor of the constitutionality of legislative enactments. This rule is well established and is founded in the highest wisdom. But my convictions are clear that our constitution was intended to, and does, secure the absolute secrecy of a ballot, and that the act in question, which directs the numbering of tickets to correspond with the numbers opposite the names of the electors on the poll-lists, is in palpable conflict not only with the spirit but with the substance of the constitutional provision.

This act was intended to and does clearly identify every man's ticket, and renders it easy to ascertain exactly how any particular person voted. That secrecy which is esteemed by all authority to be essential to the free exercise of suffrage is so much violated by this law as if it had declared that the election should be viva voce.

I might go on from point to point, showing other monstrous illegalities. These conspirators stopped at no fraud or oppression. They subverted all the institutions of the State, made popular government a farce, corrupted the elections by illegally selected tools to do their will, and drove half the people of the State in despair from the polls.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is astounded that the President should call attention to these things. How enormous it is that he should be forever, and that republicans should be forever, complaining of things at the South! Why not let the old confederates trample down the rights of the people of the State, trample down their organic law, substitute for it another instrument without observing any of the forms that the constitution required, surround the Legislature or a mock Legislature with force, keep real legislators out, and then pass through under such forms a bill for a constitutional convention! Why should the President interfere in things of this kind? Why should he call the attention of Congress to them? We are astounded, say democratic Senators, at the presumption which can do it.

The republican party in Arkansas met in convention while these things were in progress before the vote came upon the new constitution and resolved, and published their address wherein they said all these things are illegal, these things are the fruit of force and fraud; we will not recognize these things as legal by our votes or our presence at the polls; and they staid away from the polls and thereby protested in the strongest manner. They are certainly nearly one-half of the people of the State, unquestionably a majority of the people of the State, judging by former elections. Thereby this great body of the people of the State protested in the strongest manner against the adoption of this constitution. It is claimed that it was adopted by a majority of the voters, notwithstanding nearly one-half of the voters of the State staid away from the election; while by the peculiar manipulations which the officers of the election who were creatures of Governor Baxter were able to carry on the vote of the State apparently was larger than at any former election or any subsequent election in that State, in itself evidence of the grossest frauds which were resorted to in order to give a color to these proceedings.

In the case which I cited before of the Commonwealth vs. Baxter, the supreme court of Pennsylvania, on page 264 of the thirty-fifth volume Pennsylvania Reports, say:

Majorities go for nothing at an irregular election; we cannot regard them even as majorities, for it is the right of orderly citizens to stay away from such elections.

They cannot be regarded as majorities; and instead of piling up 105,000 votes, by the thousands more than ever were before or since cast in that State, in order to make the color of a majority, if they had piled up a million votes in the State it would not have been a majority, no matter what vote might have been cast. Such majorities go for nothing, because the election was illegal and irregular; because it was not held by the officers who were appointed by law; because the registry laws of the State were repealed; because the method of casting the ballots was tampered with in violation of the constitution, by which private marks were put upon them to be recognized thereafter, and voters questioned as to the method of their voting; because the object of the election was illegal, there being no power in the convention that assembled to prescribe that object—that is to say, the adoption or ratification of this pretended constitution—and the republicans were perfectly right in staying away.

I know and have admitted that in some cases in the States a change of the constitution brought about through the means of a constitutional convention not contemplated by their existing constitution has been assented to by the people, and they have been treated as peaceable revolutions. No question with regard to them has been raised in the courts; the courts themselves have been organized under the new constitutions; and Legislatures have met, and the people have been satisfied, and all has passed on quietly. There has never before been any instance, however, where one-half or more of the people of a State were complaining of the frauds and violences by which these things were brought about. In this very case in Arkansas, as part of the nefarious means which they used to stifle the voice of the people and prevent their asserting their rights, the conspirators abolished some of the courts, forbid others to take cognizance of questions arising out of the action of the convention, and enacted that no session of the supreme court should be held until after the election upon the constitution—until the whole thing had been put in motion and the time was passed when the people could have any legal assistance in arresting the despotic measures to which they were to be subjected. This suspension of the courts is in itself a badge of fraud. Why suspend the courts? Why take such action that the people cannot appear before the lawful tribunals and have the question tested? O, yes, Senators are astounded that the President of the United States calls attention to these enormities! Why, I ask again, should he not? He would be derelict to plain duty did he not. This was a revolution wrought in blood, amid tumult, amid armed forces surrounding the Legislature, dominating the wills of the people there. In the report which was made by Mr. WARD, and his report is well sustained by the testimony in the case, it is well substantiated by this volume of papers which I hold in my hand. [Exhibiting a package.] Here is a statement of murders by the hundred in different counties in the State of Arkansas, showing in detail the murders and murderous assaults that have occurred there for political purposes, of republicans, white and black, northern born and southern. The showing is terrible. Arkansas has a population of 122,160 blacks and 316,152 whites. The abstract of these papers shows that from the time of the reconstructed State government until the Garland usurpation was accomplished there were 789 murders and 380 assaults with intent to kill; 1,052 were committed by democrats and 117 by republicans; those who committed the murders were 1,078 white and only 82 black; the victims were 865 republicans and 304 democrats, nearly three to one, and many of the latter were killed in repelling their assaults. I will let the table be incorporated in my remarks.

The report of Mr. WARD sustains these documents and is sustained by them and by all the testimony taken by his committee; and he sums it up in strong and nervous language:

I think it sufficiently appears that, down to the close of the convention, the whole proceedings were void, because of the violations of all law; the frauds, violence, and intimidations practiced by Baxter and his coconspirators, and that the election to revise the constitution was held in violation of the existing constitution; that the convention, if properly called, exceeded its powers, and the election to ratify its work was void; and it cannot be successfully contended that the people of Arkansas have in any legal way under any forms of law expressed their wish to overthrow the constitution of 1868, or to set up the present usurpation.

If banditti, or a mob of armed men, may take possession of a State, depose its officers, arrest its judges, close its courts, intimidate its people through violence and murder, provide its own way of holding and its own officers to hold elections, and its own officers to declare the result, and the fruits of such defiance of all law are binding upon the people of such State and upon Congress, then the present pretended government of Arkansas is legitimate, and must be recognized as such, but not otherwise.

And I have not stated it too strong, for those who will read the extracts I have given from the mass of evidence taken by the committee must be satisfied there was a reign of terror throughout Arkansas during the period in which the so-called Garland government was being formed and set in motion, entirely inconsistent with a full and fair expression of the will of the people on that subject.

The capital city was overrun with the drunken and lawless Governor's Guard, which assaulted private citizens, abused and beat negroes, searched and rummaged private houses and private offices, and threatened everybody who opposed Baxter with arrest, imprisonment, or exile from the State.

At and about Pine Bluff, King White, a drunken, reckless man, proclaimed martial law, and arrested and imprisoned the leading men without shadow of cause; and then they were offered freedom on condition that they would support the movement for a new constitution.

North of the capital, in Conway and Faulkner Counties, Jeff K. Jones, upon whose head Baxter himself had set a price as upon an outlaw for the murders he had committed, had a gang of desperate men committing murder, arson, and violent acts of all kinds upon Union and Brooks men; and Baxter knew of these things, and made no attempt to restrain them or to arrest the murderer, Jones.

In Hot Springs and Perry Counties like unlawful violent acts occurred. Men in office were impeached without cause or notice and ejected by military power; property of private citizens was taken illegally and without compensation to the owners.

The judges of the supreme court were arrested by armed force, subjected to insults and abuse, concealed, and finally spirited away to be assassinated if an attempt should be made for their rescue or their attempt to escape.

False charges were made against obnoxious men, and the arrests made thereon were intended for and used to cover cold-blooded and cruel murder, as in the case of the colored man Ned Abes.

Mounted bands of desperate men roamed the country to awe and intimidate the colored people, even at their barbecues and jubilees.

Men high in command of the so-called militia and at the head and in presence of a strong force of their own men threatened quiet and peaceable citizens with death by hanging, as in the case of General Churchill at the barbecue on the 3d of July last.

Baxter himself was daily muttering his curses, and, surrounded by his troops, selected because they were desperate and would fire on the supreme court constantly, uttered his profane threats to arrest and hang or drive from the State the last Brooks man.

And this was the quiet which gave a "fair election;" this the condition of the people when their government was overthrown and a new one set up.

There is little to be added to such a showing as this. Under these circumstances, with confusion, intimidation, illegality, fraud, the State government of Arkansas was subverted, and in the direction which I mentioned yesterday. It was seized as part of a general plan to seize every one of the reconstructed States, in order to bring back a system of peonage there.

The same is true of Alabama, except that it has not yet proceeded to its full result. I have here a letter of a correspondent of the New York Times, a paper very hard to convince of the true condition of things in the South. The paper sent its own correspondent to Alabama to make a report that it could trust. That correspondent, writing under date of January 2, says:

Thousands of men voted the democratic ticket against their conviction from fear of violence or loss of employment, and many thousands more failed to vote at all from the same cause. The northern people can have no conception of the state of society here, and the testimony taken before the committee cannot but make a deep impression. The evidence fully shows that a republican form of government cannot be maintained in the State of Alabama without the aid of the United States troops.

The evidence shows that the churches and school-houses of the colored people were burned and destroyed by white democrats only because the colored people who worshiped and sent their children to school therein were republicans; that armed white democrats, in companies of hundreds, visited some of the more intelligent of these colored people, beat them, and drove them from their homes.

On the Georgia border white democrats came to this State and voted not only once, but in some instances three times, and led negroes to the polls and made them vote the democratic ticket. At Girard, in Russell County, the police from Columbus, Georgia, surrounded the polls and kept possession of them all day. It has also been found that the polls at Spring Hill, Barbour County, were destroyed by democrats and about six hundred votes lost to the republicans, and the son of Judge Kiels, who was the United States supervisor, was killed; also one hundred and fifty colored republicans killed and wounded at Eufaula, in the same county, on the day of election, by armed democrats, and upward of five hundred republican voters driven away from the polls.

Not a particle of evidence has been furnished by the Alabama democrats, or anybody else, that the United States troops in the slightest degree interfered with the election. On the other hand, the subordinate military officers were so bound up by General Order No. 75 that they did not feel authorized to do anything, or extend any help whatever to the election officers, except when called upon to assist United States marshals in the execution of writs issued by the United States courts. The proscription, social ostracism, withdrawal of business, and loss of employment among republicans, on account of politics, amounts to a reign of terror, and thousands of voters were lost to the republican party at the late election from these causes.

Alabama is in the same condition as some other States that have been brought more prominently into public notice. Here it is stated by one who heard the evidence that churches and school-houses of colored people are burned by white democrats, that colored men are beaten and driven from their homes, and that the northern people can have no conception of the state of society produced by these frantic efforts to destroy republicanism in that State.

I say to the Senate and I say to the country that we are grappling with a barbarism at the South that will make the negro a savage and the South a desert. The Missouri Democrat, in a long editorial article recently summing up the condition of affairs politically and otherwise in the South, said:

Having daily communication with the people of the South, and feeling their spirit in this very State, we tell the people of the North that equality of civil and political rights and even freedom of labor will go by the board, unless some measures are taken to keep up other government than any that southern democrats will maintain. We believe, friends of the North, that this is the solemn truth, which long before the presidential election will force itself upon your reluctant recognition. Vicksburg is only the vanguard of an army of riots.

I believe that it is the duty of the Senate to take warning by these things which are transpiring in the South. The evidence has been accumulating for years; our tables are piled with it. It comes to us upon every breeze which is wafted from the South. There can be no reason to doubt that unless this Congress shall take effectual means to check the outrages and wrongs in the South the very forms of republican government will be lost and the last rights of the people be trampled under foot; that one-half of the people of the South will have no political rights whatever, and that the blacks will be again reduced to slavery. For myself I desire most earnestly to assist in legislation that will check these evils and make this cowardly ruffianism unsafe; and I am determined, as far as I can, to stand by the helpless and oppressed there, and to sustain the Chief Magistrate of the United States in his efforts to restrain revolutionary disorder and enforce the laws in the South.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, and Mr. STEVENSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire to go on now?

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I presume I shall not occupy the time of the Senate more than fifteen or twenty minutes. I should prefer to go on now.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall with great pleasure yield to the Senator if I can have the floor afterward. With that understanding I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not expect or intend to make any speech of an elaborate character to the Senate. Neither have I prepared any speech, nor have I the physical strength necessary to such an undertaking. But upon the resolution now pending before the Senate I have exceeding strong convictions and have felt that one entertaining such convictions ought not to be content with casting merely a silent vote, but that, however briefly and however feebly I may express myself, it is my duty to the Senate and my duty to the country to give some of the reasons why I cannot support the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Let me say in the outset, Mr. President, that I listened with almost painful interest on Monday when the Senator from Indiana opened his remarks, in the hope of hearing something which would elucidate the real inquiry before this body, and I must say that in that hope I was utterly disappointed. The Senator from Indiana seemed to me—it may be my fault—not even to touch the question which is really before us. What is the controversy? On the 4th of March, 1873, a vacancy occurred in this body which should have been filled by the election of a Senator from the State of Louisiana. There was no want of claimants. Two gentlemen presented certificates of election, Mr. McMillen and Mr. Pinchback, both in due form, both signed by a person designating himself as governor of Louisiana, both countersigned by another person designating himself as secretary of state of the State of Louisiana, and both authenticated by the great seal of that State. Thus both complied in all particulars with the act of Congress providing for the certificates of election in cases of the election of Senators. But the person designated as governor and the person designated as secretary of state on one of these certificates were different from the persons so designated on the other. Both certificates of election were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; both are now before the Senate; and every word that the Senator from Indiana uttered the other day, and every precedent that he cited, and all the debates of past years that he caused to be read, apply with exactly the same force to the certificate of election of Mr. McMillen as to the certificate of election of Mr. Pinchback. How is it, then, that this committee presents itself before the Senate with a declaration that Mr. Pinchback is prima facie entitled to the seat, without a pretense of having gone outside of the certificates of election, and even denying the right to go behind them? Why not choose McMillen's certificate instead of Pinchback's? The truth is, sir, the case is peculiar and anomalous. Admitting all the precedents of the Senator from Indiana, we are nevertheless in this case absolutely compelled to go behind the certificate of election. We cannot help ourselves, for the question is, of the authorities signing the certificates, who was the governor and who was the secretary of state of Louisiana in January, 1873, when these certificates bear date? The certificates do not tell us. And we cannot decide between those certificates until we have ascertained which of the persons executing them possessed the authority to execute them under the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

So, sir, in reference to the resolution pending before us, we are from the very papers upon our table in reference to this election compelled to make inquiry whether, upon the certificate which the committee have reported back, William Pitt Kellogg was on the 15th of January, 1873, governor of the State of Louisiana; and in order to ascertain whether he was or not, we are at once plunged into the mire and degradation of the proceedings in that unhappy State in the autumn of 1872 and the commencement of 1873. We cannot evade it; we cannot get away from it. And inquiring into those proceedings, we have no further to go than the great volume of four or five hundred pages of testimony taken by our own committee, now lying upon our tables, and unfolding unto us the whole sickening history from its beginning to its end. Upon that testimony we have the elaborate report of that committee chosen from among the ablest and most trusted members of this body, and the evidence sustains every word of that report in all the strength of its language; and the passage of time and the developments of time during the last two years have only tended still more to verify the correctness of the conclusion of that report. I therefore am not called upon to go into the history of those transactions further than to find the facts regarding them as they lie upon our table in the evidence and in the report of that committee. What, then, are the facts? I shall not go over these at any length. It has been well called "a thrice-told tale."

Was William Pitt Kellogg elected governor of Louisiana by the people in the autumn of 1872? No, sir. The evidence in that volume demonstrates that of the votes cast he did not receive a majority, and the committee expressly find the fact. The Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN,] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] append their names to the finding of fact that in that election Mr. Kellogg was defeated. Were any returns canvassed by which he was returned as elected? None whatever. The pretended canvass by his returning board is delineated in the report of that committee in stronger language than I should care to use here. Was there any lawful returning board or board of canvassers that made such return? None. So that there is not, upon the actual facts existing, even the color of title of an election of the person whose name is signed to the certificate of election now reported by the committee as governor of Louisiana. How, then, came he to assume to place his name to this certificate? Again the record unfolds the facts.

There was an election in that State. The majority of the votes were against him. They may have been procured by intimidation, or force, or fraud. We now on this inquiry as to the capacity of Mr. Kellogg to sign and send hither such a certificate as he has done only are to ascertain the fact whether he did receive a majority of the votes or not; and the report of your committee and the evidence demonstrates that he did not. No returns of any elections were before the board which sent up a majority of the votes as having been counted by them to the Legislature of Louisiana, but the board itself was without a legal existence. But a body of men without authority, without legal existence as a returning board, by fraud, by falsehood, by forgery, by perjury, made out a return which was sent to another body designated as a Legislature, and that return founded solely upon the infamies which I have described is said by your committee and proved by the evidence to be the only color of title upon which Mr. Kellogg assumes this authority.

But this was not enough to give to him any substantive existence, as the executive of Louisiana, and he himself next appears upon the scene presenting himself before a Federal court with falsehood in his hand and perjury upon his lips to give that court jurisdiction, for in his bill he alleges for the sole purpose of giving that court jurisdiction that many thousands of voters had been deprived of the suffrage by reason of their race and color, in which there was not a shadow of truth, and he knew it at the time, and no effort has been made to substantiate it from that day to this—a bald pretext to give a corrupt judge jurisdiction of a cause over which he had no control, as the beginning of the conspiracy to install Mr. Kellogg in power. A Federal marshal, the leading manager in one of the political organizations of that State, obtains of the President by misrepresentation authority to use Federal troops to enforce the mandate of that court; and then, abusing the judicial process, if the mandate upon which these troops were employed could be called a judicial process and if it could be abused, the halls where the Legislature of Louisiana were accustomed to meet were seized by force and guarded by troops for weeks long.

The returns sent hither by the perjured returning board were indorsed by the pretended assembly. Kellogg was nominally installed in the office, and then under the protection of the Federal forces the usurpation was complete. From beginning to end, as demonstrated in the papers upon your table, fraud, falsehood, forgery, perjury, military violence, and forcible usurpation constituted the title of this man who signed this certificate of elections, and there is no man who can successfully show that he ever had any other title. He may have been defeated by intimidation and fraud. That may be true. If so, he had his appropriate remedy, which he did not choose to resort to. But that he ever had any other color of authority for the power which he assumes to exercise than that which the report of your committee ascribes to him, cannot be shown.

Now, if these things are true, the placing of his name to this paper, styled a certificate of election, adds not one whit of virtue to what that paper was when it was a white blank sheet. I know it has been said that this person was then and is now the de facto governor of Louisiana. If what I have stated and what the report of your committee demonstrates be true, he is in no legal sense, and he never has been, the de facto governor of Louisiana, for essential to a de facto government is a color at least of title; and this is a sheer usurpation carried out by force and initiated by forgery and perjury. That is all there is of it. There is not even the color of a title on which to build up a de facto government. If in reference to the citizens of Louisiana there may be something called executive authority which may be termed de facto, there is none capacitated to send to the Senate of the United States certificates of election of a Senator in this body. There is no power either by the Constitution or the laws of the United States that can execute a certificate which we can recognize but the lawful executive of the State from which the claimant comes. When a Senator comes here with his certificate of election, the signature of the governor is not to affect simply the citizens of Louisiana. It is to create a part of the law-making power of the United States. It is to create a part of the Government of the United States, and we cannot here recognize anything to constitute a part of the Government of the United States to rule New York, and Indiana, and Connecticut, as well as Louisiana, except the lawful executive authority of the State from which the certificate proceeds. In no sense is there any validity attaching to the certificate of election which the committee have reported back and upon which they claim a prima facie case from Mr. Pinchback, because we are compelled to ask what is the authority of the persons signing this paper, and asking, we are compelled to find that they have no authority. Consider if a precedent like this were to be established, if a defeated party upon the official returns in any election may be permitted by forgery and perjury to make up a pretended return and then by violence to install in office the persons designated in that pretended return, and henceforth those persons are to be regarded by the Government of the United States as the lawful authority to sign certificates of election to those who are to participate in the government of the whole Republic, what a precedent you are setting for future time!

The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] has for two days been unfolding what seems to him—I believe to a distempered imagination, but what seems to him—a grand conspiracy throughout the States recently in rebellion by fraud, by intimidation, by violence to subvert their State governments and set up new ones in their stead. If they do so, what better precedent for a democratic President of the United States to follow than that which you are now proposing? To set up a defeated candidate, defeated in a popular election, to resort to fraud and perjury and violence to install its officers in power, and then to determine here that the very sanctuary of the law for the whole nation is bound to recognize such fraudulent and usurping authority; what are we to say four years from now, if the dreams of the Senator from California prove true? I have listened painfully during this session to members of the majority in this body quoting from the long catalogue of damning precedents of the old pro-slavery democratic party ascendancy twenty and thirty years ago, not to justify, indeed, but to palliate and excuse similar atrocities to be committed now. I thought never to hear that in the legislative halls of this Government. Now, to add to that, it is proposed that you shall set the precedent of establishing this offspring of fraud and violence and usurpation here in the council chambers of the nation, not only to make this atrocious iniquity successful in setting up a usurping government in Louisiana, but to install it as a part of the government of the whole country. The stream cannot rise higher than the fountain, and the Senator that you would receive here on certificates of the authority foisted into power two years ago in Louisiana would be pointed at as an illustration of how in republican governments fraud and violence may achieve success.

Can it be possible, Senators, republican Senators, you whom I have heard here now during all this session deprecating this democratic conspiracy to seize the State governments of the South, and then to obtain their recognition by Federal authority, that you now and here are to set to them the precedent? If the facts of history are true, if the testimony of witnesses spread over five hundred printed pages is such that truth can be deduced from it, if the report of the ablest and the acutest of your members, after careful examination and elaboration of that testimony, are to be relied upon, of the facts of this case, when you get behind the face of this certificate, there can be no doubt.

And, Mr. President, I wish, as I close, to say a word or two to members of the majority of this body who may entertain such opinions as I entertain with regard to the claim of Mr. Pinchback to a seat in this body. I ask you not to sit here content with giving a silent vote. I cannot regard a favorable result of a vote of the Senate upon this resolution which shall seat Mr. Pinchback in this body otherwise than as a precedent pregnant with the most fearful consequences to the country. It is to substitute the system of Spanish-American governments for our own. We cling to law. We never permit violence to take its place if in our power, and the party that is defeated in an election by wrong under our system must resort to the due processes of law to obtain his rights; and if now, for the first time in our history, to quote the language of the Senator from Wisconsin, not now in his seat, [Mr. CARPENTER,] uttered in this Chamber a year ago, we are to adopt the principle of "fighting the devil with fire;" if when one party resorts to fraud in an election or intimidation the other may resort to perjury and usurpation, and the Government of the United States and the Senate thereof shall be bound to recognize it, who can foresee the end? I ask those who entertain such convictions as I entertain to speak to the Senate and to speak to the country before they permit such a precedent as this to be set; and I do believe that if the members of this body shall vote upon this question according to their own deepest convictions, no such disastrous precedent will be set, but we shall still remain a republic in which law and order alone shall be recognized at least in the highest legislative body in the land.

[Mr. STEVENSON addressed the Senate. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. HOWE obtained the floor.

Mr. MORTON. If the Senator from Wisconsin will yield for a moment, at the suggestion of a number of Senators on the floor, I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. SCHURZ. Make it half past seven.

Mr. MORTON. I prefer to say seven o'clock.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Pending that motion I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, it was declared that the yeas appeared to prevail.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEWART, (when his name was called.) I have paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAGER. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. OGLESBY.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 22, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Salisbury, Schurz, Stevenson, and Stockton—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Conover, Fenton, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thurman, Tipton, and Washburn—18.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion for a recess.

Mr. MORTON. I modify my motion so as to make the recess until half past seven o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4734) to establish certain post-roads; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2102) to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases;

A bill (H. R. No. 3623) regulating fees and costs, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend section 5240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the compensation of national-bank examiners;

A bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4126) authorizing the Citizens' National Bank of Sanbornton, New Hampshire, to change its name; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the question on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, the Chair will ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit the House bills on his table for the purpose of reference. ["Agreed."]

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 4734) to establish certain post-roads—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads.

The bill (H. R. No. 4730) providing for the payment of certain employees of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 2978) to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, The President pro tempore appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The President pro tempore appointed Messrs. LOGAN, SPENCER, and RANSOM.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. INGALLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] to take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If it is the desire of the Senate to go on with the debate for a reasonable time, I make no objection; but it is evident that we cannot have a full attendance after the recess to sit this matter out to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The motion is not debatable.

The Chief Clerk proceeded with and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. MORTON. Before this vote is announced, I beg to express the hope that Senators will be here promptly at half past seven o'clock.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Stockton, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Davis, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, Spencer, and Stevenson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Conover, Eaton, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thurman, Tipton, and Washburn—27.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty-six minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the resolution to admit P. B. S. Pinchback as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, upon which resolution the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] has the floor.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the pending resolution brings to the consideration of the Senate the election which took place in the State of Louisiana in 1872. The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] the other day referred to that election as the dismal swamp in our politics. I think I have traversed that swamp; at least I know that whereas I was once on one side of the swamp I am now on the other side; wherefore I think I can tell the Senate something about that portion of our political geography. I concede that it is a tangle maze, but it is not without a plan; and I propose this evening for the first time to state my view of that plan.

It has been said that the story of that election is "a thrice-told tale." That may be true; and yet I want to tell the story once more. I shall of course have to say some things that have been said by others, and better said; but nevertheless the story I shall tell of that election is a story I have not yet heard told.

Mr. President, in the summer of 1872 Henry C. Warmoth was governor of Louisiana. He had been elected by the republican party in 1868. By the democratic party he was probably hated more thoroughly, if not more justly, than any man in the State. Suddenly, and some months before the election of that year, the voice of prophecy rang through the Union predicting that, however other States might go in November, the State of Louisiana would go for the democratic ticket, and that the Legislature of that State the winter following would send Mr. Warmoth to the Senate of the United States.

Close upon the heel of that prediction came intelligence that Governor Warmoth was doing his utmost to secure the success of that party which had so bitterly opposed him. The assertion was everywhere made that under the anomalous laws of Louisiana the result of an election there depended less upon the disposition of the voters than upon the resolution of the governor, that his control of the machinery of election was so absolute that victory was sure to alight upon whatever standard he carried.

If, as is stated, Warmoth did bargain to deliver the State to the enemy, he certainly did his best to keep the bargain. His first movement was to select one B. P. Blanchard for State registrar. Upon that officer by law devolved the duty of making a registration of the voters of the State. To aid him in that work he appointed a supervisor of elections for each parish in the State outside of New Orleans. Mr. Blanchard proved an able lieutenant, but not altogether a trusty one. He has since published under his own oath a detailed statement of the frauds he caused to be perpetrated in the course of registration. To repeat the catalogue here would be tedious. It is enough to say that if there is any single fraud possible in registration not enumerated in his schedule it is one invented since 1872.

His story is so monstrous that it would challenge credulity itself if it were uncorroborated. But it is so corroborated as to defy unbelief. The matchless rascality of the man is manifest, whether he did the things he swore he did, or swore he did the things he did not do. Such a man was not likely to be employed to serve the State, but very apt to be employed to betray it. And one who would betray his State would not hesitate to betray his coconspirators when inspired thereto either by thirst for gain or thirst for revenge. His story is corroborated by the circumstance that to many of the parishes in the State he sent practiced cheats from the city of New Orleans to act as supervisors of elections. That could not have been necessary for any honest purpose. Capable supervisors might have been readily found in every parish. Unscrupulous ones seem not to have been everywhere available. The great planters in the parishes were nearly all democrats but were not all rogues. New Orleans had a surplus and New Orleans was drawn upon to make up the deficiency. His story is corroborated also by numerous witnesses who testify to specific frauds in various parishes. By artifices too numerous to mention great numbers were excluded from registering who ought to have been registered; great numbers were registered who ought not to have been. By a singular coincidence it happened that the voters who were not registered were republicans, and the registered who were not voters democrats.

To show that he meant business and to prevent the unregistered from voting, Mr. Blanchard issued private instructions to his supervisors in the following terms:

You will please direct commissioners of election to receive no votes upon the affidavits supplied by the radical party under the enforcement act unless the person applying or offering to vote is known by them to have been wrongfully deprived of registration.

Mr. Blanchard's story is corroborated by the fact that he was asked to consent that one of the three commissioners of election at the different voting precincts should be a republican, and he refused it.

Such a minority representation could of course do no wrong. It could not even prevent wrong-doing. It could at most only aid the detection of wrong-doing.

His story was also corroborated by another circumstance. Under the enforcement act, so called, of 1872, the circuit court of the United States appointed supervisors of election in many of the parishes and voting precincts. Those officers could not control the voting or the counting of the votes. They could only scrutinize those acts. Accordingly Mr. Blanchard sent a secret circular to his supervisors, instructing them to count the votes for electors and members of Congress first, and then to count the votes for State officers, "bearing in mind," he added, "the fact that the United States supervisors of elections and deputy marshals have no right whatever to scrutinize, inspect, or be present at the counting of the State and parish vote." Clearly such inspection could have been objectionable only to a dishonest count. An honest count would have courted scrutiny.

His story is further corroborated by the strange results of registration in many localities. Of those results two specimens must suffice.

The parish of East Baton Rouge had a white population in 1870 of 6,471. The white voters registered in 1872 were 1,482. Its colored population was 11,342, and its colored vote registered was only 1,559, exceeding the white vote by less than one hundred.

The parish of Orleans had a total population in 1870 of 191,418. Its male population more than twenty-one years of age was 47,737. The male citizens more than twenty-one years of age were 35,586, showing that 9,151 males more than twenty-one years of age were unnaturalized aliens. Yet in 1872 the State registrar not only registered 20,581 colored voters, but registered 34,501 white voters. Thus the voters registered in 1872 numbered 17,496 more than the voters found by the census two years previous.

Unless Mr. Blanchard was more liberal in registering colored voters in the parish of Orleans than his subordinates were in any other parish, that whole excess must be charged to over-registration of white votes. A witness testified that as many as one hundred and twenty-one were registered from a single residence in the city.

Mr. President, in the light of such facts it is quite safe to conclude that if Mr. Blanchard ever consulted truth in any of his utterances, it was not when he swore he would discharge his official duties according to law, but rather when he swore he had discharged them in violation of all law. Such was the character of the State registrar and such the character of his work. The next step was to gather the votes. The polling-places in the several parishes were selected by Blanchard's parish supervisors according to their uncontrolled discretion. It need only be observed that the discretion some of those supervisors displayed in the discharge of that duty proved that they were well fitted for the scandalous trust reposed in them. Each poll was presided over by three commissioners of election selected by Mr. Blanchard's parish supervisors.

The law charged the commissioners with very simple duties. They were to maintain order at the several voting precincts, receive the ballot offered by each qualified voter, deposit it in the box, and make three different records of that vote.

Of course the commissioners could not be cheated by republicans. They could cheat republicans in three ways: First, by receiving democratic votes from illegal voters; second, by refusing republican votes from legal voters; third, by allowing turbulence and tumult to deter republicans from offering their votes. That they did cheat by each of those methods has been testified not merely by scores but by thousands of witnesses. As an example of the first method of cheating I will cite Madison Parish. There the white vote registered was 360. The whole white population was but 936, and yet the democratic vote was returned at 828, almost three times the number of registered white voters, and almost equal to the whole white population.

As an example of the second method of cheating Caddo Parish is cited. There, while a white population of 5,913 was made to register 1,549 white voters and return 1,817 democratic votes, a colored population of 15,799 yielded but 3,339 colored voters and but 1,576 republican votes. C. W. Keating swore that he saw 363 turned away from one box in Caddo Parish who had tried all day to vote. In Bossier Parish alone over 1,300 republican voters swore their votes were rejected. In the case of Kellogg vs. Warmoth et al., in the United States district court, the judge states as a fact, found that over 4,000 colored republicans from different parishes swore to their offer to vote and the denial of it.

Of intimidation examples were proved in a great many parishes in Jackson, in Saint Landry, in Livingston, in East Baton Rouge, in Bossier and others.

At six o'clock p. m. the polls closed, and the next step was to secure a count of the ballots. For that purpose the law required that "immediately upon the closing of the polls" the commissioners should seal the boxes and proceed with them to the parish supervisor. One would suppose that democratic officers, hungering for honesty as democrats claim to be, might carry sealed ballot-boxes from one town to another in the same parish without letting any ballots spill out or any leak in. But Mr. Blanchard's commissioners could not do even that. How many boxes were stuffed is not known; for no investigation has yet been made. Mr. Forman, of the Warmoth board of returns, testified that the boxes from one precinct in New Orleans and one in Jefferson Parish were stuffed; and other witnesses swore to the same treatment in East Baton Rouge, in Point Coupee, in Madison, in Grant, Webster, Saint Helena, and other parishes.

The next act upon the programme was to count the ballots, ascertain the number for each candidate, make triplicate statements of the result in tabular form, forward two statements to the governor by different conveyances, and file one with the archives of the parish. Even that duty was only partially performed. Six whole parishes were either not returned at all or returned in such a manner as to be excluded from count by the democratic board. One of those parishes was Iberville, which had a registered vote of 743 white, and 3,303 colored. Thirty-five printed pages of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections are occupied with affidavits and other papers to justify the exclusion of that parish from count.

One Thorp was the supervisor for that parish. He had been sent up from New Orleans. The republicans seem to have assumed he was sent, not for honest but for fraudulent purposes. They suspected that he meant to cheat in the count. They therefore tried to witness the count. They were kept outside of the court-house. They molested no one; they made but one demand, to wit, that the votes should be counted. Thorp and the commissioners of election kept them there until the night of the 5th, long enough to have counted the vote ten times. And then the commissioners from each precinct drew up a formal certificate that they were afraid to count—not afraid to refuse, but afraid to grant the only thing demanded of them—and so left. Madison Parish was registered at 360 white and 2,365 colored. It was counted by the democratic board at 828 democratic, and 1,227 republican votes. That return was made, not in Madison Parish, but, according to the testimony, in the city of New Orleans, and was a manifest forgery. Mr. John Ray stated before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections that the returns from other parishes were evident forgeries, and instanced Grant, Point Coupee, and East Baton Rouge as examples. He said the committee could be satisfied of the fact by an inspection of the papers. Whether they were so satisfied or not does not appear.

And here the fourth act in the farce of the election of 1872 ended. The performance of registering, balloting, counting, and returning was concluded. All these acts had been played under democratic management. It is not only manifest the republicans had not cheated, but it is evident they had no possible chance to cheat. The democratic party had on the contrary the fullest opportunity to cheat in every stage of the performance, and they availed themselves of it. The republicans had been denied registration and registered republicans had been excluded from voting. Republican votes cast had been abstracted from the boxes; democratic votes not cast had been thrust into the boxes. The count had been falsified and returns had been forged. All these villainies had been performed by Warmoth's subordinates. One thing remained to be done. To garner the fruits of all these frauds, it was necessary to read and add up the votes returned from the several parishes and proclaim the persons elected to the several offices. One would suppose it could matter but little who did that work. Republicans read like democrats—everything except the constitution. Both parties use the same system of arithmetic. Given the same returns to read and add up, it is hardly supposable that a republican and democrat would differ much in the result. But Warmoth well knew that nothing short of an unscrupulous canvass of the returns could utilize the mammoth frauds which had preceded the returns. To secure such a canvass he himself came to the front.

Then was seen in Louisiana such an exhibition of legerdemain as never had a parallel elsewhere. The limitations of the constitution were ignored; the commands of the statutes were defied; the sanctity of the courts outraged, the authority of commissions contemned.

The law of Louisiana confided the canvass of returns from the several parishes to a tribunal called the board of returns. That board in November, 1872, consisted of the governor, lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state ex officio, and of one John Lynch and one T. C. Anderson, by name. Of that number, the governor was the only one who had contracted to sell the State to the democratic party. In order to deliver the State according to contract he knew he must create a new board, and before he could create a new board it was necessary to get rid of the existing board. To that work he addressed himself. The law required the canvass to commence ten days after the election. Accordingly, on the 13th of November the board assembled. The governor, the lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, and John Lynch only were present. Anderson and the lieutenant-governor had been candidates before the people at the preceding election. Warmoth had no difficulty in persuading his colleagues that those two members were disqualified for acting as returning officers. The law of the State so declared. Lynch and Herron, who was secretary of state, readily acquiesced in the proposition to drop Mr. Anderson and the lieutenant-governor from the board. But no magistrate was present, so the members were not sworn in, and without adopting any resolution the board adjourned to the next day. Thus in this new Genesis, "the evening and the morning were the first day."

On the 14th the board reassembled. The same persons were present, and a magistrate was also in attendance, who proceeded to administer the oath of office to Warmoth, to Herron, the secretary of state, and to Lynch. The lieutenant-governor declined to be sworn until the question of his disability was resolved. When a quorum had been sworn they resolved unanimously that Pinchback and Anderson were disqualified. Thus two vacancies were made. But the law required those vacancies to be filled by the remaining members of the board. Of those members Warmoth felt the majority to be unreliable for his purpose. Immediately after Herron had voted with Lynch and Warmoth to create two vacancies one Mr. Jack Wharton appeared upon the stage, who pulled out a commission from Warmoth appointing him to be secretary of state in the place of Herron, removed. The blow was sudden; it staggered the republican members, but it was not admitted to be a knock-down. Herron and Lynch denied the governor's power to remove the secretary of state; Warmoth and Wharton asserted that power. Herron and Lynch chose Longstreet and Hawkins to fill the two vacancies. Warmoth and Wharton chose F. H. Hatch and Durant Da Ponte to fill the same vacancies. Thus two sets of men appeared, each claiming to be the board of returns. Which was the legal board depended, of course, upon the question whether the governor could rightfully remove the secretary of state. If he could, then Wharton was secretary of state and Warmoth and Wharton had legally chosen Hatch and Da Ponte to fill the vacancies. If the governor could not make such a removal, then of course Herron was still secretary of state and Herron and Lynch had legally chosen Longstreet and Hawkins to fill these vacancies.

Right here it may as well be said as anywhere that the supreme court of Louisiana has since determined that the governor could not make any such removal. Believing such removal to be illegal, the Herron party commenced legal proceedings in the proper court of the State, designated as the eighth district court, to restrain the Wharton party from assuming to act as the returning board. That suit was commenced on the 14th day of November, and on the 19th the court pronounced judgment against the defendants, thus affirming the authority of the Herron board. But Warmoth was not the sort of governor to surrender to the judgment of a court. The court having adjudged the Herron board to be legal upon the 19th, on the next day Warmoth proceeded to change the law. To effect that, he drew from a pigeon-hole an old bill which had passed both houses of the Legislature during the previous winter; and then, after the Legislature which passed it had ceased to exist, he approved the bill and proclaimed it a law. By that maneuver he claimed to have repealed the previous act of 1870 under which the Herron board was created. But the constitution of Louisiana provides that—

All officers shall continue to discharge the duty of their offices until their successors are inducted into office.

The bill which the governor approved on the 20th provides that the board of returns should be elected by the Senate; and the senate was not in session and could not be convened until the returns were canvassed. The way before the governor seemed rugged. Grave difficulties still confronted him. What he must have was a new board to canvass the returns. The constitution of his State said to him the existing board of returns shall continue to discharge their duties until their successors are inducted into office. The new statute which he had just proclaimed said that the successors of the existing board could not be inducted into office until they had been elected by the senate. The genius of the governor was equal to the occasion. He straightway appointed himself to be a sort of deputy senate, and then proceeded to elect a board of returns. So appeared a new pretender to the functions of the board of returns for Louisiana.

In order that this new board might not be bothered by the district court in which Judge Dibble presided, the governor next proceeded to commission one W. A. Elmore to be judge of that court. He had precisely as much authority to issue such commission as he had to commission a chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. But he issued the commission. He sent Judge Elmore to the court-room "early," according to his own testimony. Accordingly when Judge Dibble arrived to open his court at the usual hour in the morning he found Judge Elmore already upon the bench. That there might be no more mistakes in serving process he also commissioned a sheriff. As suits to try the title to offices are prosecuted in the name of the attorney-general of the State, and as he did not want the title of any of his own friends questioned, he commissioned a new attorney-general. He commissioned many other officers. All this was done without any canvass of the vote by any board whatever, and was done in defiance of all the law there was in Louisiana. But in spite of all these acrobatic feats, the Herron board obstinately persisted in their right to count the votes.

Such, then, was the situation on the 21st of November. On that day Governor Warmoth issued his proclamation convening the General Assembly. The constitution of that State gives to the governor authority to convene the Legislature on "extraordinary occasions." Governor Warmoth seemed to think that was an extraordinary occasion. It is doubtful if so manifest a truth as that was ever shaken out from between his teeth before. Indeed, that was an extraordinary occasion. Nothing like it ever before occurred in the history of our States. It is to be hoped that nothing like it will ever occur again.

The occasion was this: An election had been held, every step in which had been imbedded in fraud. Of that election the governor held partial returns; of those returns he wanted enough counted to return a Legislature which would declare McEnery governor and send himself to the Senate of the United States. For that purpose he had improvised a board of returns. But the laws of Louisiana said his board should not canvass those returns. Those laws designated another board for that purpose. But Warmoth said the latter board should not have the returns to canvass. He had gone on commissioning officers as long as he dared without count of the returns. But there are limits beyond which the boldest criminals dare not go. Even Warmoth hesitated to appoint members to the Legislature of the State, although he claimed the right to appoint the men who should select the Legislature.

The occasion was an extraordinary one, but hardly so extraordinary as the way chosen by the governor to meet that occasion. The sole difficulty of the occasion was to get a Legislature counted in suited to his purposes. The way he took to meet the occasion was to summon a Legislature to convene without any counting. He might with the same propriety have called the assembly together without any election. Manifestly it was a call for volunteers. Defying the tribunal designated by law to ascertain and publish the results of the election, he summoned his retainers from the parishes to muster with his police of the metropolis and install the Legislature of his choice, regardless of the popular choice. The Legislature was summoned to meet on the 9th of December.

The interval was spent by the rival parties in various litigation, either to prevent things from being done or to test the validity of things done. After forcing Dibble from the bench no further change was made by Warmoth in the constitution of the courts, except that one of the judges of the supreme court was induced to resign his seat to become Warmoth's attorney and allow Warmoth to fill the vacancy. What the inducement was for that resignation does not appear. The suit between the so-called Herron board and the Wharton board was removed to the supreme court of the State. By that court it was held that the former and not the latter was the legal board of returns. Thus it was settled, if the courts of Louisiana can be allowed to interpret her own laws, that in spite of Wharton's appointment Herron continued to be secretary of state. That, in spite of Warmoth's conspiracy with Wharton, Herron and his associates were alone authorized to canvass the returns, and in spite of Warmoth's tampering with statutes, they alone continued to have that authority. That decision was not pronounced, however, until January. Wherefore between the 20th of November, when Warmoth attempted to abrogate the Herron board by repealing the statute which created it, until the 9th of December, when the Legislature assembled, two boards continued to make believe canvass the returns. One had partial returns before them but no authority to consider them. One had full authority to consider them but no returns to consider.

Notwithstanding these embarrassments both boards published before the 9th of December full lists of members elected to the senate and to the house. It is evident that in a contest very little weight could be given to either of those lists. To the list made by the Herron board it is well objected that the board had not adequate evidence before it on which to make a determination. It was denied the official returns. The same objection is urged against the determination of the other board. It had only partial returns. From some of the parishes it had received no returns, from some it had forged returns, from others it had returns notoriously and infamously false. Besides it had no authority to determine anything as to the result of the election upon any evidence whatever. One tribunal abused a jurisdiction it had, the other usurped a jurisdiction which it had not and abused it also. No law-abiding citizen can pay the slightest respect to the finding of the Warmoth board. But one person, at least, was bound to respect the findings of the other. That one person was the secretary of state.

The law of Louisiana is explicit. Prescribing the duties of the board in canvassing and compiling returns, it says:

One copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation by printing in the official journal and such other newspapers as it may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the name of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected.

The returns thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers until set aside after a contest according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such returns be declared to be elected.

Nothing can be more explicit. Accordingly the Herron board filed its list of persons elected with George E. Bovee, who had in the mean time assumed the office of secretary of state under a judgment of the supreme court. The other board filed its list also with Mr. Jack Wharton, who still pretended to be secretary of state. The statute further declares—

That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and to the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as according to the returns have been elected to each branch of the General Assembly. And it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators so furnished upon the roll of the house and senate respectively. And those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives and the senate.

Both Bovee and Wharton transmitted their several lists to the clerk of the house of representatives and to the secretary of the senate.

Which one of those rival secretaries the clerk of the house and the secretary of the senate would have recognized is not perhaps certainly known. It is known which ought to have been recognized. Louisiana said, speaking through her highest court, that Bovee was secretary. Nobody said Wharton was but Governor Warmoth.

But just here a new actor appeared upon the scene. Just at this point Judge Durell, of the United States district court, came to the front. Up to this point Warmoth had seemed omnipotent. Insensible to law, to right, to decency, he had trampled on the commands of the constitution, he had swapped judges, and dispensed commissions at will. Throughout the whole scene of anarchy and wild turmoil the democratic party had stood placid and serene. According to its mythology despotism all that time had slumbered, while the genius of liberty had laughed and clapped her hands. But suddenly the genius of liberty was seen to shudder and take her flight from Louisiana. Despotism in the form of Durell awoke and stalked into the arena. From that moment the memory of all previous crimes was obliterated; the stifled voters, the rifled ballot-boxes, the suppressed returns, the false and forged returns, were all forgotten; and the country from the Atchafalaya to the Belize, and from Key West to Sitka, has resounded with anathemas upon Judge Durell. Let it still so resound. It is not my purpose to defend Judge Durell. But it is my purpose to show that he did not "organize" the government of Louisiana; that he did not trench upon the authority of the State; that he did not divert by a hair's breadth the current of her laws. How came Durell on that scene, and what did he there? Let it be remembered that more than half the voters of Louisiana hold their right to vote not by the assent of the balance of her people, but under the sanction of the Constitution of the United States. Congress stands specially instructed to legislate for the enforcement of that right. Congress has legislated for its enforcement.

By the act of May, 1870, two great commanding guarantees are declared to that right of suffrage. The third section provides substantially that when by the laws of a State an act is required to be done as a condition for voting, an offer to do the act, if wrongfully denied, is equivalent to doing it. In other words, that an offer to register, by one qualified to register, shall, if wrongfully refused, be deemed equivalent to registry. The twenty-third section provides that if one be deprived of his election to any office, except that of elector for President, Vice-President, member of Congress, or of the State Legislature, by reason of the denial of suffrage to any citizen on account of race or color, his right to such office shall not be impaired thereby. And such person may bring an appropriate suit in the circuit or district court of the United States "to determine the rights of the parties to such office." No lawyer, who concedes the validity of that act, will deny that under its sanction the courts of the United States had full jurisdiction to hear and determine the result of the election of 1872 for every officer voted for, with the exceptions named, if it was alleged that the result was controlled by the rejection of votes on account of color. And no lawyer will deny that on such hearing it was the duty of the court, to count in addition to all the votes actually cast for parties at that election, every vote actually offered and wrongfully rejected thereat.

Under the sanction of that act William P. Kellogg and C. C. Antoine severally commenced suits in the circuit court of the United States, District Judge Durell presiding. Kellogg's bill was filed on the 16th of November; Antoine's on the 7th of December. To one not familiar with Louisiana practice both bills seem crudely drawn. Very likely both would have been amended upon demurrer; very likely some of the averments would have been struck out upon motion. But no such motion was submitted, no demurrer was interposed. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Both bills contained the jurisdictional averments, that, among other frauds perpetrated or contemplated, was this: That ten thousand lawful voters had been denied registration and suffrage on account of color.

I was told that the honorable Senator from Connecticut, whom I do not see in his seat this evening, [Mr. FERRY,] said this afternoon that the only averment which gave the district court jurisdiction was an admitted perjury; that there was no pretense that any such voters were rejected. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has been as much misled on this point as I myself was several years ago. The testimony is past all denial that there were thousands of such votes rejected. But I did not expect to hear in the Senate that the jurisdiction of a court depended upon the truth of the averments made in the bill. I supposed, so far as the question of jurisdiction was concerned, if the bill contained the proper averments the court would assume them to be true rather than disclaim jurisdiction upon the assumption they were false.

Sir, the court had jurisdiction.

Whatever the court did in such a suit might be avoided for error, but it was not void. At least that is true so long as the court confined its action to the relief prayed in the bill. In one particular the court went beyond the prayer of the bill. To the Kellogg bill, McEnery, the democratic candidate for governor, was made defendant, with Warmoth and the Warmoth board of returns. A long catalogue of frauds was recited as having been perpetrated pending and subsequent to the election. And the bill averred that all those frauds were to be consummated by the canvass to be made by Warmoth's pretended board of returns. The court was asked to restrain that board from making a canvass and to restrain McEnery from entering upon the office under color of their canvass.

Antoine's bill was more sweeping in its averments and more abundant in supplication. In each case the restraining order was granted in the very terms asked for. Of this no complaint seems to have been made. The orders were not even appealed from; they were simply disregarded. But on the night of the 6th of December the judge issued an order in the Kellogg case not asked for by the bill. The material part of this order was as follows:

It is hereby ordered that the marshal of the United States for the district of Louisiana shall forthwith take possession of the building known as Mechanics' Institute and occupied as the State-house for the assembling of the Legislature therein, in the city of New Orleans, and hold the same subject to the further order of this court, and in the mean while to prevent all unlawful assemblage therein under the guise or pretext of authority claimed by virtue of pretended canvass and returns made by said pretended returning officers in contempt and violation of said restraining order; but the marshal is directed to allow the ingress and egress to and from the public offices in said building of persons entitled to the same.

That order has been widely and fiercely denounced. I join in denouncing it. It was a political and not a judicial order. By it the judicial ermine was dragged in the mire of politics, and of Louisiana politics at that; but the order harmed no man; it deprived no single being of a single right.

It is said that order was void. I concede it for two reasons: First, because I think it was void; and, second, because, so far as its effect upon the character of the Legislature is concerned, it is wholly immaterial whether it was void or voidable. If voidable merely, it was a justification for those who enforced it; if void, it was no justification for any one. In neither case did it or could it extinguish any legal right. The whole scope of the order was to direct the marshal to take possession of the State-house and prevent unlawful assembling therein. The marshal was expressly directed to allow ingress to and egress from the offices to all persons entitled to the same. All it said or was intended to say is, allow all men to enter who have a right to do so; but let no man enter upon the authority of the Warmoth board. All the law in Louisiana proclaimed precisely the same thing; all the law in Louisiana declared that the Warmoth board had no authority to license any one to enter the capitol of the State. That has been declared by the supreme court of Louisiana in numerous cases. I speak in the language of law and of common sense when I say a void order of the court can foreclose no right. If that order was void, and in pursuance of it Marshal Packard kept any lawful member out of the State-house, he and all who abetted him, including the judge, are liable to the parties aggrieved in damages to be recovered in any court having jurisdiction. Yet I have not heard that any such suit has been commenced. Sir, none will be commenced by any one who is responsible for costs. Those loud lamenting innocents dare not sue the judge or the marshal for keeping them out of the State-house, because those men simply prevented their doing what the law of the State forbid them to do. They know if they had entered that building and attempted to control the organization of either house, every committing magistrate in the city was bound on complaint to issue warrants for their arrest.

On such arrest they could plead but one defense; and that was the canvass and return of the Warmoth board. Such defense was impotent; they knew it. The supreme court of the State has so especially instructed them and us.

But it is said Durell's order was actually enforced, and enforced by Federal bayonets. All that is true. Two soldiers crossed bayonets over the door of the capitol, and Warmoth's volunteers did not enter. But the man who does a thing is no worse than he who orders it done. If Durell's order impaired no right, executing it impaired no right. If under that order men were kept out of the State-house who had a right to enter, the right survived the order of the judge and the duress of the soldiers. If those restrained, on the contrary, had no right to enter, then wrong only was baffled at the door of the capitol, and right triumphed there.

The Court of Claims in this District has no equity jurisdiction whatever. It cannot rightfully issue an injunction in any case. But if it should issue an order, upon the assembling of the next House of Representatives, directing the marshal to permit every man to enter who had a certificate of election and to keep out all claimants who had no certificates, it is difficult to see who would be aggrieved by that order. The General of the Army might set a brigade of artillery to enforce it. Still the House would be organized by the very men to whom the law assigns that duty; and the lawyer who should declare such House to be organized by the Court of Claims would be hooted out of professional circles. And even if the Court of Claims should do what Durell did not do; if it should order that all who held certificates of election should be kept out and only defeated candidates be admitted to the House, does any lawyer suppose the Army could vitalize such an order as that; that a House of Representatives could be organized in pursuance of it? The first attempt to enforce it would be the signal for the arrest of every judge who issued the order and every man who attempted to execute it, whether in the uniform or out of it.

This is a Government of laws, not of force. The laws are administered by a variety of agents. Each one of these agents is protected so long as he keeps within his prescribed sphere and does only what the law permits him to do. Not one of them has the slightest protection outside of that sphere. And of all those agents not one is so jealously watched or more rigorously restrained within its prescribed orbit than the military power. Everybody else may trespass and be regarded with some indulgence, but the soldier who steps an inch beyond the line prescribed to him has no forgiveness in this world and is begrudged forgiveness in the next. This truth has been strikingly illustrated during the past few weeks.

For years mobs, organized by a political interest and for a political purpose, have ravaged large districts of the country, have shed blood by the barrel and butchered men by the thousand. Except a little intermittent whining on the part of some petulant republican in Congress or an occasional lament from some republican newspaper, such crimes have created no concern anywhere. Patriot statesmen seemed to think the tree of liberty grew all the more luxuriantly for being watered by the blood of the helpless. The few who complained have been jeered by the taunt that they were trying to make political capital. A great soldier who called professional murderers "bandits" has been denounced in this Chamber as unfit to live. But, when the other day, five rioters had forced themselves in defiance of law into seats belonging to members of the Legislature of Louisiana and two soldiers at the request of the governor escorted them out without shedding a drop of blood, without making or even smoothing a wrinkle in their garments in doing so, a part of this Senate sprang to their feet as if they felt the Capitol begin to rock on its foundation. The Senator from Missouri thought he heard freedom shriek; the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] imagined he heard the last groan of the expiring Constitution; the disturbed and overwrought fancy of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] caught the despairing wail of Louisiana herself, dying because her laws were enforced. The city of Boston a few years since saw her most renowned citizen brutally beaten in the Senate Chamber and her leading journal was moved to say only that the event was "unfortunate." But when Boston saw De Trobriand, at the request of the governor unloose the clutch of five malefactors who held Louisiana by the throat, she fainted from excess of sensibility and was only restored to consciousness when Wendell Phillips threw cold water in her face. Later still, the city of New York looked on unruffled while a political procession filed through her streets flaunting in God's sunlight a banner inscribed with "Kansas and Sumner—let them bleed." Yet when New York saw a few soldiers restore peace and law to the capital of Louisiana she made a respectable attempt at hysterics. Her great jurist, who has learnedly discussed the history of the Constitution, was seared into utter forgetfulness of its text. Her great attorney, who keeps on hand the largest and most varied assortment of legal opinions to be found anywhere, seized the occasion to put on the market some of his goods more faded and shop-worn than even the retail dealers in calico ever care to offer; and he whom, but a few days since, the Legislature of New York introduced to the country as her "most eminent poet," he who sang so sweetly of "Thanatopsis" and "A Forest Hymn," gave alarming symptoms that it was time for him once more to retire to the "Solitudes" and "reassure his feeble virtue."

Soldiers who were denounced as "Lincoln's hirelings," even when bleeding in the toils of civil war, must expect very bitter rebuke if they presume to disperse a mob.

Mr. President, under Durell's order no violence was done to any one. It surely sacrificed no life. It practically saved many lives. There is too much reason to believe that but for the presence of these soldiers Warmoth's volunteers, backed by his police, would have flooded the State-house. Then a collision between those having right to seats under the certificates of the legal board, and those claiming right under the certificates of the condemned board, is too probable. In that event the sacrifice of human life was sure to be the result.

Still Durell left the domain of the judge and entered that of the politician. For that act he has been driven from the bench, and his name is made a theme of reproach throughout two hemispheres. History will some time take note of the difference between the treatment accorded to Judge Durell and that accorded to the late Chief Justice Taney. In Kellogg against Warmoth and others a district judge, having jurisdiction of the case, issued an order said to be void. He did it for political and party reasons. All that may be admitted. But it impaired no individual right. It tended to preserve right. It did not insult Louisiana; it saved Louisiana from insult. It did not defy her authority; it preserved her authority.

But the case of Dred Scott against Sandford was not heard by a district court. It was tried in the court of last resort. That court avowed its utter want of jurisdiction. The issue was entirely feigned and purely political. The question decided was much disputed between political parties, but not at all disputed by the parties to the record. Dred Scott was made to claim his freedom. But he did not want his freedom. His former owner had tried in vain to drive him into freedom and into Illinois. Sandford was made to resist that claim. But he did not own Dred Scott. He, if a slave at all, belonged to the wife of a Massachusetts member of Congress. She for a long time was ignorant of the litigation; and when by accident she learned of it, she at once took steps to manumit the man. The facts in the case were agreed to by counsel and not proved by witnesses, and could not be proved by witnesses. Sitting upon the trial of that mock cause, the Chief Justice dared to say that no State could make of a man a citizen, privileged to sue in the courts of the United States, though the man was born upon her soil and born free, if he had any African blood in his veins; and he said all that in the teeth of many earlier decisions holding that a soulless corporation, a mere artificial person, created by the laws of the same State to make shoes or mop-handles, was such a citizen and privileged to sue in the Federal courts. And then, having declared that neither Dred Scott nor any of his race had any right to come into the Federal courts for judgment of any kind, the Chief Justice kept him there, made him the representative of his race, while he went on to pronounce a judgment as much more perverse and atrocious than Durell's order, as that order was more atrocious than Popham's judgment in the case of Monopolies. With nobody to speak for the great interests he undertook to doom, but such counsel as chose to appear for poor Dred Scott, he not only pronounced a judgment which consigned him to bondage, but one which annulled all the laws which Congress had enacted in the course of sixty years prohibiting slavery in the different Territories of the Union, and which refastened the chains upon all who by migration to such Territories had been emancipated.

It is doubtful if a judgment so sweeping or so malignant in its effects was ever before given, not excepting the judgment which Charles I. extorted in favor of ship-money, or that challenged by James II. in favor of the dispensing power. Taney survived that terrible decree. One great political party applauded it; another party regarded it only as a foul blot upon the escutcheon of a great jurist. In spite of it the Chief Justice went down to his grave still honored; and his country, while it reversed his shameful decree, has but lately ordered his statue to be placed with that of other chiefs in the hall of that court wherein he consigned a man, and thought he consigned an empire, to slavery.

Mr. Warmoth was defeated but not conquered. He rallied for one more effort. Louisiana, re-enforced by two soldiers, had maintained the supremacy of her laws. Louisiana law declared that those senators and representatives whose names are placed on the rolls by the clerk and secretary, respectively, in accordance with the certificate of the board of returns, "and none other," shall be competent to organize the house of representatives and senate. Precisely those senators and members, "and none others," had been permitted to organize the senate and house of representatives. But having failed to force his volunteers into the capitol, Warmoth made one last effort to jerk the capitol from under the Legislature. The Mechanics' Institute, so called, in the city of New Orleans, had been occupied as the capitol of the State. There her Legislature has assembled year after year. There the governor and other executive and administrative officers of the State had their offices. There the new Legislature convened pursuant to Governor Warmoth's proclamation on the 9th of December, 1872. But on the 11th of the same December the irrepressible governor issued his proclamation, naming the city hall as the capitol.

There he betook himself, and there he assembled all his volunteers who had been excluded from the Legislature by the board of returns, and some who had not been so excluded. And as he had before in defiance of law attempted to make a board of returns and secretary of state, judges, sheriffs, and attorney-general, he now attempted to make a Legislature. On the 10th of January, nearly a month after the governor opened his side legislature, six senators deliberately withdrew from the senate sitting in Mechanics' Institute and repaired to the city hall. Nothing could more forcibly demonstrate the utter and wanton disregard of law which characterized the whole Warmoth party than that act of the seceding senators.

Louisiana has been paraded before the country and exhibited at every democratic fair as the much-suffering, long-forbearing victim of oppression because certain men were kept out of her Legislature, every one of whom her laws prohibited from entering the door. Yet when six senators, whose rights to seats were unquestioned, voluntarily withdrew therefrom, according to democratic diagnosis Louisiana was not hurt but healed thereby. Mere common sense would be apt to conclude that a State would suffer as much, when one she had commissioned as senator, withdrew from her service, as when one she had refused to commission, was excluded from that service. According to democratic dialectics Louisiana rejoices when her laws are defied and agonizes only when they are obeyed.

Yet those senators not only left the senate after they had acted with it for a month, but they assembled with a body which for a month they had denied to be a senate. A senator, even a Louisiana senator, though a democrat, should be able to discover the senate-house in less than a month. But Senator Todd and his seceding colleagues seem to have believed the senate of Louisiana was an itinerant body and traveled with them; that where they went the senate went, and where they rested the senate rested. Those gentlemen left the senate and published to the world their reasons for going. Only one of those reasons demands my notice, and that only because it suggests the real difficulty in the Louisiana case. They make no question as to who composed the board of returns, but they pithily say "the question who constitutes the legal returning board is subordinate to the question what are the returns. The returning officers may count in or count out members, but the returns will show for themselves."

The very gist of the Louisiana case could not be more succinctly stated. A board of returns may count in men who are not elected and may count out men who are elected. Nowhere is that great fact better understood than in Louisiana. What they refuse to understand there is that the law of Louisiana declares the count of the board of returns to be prima facie correct, and that those, and only those "counted in" are allowed to take part in the organization of the Legislature. That a house and senate organized by those "counted in," to the exclusion of those "counted out," is the only authority to correct the count of the board of returns. The board of returns may certify that one is elected to the house when the returns in their possession show another to have been elected. But the law of Louisiana is explicit, and says even in that case the certificate is prima facie evidence of right to a seat, and the remedy for that foul wrong is for the house, when organized, to lay before the world the true returns, seat the true member, and consign the faithless board to infamy. If, as is possible, at least in Louisiana, the board returns a majority as infamous as themselves, that majority may confirm and not correct the outrage. The only redress for such a villainy is to appeal to the people at the next election. But if, as is possible, the people are as corrupt as the members of the board and the members of the house, then the State is hopelessly imbedded in corruption, and her people at least are unfitted for self-government.

"The returns will show for themselves," it is said. Only upon one condition will they show for themselves. They must be seen before they will show for themselves. The returns of the Louisiana election have not been seen, only in part; and no one yet surely knows how large or how small a portion of the returns have been seen. But even when seen the returns will only speak for themselves. They are not sure to speak for the parishes. Unhappily a parish supervisor can lie as well as a board of returns. Very strong proof is required to rebut the evidence that some of those supervisors did lie in 1872. And the returns when truthful are not conclusive of the vote of the precincts. The returns when true only show the state of the boxes when opened by the supervisor. The boxes may have been falsified by the commissioners before the supervisor saw them. Many of the boxes in 1872 were so falsified. Nor is the box when not stuffed conclusive of the election; ballots from illegal voters may be, and in Louisiana were, received into the boxes; ballots from legal voters may be, and in Louisiana were, excluded from the boxes.

Undoubtedly it is the duty of the house when a seat is contested to disregard the certificate of the board if it be contradicted by the returns. So it is the duty of the house also to disregard the returns, if it be shown by competent proof that they do not present the true state of the boxes when the voting closed. Even the boxes may be impeached by proof that illegal votes were deposited in them or legal votes excluded from them. The house of representatives, when organized and called upon to adjudicate between rival claimants to seats, has but one question to solve—what was the actual wish of the constituency? In the solution of that question the certificate of the returning officer, the return of the supervisor, ballots received by the commissioners of election, are only so many different witnesses, and all those witnesses may be contradicted by the testimony of the electors, showing that some who voted were disqualified to vote, and others who were qualified were denied the right to do so. Whoever would impeach the judgment of the House must show not merely that it is not supported by one or the other of those witnesses, but that it does not conform to the will of the constituent body.

No man legally accredited was excluded from the capitol by the military guard employed by Marshal Packard in 1872. Every man so excluded on the 9th of December, 1872, and every man removed from the house on the 4th of January, 1874, was attempting a criminal usurpation. He was in open and flagrant revolt against the supreme authority of the State. He would have been no guiltier if he had attempted to force himself into a judicial office as Elmore did, or into an executive or municipal office as others did. It will not do to say they were in fact elected, for two reasons: First, because no one knows the fact to be so; and, second, because if the fact were known to be so, yet lacking the certificate of the returning officers, they could not be permitted to seats but by the vote of the house or senate after its organization.

In 1855 the vote for governor in Wisconsin was very close. The State canvassers were democrats. They gave their certificate to the democratic candidate. That certificate was prima facie evidence of his right to the office. But it was well known that in order to arrive at that result the State canvassers had added to the returns made by the different counties a few hundred votes said to have been given at isolated and unauthorized precincts not known to the county officers. They purported to come from localities where no poll could be legally held, where no vote was given, where no voter lived. They were certified by persons who could not be found. It was a patent, audacious fraud. But no man in Wisconsin thought of resisting by force the candidate who received the certificate. He was inaugurated with imposing ceremonies, both civil and military. But just as soon as the ceremony was concluded the true claimant filed an information in the supreme court. That information averred the true result and the unlawful intrusion. In about sixty days the court, after a full disclosure of the frauds, gave judgment for the relator. The intruder walked out and the lawful governor walked into the executive chamber.

But in Louisiana, upon the mere naked, unsupported assumption that men ought to have had certificates who did not have them, it is clamorously insisted they ought to have acted precisely as if they had them.

Those men attempted to seize by violence upon the high prerogatives of a Legislature. They were defeated.

And right here in the Senate Chamber, as if we were as deaf to the voice of law as Louisiana seems to be, while not one word of criticism has been bestowed upon those who attempted that daring crime, the utmost capabilities of our language have been exhausted to supply epithets sufficiently opprobrious to hurl at those who prevented it. It really seems as if in Louisiana, crime brought glory to a democrat, while to prevent crime makes a republican infamous.

Durell, wearing the mantle of a Federal judge, stepped in between the contending factions of Louisiana. He said, "Thus far, and no farther." He did not once put aside his mask to assure the crowd it was only Durell that roared and not the nation. The mob, conscious of guilt, mistook him for the nation, and straightway threats were changed to laments, bluster to entreaty, the hovering satellites of murder skulked to their holes, anarchy smoothed its wrinkled front, law and order reigned in New Orleans, peace staid her flight from the doomed city, and democracy, clothed in sackcloth, abandoned itself to despair.

Judge Durell has been crucified. That ought to be accepted as a sufficient atonement for his offense.

The board of returns has been loudly condemned for issuing certificates of election to parties without having the official returns. But they demanded those returns and were denied them. Why stone the board for discharging their duty upon the best evidence they had, and yet applaud the governor who refused them better evidence?

The board has been loudly condemned for counting votes which were never polled. They did that in two instances. Eleven hundred and fifty-nine votes were so counted from the parish of Bossier, and twelve hundred and six from Natchitoches. They were counted upon the affidavits of so many colored citizens, who swore they were qualified to vote and offered to vote, but were denied the right. It is not certain the board was authorized to count such votes. It is certain the Legislature would have been bound to count them if true.

There is every probability the affidavits were true. In the parish of Bossier 1,795 colored voters were registered, and the commissioners of elections admit that only 555 republicans of both colors were allowed to vote. So in Natchitoches, 1,875 colored voters registered and the commissioners admit the polling of only 555 republican votes of both colors. Why stone the board for counting votes which ought to have been received and yet applaud the commissioners of elections for refusing to receive them?

From the parish of Plaquemines similar affidavits were obtained which were not true.

One Theodore Jaques testified that he forged 1,313 such affidavits, and that he never saw the men whose names he signed to them. It is a monstrous story. Like Blanchard's story of his registry, its monstrosity alone gives it credibility. The man is evidently capable of just such conduct. Whether he did what he swore he did, or swore he did what he did not do, there would seem to be no limit to his capability for villainy. His avowed theory is "that all tricks are fair in politics." It is difficult to conceive what use they make of penitentiaries in Louisiana if such men keep outside of them. He told the Committee on Privileges and Elections he had concluded to quit politics and go to farming. Let us hope it is so. It is possible the generous soil of Louisiana will not shrink from such contact. That is probably the only form of matter that could endure it.

How many of those affidavits were counted does not appear. It is not certain any were counted. It is evident all were not. The supervisor of elections returned 1,034 republican votes from that parish. The board of returns returned only 2,163. If that board counted any of those affidavits, it is difficult to understand why they did not count the whole. If they counted none, it is not apparent how the return of the board was made to vary so much from the return of the super-republican candidate for member of Congress. The republican candidate was returned elected by a majority of less than 100 votes. The jurisdiction of the House of Representatives over that single piece of rascality is complete. The House can adequately expose and if not adequately, can partially punish it.

A very few words will suffice to show how far the President is committed to the Government organized in pursuance of the finding of the board of returns. It will be remembered the President was not a member of that board. He had no communication with it. He exerted no control over it. He supplied none of the evidence upon which it acted. He withheld none of the evidence which it ought to have had. The board was purely a State tribunal. It spoke in the name of Louisiana, not in the name of the United States. Its decrees were Louisiana decrees, not United States decrees. Prior to the publication of their finding William P. Kellogg had commenced suit in the United States court to vindicate his title to the office of governor. The suit was expressly authorized by act of Congress. Process in the name of the United States, tested by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, issued in that suit on the 16th of November. The Attorney-General had been informed that Warmoth had disregarded the orders of the court. "That the enforcement laws had been defied by over one-half of Warmoth's election officers." That the United States circuit court had "restrained Warmoth and his canvassing board from canvassing votes pending a trial of rule for injunction." All this was known to the President. It was also known that Warmoth was running a private board of returns in defiance of Louisiana. That by the usurped authority of that board he had resolved to set up a government in accordance with the prophecies of the previous summer, and organize a Legislature which would elect McEnery for governor and himself for United States Senator.

Such was the situation when on the 3d of December the Attorney-General telegraphed to the marshal—

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with all the necessary troops for the purpose.

That was all—that was the sole utterance prior to the organization of the so-called Kellogg government. That was all the President had to do with the organization of that government. That telegram was sent before Durell had issued his order to Marshal Packard, directing him to take possession of the capitol. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] this afternoon very candidly acknowledged that the President was bound to assume that the orders and decrees of the Federal courts would be correct and not incorrect. When he issued that order he had no intimation that any decree that was not valid had issued from the court or would issue from the court.

"You will enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted," said the Attorney-General.

That brief dispatch was eminently republican. I have no disposition to deny that. The republican party has for a long time rather made a point upon enforcing the decrees and mandates of the United States courts. It has expended a great deal of treasure, of blood, and of life to preserve in this great country that state of obedience to law which would enable the process of the United States courts to run everywhere throughout its limits.

Another Cabinet minister sent a similar dispatch into that very neighborhood a few years before. That minister did not content visor. It is said those affidavits were obtained to aid the election of himself with directing his subordinates to enforce the decrees of the court. Such decrees are express commands of the nation, attested by the highest judicial magistrate in the nation. Whoever resists such decrees is in open revolt against the authority of the nation. The Attorney-General merely told his subordinates not to surrender to such a revolt, but to enforce the national command in spite of the revolt. Secretary Dix was a little more explicit and more startling in his directions. He pointed his subordinates not to an express command of the nation, not to a sealed writ from a court, but he pointed them to a more insensible emblem of the national authority, a mere silken fabric, suspended from a wooden shaft, inscribed with only the simplest devices and with no commands, entitled to no sort of respect only from the fact that the nation had adopted it for its ensign and had ordered it to float from that shaft; and yet Dix told his subordinate if any man attempted to haul down that flag to "shoot him on the spot."

If Secretary Dix can be forgiven for ordering the man to be shot who insults the flag, surely the President ought to be forgiven for directing the decrees of the United States courts to be enforced.

The precise purpose of republican Presidents is to enforce the decrees of the courts. They are sworn to take care that the laws are faithfully executed. The laws cannot be executed unless the decrees of the courts are enforced. For that very purpose he has command of an Army and Navy. While President Grant continues to command the Army the decrees of the United States courts will be very apt to be enforced.

Democrats may reason differently of the duties of a President; they may suppose it to be the duty of a President to enforce the decrees of a caucus instead of the courts. The last democratic President we had, obedient to caucuses, but regardless of law, kept the Army very still while a terrible rebellion organized for its bloody encounter. What countless millions a single regiment would have been worth in December, 1860, if thrown into Fort Sumter in command of General Sheridan, and under a President who had "confidence" in him!

Sir, what use the next democratic President will make of the Army cannot perhaps be foretold with certainty. But it is already painfully evident that unless the democratic party shall be born again before such a President assumes command of the Army, the Ku-Klux of the Carolinas and the White Leagues of Louisiana will have nothing to fear from it, nor will the hunted peasantry of the South have anything to hope from it.

I repeat, sir, the only part the President enacted in the organization of the government of Louisiana in 1872 was to say that the decrees of the United States courts must be enforced. Before he was called upon to say or do anything further the Legislature of the State had assembled in pursuance of the proclamation of Governor Warmoth. In the senate appeared twenty-nine members; thirteen of them were senators holding over; eight were new senators whose elections were certified by both boards of returns; two were senators whose elections were certified by the legal board from districts in which the pretended board returned no election; the remaining six were returned by the legal board from districts from which the other board returned other members.

In the house appeared and were sworn in sixty-nine members; thirty-three of them were returned by both boards; the rest were returned by the legal board only. The names of every one of those members in either house had been inscribed on the roll by the clerk or the secretary, the only officers who could rightfully put any name on the roll. Every name had been transmitted to the clerk or secretary of the senate by the secretary of state, and had been certified to him by the board of returns. Every one of them was therefore authorized by the very letter of the law to take part in the organization of their respective houses. Others having the same right to participate did not do so; not however because they could not, but because they would not. No representative ever appeared in any legislative body with more formal or legal credentials. There was but one power in Louisiana which could impeach the right of one of those members, and that was the house in which he took his seat. Whoever else denies to one of those members the character of representative, puts the law of Louisiana under his feet.

Against the authority of that Legislature so organized, in strict conformity to the laws of the State, Warmoth openly revolted.

On the very day it assembled, the house of representatives impeached him, and on the same day the two houses by joint resolution requested the President to furnish that protection guaranteed to every State when threatened by domestic violence. The President hesitated. On the 11th of December the Attorney-General replied to the request of the Legislature as follows:

Whenever it becomes necessary in the judgment of the President the State will be protected against domestic violence.

The President was plied with entreaties from various parties to indicate which organization he would recognize. He was assured his decision would restore quiet.

On the 12th the Attorney-General telegraphed to the acting governor in these words:

Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President as the lawful executive of Louisiana, and that the body assembled at Mechanics' Institute is the lawful Legislature of the State, and it is suggested that you make proclamation to that effect, and also that all necessary assistance will be given to you and the Legislature herein recognized to protect the State from disorder and violence.

A simple declaration of the Attorney-General in advance of the actual necessity for the employment of force, a simple proclamation making known what was the opinion already arrived at.

Still Warmoth refused to submit, and on the 13th General Emory, commanding the United States forces at New Orleans, telegraphed to the Adjutant-General of the Army as follows:

There is imminent danger of immediate conflict between two armed bodies of men of some considerable numbers—one body of State militia representing Governor Warmoth, holding an arsenal; the other an armed body of police, representing Governor Pinchback. I have been appealed to to interfere. Shall I do so; and if I interfere, to which party shall the arsenal be delivered? The parties are face to face with arms in their hands. I beg an immediate answer. I sent an officer to try what can be done by persuasion to suspend the conflict until an answer can be received. There will be no resistance to the Federal forces.

That was from General Emory, and in reply to that dispatch, and on that very day, the Adjutant-General replied to General Emory:

You may use all necessary force to preserve the peace, and will recognize the authority of Governor Pinchback.

There was the final decision. The President might have decided differently; but he was compelled to decide. Appealed to for protection by those who claimed to represent a State, he could not escape the responsibility of giving judgment upon the validity of that claim. Whether he was active or passive, whether he spoke or kept silent, he concluded the right of the parties to the conflict. If he granted the protection asked for, he recognized the authority of the parties asking for it. If he denied that protection, he denied the right to ask for it. If he denied the right of one party, he of necessity affirmed the right of the other. To ignore the character of the body in Mechanics' Institute was to assert the representative character of that in city hall.

Such was the necessity which hedged the President in. The light in which he acted was very murky. Clouds and thick darkness denser than the fog which covers Newfoundland rested upon the case before him. Ingenious, unscrupulous men, hating light and courting darkness, had done their utmost to obscure the truth. Great pivotal questions arising upon the laws of the State which have since been decided by the supreme court were then in litigation. If under such circumstances he had erred, charity would have found some milder epithet than that of despot, knave, or blockhead by which to characterize him. But he did not err. He struck the truth of the case in the very white. He had no means of investigating the actual result of the voting at the different election precincts. He could rightfully inquire and determine only what the constituted tribunals of Louisiana said of that result.

The law was very plain that the Legislature of the State should determine the result of the election for governor and lieutenant-governor. But he found two different assemblies claiming to be the Legislature. The law was very plain that the secretary of state must furnish the list of senators and members elected. But he found two men claiming to be secretary of state. The law was very plain that only the board of returns could canvass the vote and inform the secretary of the result. But he found two tribunals claiming to be a board of returns. He decided that Lynch and his associates were the true board of returns; that Bovee was the true secretary of state; and he obediently followed their determinations. In both those conclusions he is supported by the highest judicial authority of the State.

All the authority there was in Louisiana declared the Legislature which made Kellogg governor and sent Pinchback to the Senate to be her Legislature. That declaration concludes this Senate or it does not. The determinations of State tribunals as to the result of a local election are or are not final. It has been ably maintained in this Chamber that under the power to guarantee republican forms of government to the several States Congress is charged with the duty of supervising all their elections, and to see that all the results attained are in accord with the will of their people. Others have urged that the power confided to this Senate to judge of the election of its members of necessity clothes it with the authority to inquire and determine the election of every member in that Legislature which sends a Senator here.

Mr. President, I do not now deny either of these propositions, nor do I affirm either of them; but upon this proposition I take my stand. If there be in the Senate or in Congress the power to review and reverse the determinations of a State as to the election of her officers, there is but one legitimate way in which to prosecute that review. We cannot correct the decision of a superior tribunal by the judgment of an inferior one. Still less can we correct the decision of a real tribunal by the declarations of a mock tribunal. We cannot impeach the canvass of a board of returns by the canvass of those who merely pretend to be a board of returns. Nor can we impeach the finding of the board of returns by the returns themselves unless we have true and full returns. Such returns the supervisors never made of the Louisiana election for 1872. The certificates of returning officers, of supervisors, and of commissioners may be contradicted by the testimony of the electors themselves. If the Senate has any duty in the premises it is not to inquire what this agent or that agent said about the election, but what the people themselves said at the election. If McEnery was elected governor in 1872 it is easy to show it, unless democrats have destroyed the records it was their duty to preserve.

The books of registration will show the name of every elector who was registered in 1872; the poll-lists will show the names of those who voted; they themselves can tell in case of dispute how they voted. Comparing the poll-lists with the registry you will have the names of those who did not vote. If any of those who did not vote tried to do so and were wrongfully denied the right, their votes must be counted as if they were cast. The act of May, 1870, expressly commands that. If Congress is the tribunal of last resort upon the election of a governor, or a sheriff, or a parish judge, Congress will undoubtedly see that the requirements of its own statutes are observed. No prudent democrat who is familiar with the circumstances surrounding the election of 1872 will court such an inquiry.

No such inquiry has yet been made. The Committee on Privileges and Elections were charged to inquire whether Ray or McMillen were elected to the Senate by the Louisiana Legislature of 1873. They appeared in January of that year; the term for which they claimed expired on the 4th of March following. Both of those claimants required a speedy determination, not a thorough investigation. Both protested against going back of the prima facie title. They managed the contest; they marshaled the testimony, and when neither of them had more evidence to offer the inquiry closed.

It has been repeatedly asserted that the investigation of that committee proved McEnery's election. I undertake to say, sir, it stops very far short of showing any such thing. To my understanding it shows too clearly for doubt that Kellogg was elected. I do not forget the various and contradictory conclusions to which different members of that committee arrived. One member thought Kellogg was elected and the body sitting in Mechanics' Institute was the true Legislature. One thought McEnery was elected and the assembly at city hall was the Legislature. One thought the result of the election was so mixed that a special Legislature should be convened by act of Congress, consisting of persons to be named in the act, and that Legislature should determine who was elected. The rest of the committee concluded that the result was so mixed it never could be ascertained, and so advised that Congress should order a new election.

If I am ever found hereafter intolerant of any, even the wildest vagaries in human opinion, it will be a sufficient reproof to remind me that I voted in 1873 to order a new election in Louisiana. The report of the committee was made on the 20th of February. The session ended on the 4th of March.

The testimony occupied nearly a thousand pages. It was impossible to examine it. The committee was divided into four parties. I shut my eyes and went with the strongest party; perhaps not so much because it was the strongest party as because it was led by my colleague, [Mr. CARPENTER,] in whose fidelity as a republican and in whose accuracy as a lawyer I had then as I have still very great confidence. Besides, the eccentricities of Judge Durell and the villainies of Theodore Jaques had been brandished before my eyes until I had come to believe, the more my track diverged from theirs, the more likely I was to be right. Even in following the majority my greatest fear was that we might be unjust to McEnery.

The majority of the committee urged that democrats perpetrated fraud enough to vitiate their title under that election. But they did not point out the frauds. The chairman of the committee pronounced the election an "organized fraud," but he did not explain what that meant. Senator Hill thought the election in some parishes unfair and in others fraudulent, but upon the whole as fair as Louisiana is accustomed to see.

Senator Trumbull admitted that "fraud was practiced in some of the parishes and that irregularities existed in others," yet he concluded the election was not unfair in "more than two-thirds of the State," and he thought it ought to satisfy a reasonable Senate if it was fair in a third of the State.

All was vague, shadowy, and uncertain touching the wrongs committed at and prior to the election. But after the election the narrative assumed the utmost amplitude of detail. The mistakes of the board of returns, the antics of Durell, the forgeries of Jaques, the action of the President, were served up to us hot and smoking, were hashed and rehashed, and the whole castor of rhetoric was emptied into the mess for seasoning. So I lost my way; and I soon came to fear the majority of the committee had lost their way. My colleague knows that more than once I told him he had failed to convince me that McEnery was not elected, and he knows that when a year ago I commenced the examination of the testimony for myself, I expected to find the evidence of that election and was resolved in such case to declare it. But two candidates ran for governor. No one pretends there was a tie vote. It is morally certain one or the other had a majority of the votes cast on the 4th of November. Whoever had that majority was elected, unless colored votes were offered for the other candidate and illegally rejected, enough to overcome that majority. If such was the case, then the other candidate was elected.

If McEnery had 5,000 majority of the ballots cast for governor, but 5,001 votes were offered for Kellogg but rejected on account of color, then it is evident if the 5,001 votes had been received Kellogg would have been elected. It is also just as evident that in such case he was elected notwithstanding the rejection of those votes. The statute is peremptory. Kellogg's title to the office cannot be impaired by such rejection. And that is the language of your own law. If you want to go behind the decision of the Legislature of Louisiana, behind the certificate of the secretary of state, behind the certificate of the board of returns, behind the judgment of the supreme court of that State; if you want to go to the election precincts, go there and ascertain not only how many votes were given, but in obedience to your own statutes inquire also how many of those votes were legal and how many legal votes were rejected from those boxes. Until you have done that you must not undertake to control the decisions of Louisiana. If all voted who tried and were entitled to vote, you have only to count the actual votes to determine who was elected. If some were excluded from voting who were entitled to vote, you have only to add their number to the number of votes given to determine the result. In either case you have a result.

Either Kellogg or McEnery must have been elected in 1872. And it was not McEnery. I infer that from circumstances. First, I do not believe the real democracy of Louisiana wanted to triumph at that election. Victory could yield them no fruits. Victory meant only to make Greeley President, Warmoth Senator, and McEnery governor. The democracy of Louisiana had no use for either. Greeley they had hated from their earliest knowledge of him. Warmoth they had hated not so long, but with more singleness of heart. McEnery they had no use for. He is not of their kind. He talks well enough for their purposes, but when they wanted a governor for use last September they put McEnery to bed and brought Penn to the front. Penn they cherish. He is a young man of spirit and of mark. Take him out of Louisiana politics and he would be an ornament to his kind. Penn was all that victory could bestow upon the democratic party in 1872. But they could ill afford to swallow Greeley, Warmoth, and McEnery for the little flavor there was in Penn. It was taking altogether too heavy a dose of aloes for the small measure of rum.

I infer McEnery was not elected, because if he had been the fact would have been made certain. As I have shown, the whole machinery of the election was managed by democrats. If they had the votes to elect their candidate, they would have taken good care to preserve the evidence of them. Instead of manufacturing a board of returns with no will but his to count the votes, Warmoth would have submitted them to the count of the legal board and would have invited all New Orleans to see them counted.

Mr. President, I infer McEnery did not receive a majority of the votes cast; because if he had his friends would hardly have ventured upon all the villainy they practiced; they would have cherished and not debauched the boxes and returns which showed that election.

But, sir, even if he did receive a majority of the votes actually put into those boxes, I still insist he was not elected. The will of the people of Louisiana was not expressed through the ballot-boxes in 1872. It was excluded from them. I submit one single feature of that election to the Senate, and I challenge any candid Senator to deny that if Warmoth's supervisors truly reported the state of the ballot-boxes, it was only because the people were excluded from them.

In 1872 Louisiana was divided into fifty-six parishes. In twenty-seven of these parishes there is practically no dispute about the result. Those parishes are Ascension, Bienville, Caldwell, Cameron, Carroll, Claiborne, Calcasieu, Concordia, Feliciana East, Feliciana West, Franklin, Jefferson, La Fayette, Livingston, Ouachita, Plaquemines, Red River, Richland, Sabine, Saint Charles, Saint John Baptist, Saint Landry, Tensas, Vermillion, Vernon, Washington, and Winn.

There is evidence of bad conduct at some of the polls, even in these parishes; and the vote from one large republican precinct in Jefferson was rejected by Warmoth's returning officers because his commissioners had stuffed the box. But upon the whole the two parties differ but little in their count of the votes for governor in those twenty-seven parishes, and in every instance they returned the same members to the house of representatives.

Accepting, then, the work of the Warmoth party in those parishes as correct, we have this result.

The Warmoth board state the vote for governor as follows:

For Kellogg.....	22,960
For McEnery.....	18,078
Majority	4,882
Of the registered vote in the same parishes there were—
Black.....	34,391
White	22,816
	11,575

So a black majority of 11,575 is admitted to have given a republican majority of 4,882, exclusive of that majority thrown away in Jefferson.

This is not the result of a fair election, but the result of an election which bore some resemblance to a fair one.

No candid man will deny that if suffrage had been as free to black as to white in those parishes, as large a percentage of blacks as of whites would have voted. Still it is conceded that where there was a colored majority of 11,575 registered votes, there was a republican majority of 4,882 votes cast besides the Jefferson precinct.

Now, sir, look at the report from twenty-eight other parishes, the balance of the State except New Orleans.

In those parishes the white voters registered numbered 31,762; the colored 42,432.

The colored majority on the registry-books was 10,670. A cloud of witnesses have testified that every species of fraud and every kind of force were employed in these parishes to stifle the voice of the republican party. The board of returns deny the election of one single member from all the representative districts in those parishes whose election is asserted by Warmoth supervisors. Every member is disputed from twenty-eight parishes. Not one is disputed from twenty-seven parishes.

Now, I wish the country would heed what I am about to say:

Out of those 31,762 white voters registered, the Warmoth party claimed to have polled 25,391 democratic votes. Out of those 42,432 colored voters they concede a republican vote of but 19,272! In a district which registered a colored majority of more than 10,000 voters, there is claimed a democratic majority of more than 6,000 votes! Democrats controlled the registration. The whites were largely over-registered. The blacks were largely under-registered. Democrats controlled the election, and with a thrift unprecedented in politics they gathered five-sixths as many democratic votes as they had white voters upon their swollen poll-lists, at the same time they made that pinched and parsimonious registration of colored voters seem like a profligate waste of space on the registry-books by returning less than half as many republican votes as they had colored voters.

In these fifty-five parishes the colored voters registered were 35,000 more than the republican votes therein. Can that be explained upon the hypothesis of an overregistry of colored votes? When legal voters of the unfashionable color followed the supervisor by the day to secure registration, did 35,000 such men get on to the books who did not belong there? Can it be explained upon the hypothesis that men who registered did not care to vote? But did men who were not anxious to vote travel miles and search for days to get their names on the poll-books? Does any man doubt, dare any man say he doubts, that twenty or even thirty thousand of those new-born and perhaps over-ardent citizens wished to vote, tried to vote, and did vote, unless they were denied the right? Were they denied the right? These democrats denied them, and no man's right to office can be impaired by such denial. Such is the law. Did they vote? These democrats stole their ballots from the boxes, and no man's right to office can be impaired by such a larceny. Such is the law.

That is the style of election championed by the democratic party in Louisiana and by their allies in this Chamber. Warmoth presided over that election. The voice of thirty-five thousand colored citizens was stifled in fifty-five parishes. Seven thousand more were hushed in New Orleans. Warmoth was the great magician whose pliant fingers manipulated the machine. The democratic party supplied the rapt and admiring auditory which filled every circle in the theater from the pit to the upper gallery. Such was the election by whose atrocious results Warmoth attempted to chain Louisiana. To force such infamous conclusions upon the people of the State Warmoth played the double rôle of an anarchist and monarch from November 13 to December 9; to consummate that smoking villainy he attempted, partly by force and partly by fraud, to supplant a legal board of returns by a sham one; to tamper with written laws, and, in the absence of a Legislature, to change them; to drag a judge from the bench; to eject a secretary of state from his office; to commission a crowd of his henchmen to fill the public offices; to pack the supreme court of his state; to defy its authority; to divide and destroy the Legislature; and even to disregard the mandates of the Federal courts. For enterprises infinitely less criminal Cataline was sent howling out of Rome. In these enterprises Warmoth was foiled. A blundering judge, more solicitous for the peace of the State than for the dignity of his office, the first magistrate of the kind probably which Louisiana ever saw, caused two soldiers to be stationed at the door of the capitol, and the conspiracy was dissolved into vapor. The cackling of geese at an unseemly hour, it is said, once saved Rome from her conspiring enemies. The terrified but not ungrateful city slew the conspirators and deified the geese. When a similar cackling saved New Orleans, the liberty-loving but ungrateful city wrung the neck of the goose and is doing her best to deify the disappointed conspirators.

Mr. President, I do not forget how largely my conclusions as to the result of the Louisiana election in 1872 are based upon the assumption that white citizens were generally democrats and colored ones were republicans. And this brings me to the pithy and altogether pertinent question asked by the Senator from Missouri the other day.

In tones which were restrained from derision only by that courtesy which never forsakes him, he said:

But I ask you, sir, what kind of logic, what statesmanship is it we witness so frequently on this floor, which takes the statistics of population of a State in hand and then proceeds to reason thus: So many colored people, so many white; therefore so many colored votes, so many white votes, and therefore so many republican votes and so many democratic votes; and if an election does not show this exact proportion, it must be necessarily the result of fraud and intimidation.

I will tell the Senator what I think of that logic and of that statesmanship. The logic is unique. I admit it seems inconsequential, almost grotesque. But it is irrefragable. It cannot be confuted.

And that statesmanship! At the first glance it seems extremely whimsical, not to say absurd; but when we come to consider, it is frightfully practical. A man who goes about swathed in disinfectants when no contagion is near we cannot help but regard as a hypochondriac. But he who goes along the thronged thoroughfares without disinfectants when the atmosphere is surcharged with plagues is regarded as little less than a lunatic. The statesman who argues that the republican vote should be nearly proportioned to the colored voters in Louisiana is simply one who does not close his eyes upon the most obvious, the pivotal fact in the politics of that State. The colored people of that State are republicans. The white people are as a rule democrats. If there were no reasons why it should be so, the evidence is conclusive that it is so.

A large majority of the voters are colored. And yet of the whole number, Mr. McMillen, the witness who claimed to be Senator under the election of the Warmoth legislature, testified he did not know one who voted the democratic ticket. Mr. Packard, the chairman of the republican State committee, testified he knew of but one, and he was one who tried to vote the republican ticket and could not do so for want of registration.

Democrats helped him to registration, and before the ink got dry on his certificate he voted the democratic ticket.

When two witnesses so well informed cannot recall in the aggregate but one colored man who voted the democratic ticket out of more than half the voting population, it is idle to pretend that many did vote it.

But there are obvious reasons why no colored man can vote the democratic ticket. The whole effort of the democratic party has been, and still is, to organize parties upon the "color line." It boasts itself the "white man's party." It champions a "white man's government." The domination of white over black is the very essence of the democratic party. Upon any policy but that no democratic party can be mustered. Do you think it can? If it can be, try it. Democratic supremacy means the subjection of the colored race and it means nothing else.

Upon every conceivable theory of political economy; upon every possible scheme of finance, whether affecting currency, taxation, or expenditures; upon every individual proposition for internal improvement or commercial progress; upon every plan suggested for the amelioration of all citizens of both races; democrats are divided, and hopelessly divided. On the contrary, so often as a policy is proposed or an idea suggested, which promises advantage to the white race from which the blacks are excluded, the democratic party with one mind embrace and with one voice applaud it.

Sir, it is not strange the colored citizen will not vote the democratic ticket. To do so, is to vote for his own exclusion from the civil state. The special wonder of after times will be that any white man could be found at this time to vote that ticket either.

History still points with loathing to those savage epochs when the Greek swelled with hatred of the helot; the Jew with hatred of the Gentile; the Roman with hatred of the barbarian; the Saxon with hatred of the Celt. But the instinct of self-preservation lay at the base of all those hatreds and partly excused them. The helot was a living menace to the Greek; so was the Jew to the Gentile, and the barbarian to the Roman, and the Celt to the Saxon; returned the hate they experienced, and to the extent of their opportunities repaid all the remorseless oppression they suffered.

But with what unutterable loathing will the future historian look back to these degenerate days, eighteen hundred years after Christ died, as much for the black man as for the white; look back to see four millions standing in the midst of forty millions, all alike citizens, distinguished from each other only in the accident of complexion; the few just snatched from the realm of chattels, very poor, very ignorant, very helpless, but with capabilities equal to the best. That is exemplified in a few individuals who, here and there, despite the most malignant fortune, have contrived to acquire the learning which enables them even in the parliament of the nation to maintain their cause successfully against the most practiced debaters there. The multitude very rich, very powerful; arrogant from centuries of culture and control. The few, threatening nobody, asking no special privileges, no nursing, no extraordinary aids; supplicating only to be let alone, to have all disabilities removed, to be allowed to stand up if they can get up, to go forward if they can get onward, to be allowed the free use of such faculties as generations of serfdom have left to them; to be admitted to the pale of an equal citizenship. And out of that multitude, so rich in capabilities, so abundant in resources, a great party organization having but one common boast, that they are themselves white; having but one common tie, that they hate the black; cherishing but one common aspiration, that they can still dominate him—that they can stand on his skirts now, and can get on his neck again presently—and animated with this single groveling hope they swagger of their Caucasian lineage; they preach the gospel of hate through Caucasian organs; they form, they arm Caucasian leagues, and throughout large districts have domesticated, not savage beasts, but the most savage crimes to drive the weakest and most helpless of our kind from all assertion of their citizenship.

There is no doubt colored citizens would vote with democrats only that democrats will not let them vote at all. And democrats cannot let them vote because they would then cease to be democrats. To be a democrat no longer means to be in favor of the people's supremacy. We have now a new dictionary given to us; to be a democrat now is simply to deny that colored citizens are people and to affirm that calling a professional murderer a bandit is a capital offense. It seems to me the Senator from Missouri will be wise to concede on the whole that the colored people of Louisiana are republicans. If they are not, why not let them vote? If they will vote the democratic ticket they will vote just as sensibly as that Senator does. If they will vote the republican ticket, they will in my judgment vote much more sensibly than he does.

Mr. President, the practical question born to us out of this election is, shall Mr. Pinchback be admitted to the Senate?

Now we know that Louisiana has but one Senator here. We know she is entitled to two. We know her Legislature must choose her Senators. We know her Legislature is the body which makes her laws, and we know the body which sent Pinchback here is the body which for two years made laws for Louisiana. How, then, shall we avoid seating Mr. Pinchback? Why, we can say, if we are as reckless about what we say as a Louisiana board of election commissioners, that we do not know whether the men who composed that Legislature really belonged there.

But if we say that we shall not tell the truth. We do know those men were enrolled as members by the clerk of the house, and the secretary, who were the only men in Louisiana authorized to make up such roll; that the names of those members were transmitted to those officers by George E. Bovee, the secretary of state, and certified to him by John Lynch and his associates, acting as a board of returns. Still, if we choose, we can say that Bovee was not secretary of state and that Lynch and his associates were not the board of returns. In saying that we shall simply trample upon the authority of repeated decisions of the supreme court of that State. But we can say that the Legislature, the secretary of state, and the board of returns are contradicted by the certificates of the parish supervisors. There are three difficulties in the way of saying that.

First. We have not seen all those certificates, nor has any one else.

Second. They are already impeached.

Third. They are incompetent to contradict the board of returns. If we wish to contradict the board of returns, it can only be done by showing what the electors say and not what the parish supervisors say.

Well, sir, we can say, if we dare, that the electors of Louisiana did not choose the members of that Legislature. But we have two reports from the electors. That which comes to us through the Lynch board says these members were elected. It will embarrass us to rely upon that report. It will embarrass us still more to rely upon the report of the Warmoth board. That report does indeed declare that some of those members were not elected, but it declares that out of 99,000 colored voters registered, to say nothing of white republicans, only 59,000 republican votes are accounted for by that board.

More than 40,000 republican votes are not returned. A cloud of witnesses we know have testified that many of these votes were excluded from the boxes; many were abstracted from the boxes. We have made no attempt to ascertain how many were excluded, how many were stolen. Other witnesses we know have testified that many republican votes received and not stolen have been practically annulled by democratic ballots, not put into the boxes by democratic voters but stuffed into them by democratic commissioners. We have made no attempt to ascertain how many. Our way is full of difficulties. But let us not despair. When a thing must be done, there must be a way for doing it.

Driven to extremities, we can at last say: "True, a few thousand democratic voters were manufactured in Louisiana in 1872, but they were manufactured by Warmoth and his subordinates; that is no concern of ours. True, some thirty or forty thousand republicans were strangled at the same time, but they were strangled by Warmoth and his subordinates; that is no concern of ours. True, every tribunal in Louisiana has denounced the outrage; but we cannot listen to Louisiana. We cannot redress the wrong, and we will not let Louisiana redress it." Yes, Mr. President, we can say all that if we try very hard; and saying that we can send Pinchback home to Louisiana, limit the representation of the State in this Chamber to one Senator, and then we can hold up our heads with Warmoth and Blanchard and Thorp, the supervisor of Iberville, and their allies here and everywhere. Then we will be complimented by the reform press as friends of freedom and purity in elections; and then if we cannot get mustered into the ranks of the southern white-leaguers it will not be because our consciences are feared, but because our courage is distrusted.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I offer an amendment to the resolution. After the word "be" I move to insert the word "not," so as to read:

That P. B. S. Pinchback be not admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. DAVIS, (at ten o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question, and declared that the yeas appeared to prevail.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALCORN. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. GOLDTHWAITE] is paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] If the Senator from Illinois were here he would vote "nay," and the Senator from Alabama would vote "yea."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Fenton, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—34.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Lewis, Logan, Patterson, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, and Washburn—16.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I regard it but proper and due to myself that I should say something upon the subject now under discussion. I was a member of the majority of that committee that reported two years since on the facts of this case. A member of the committee still, and not concurring with the majority that reported the resolution under consideration, and not having signed the minority report,

I must, if I would have my position understood, now speak. To not speak I would be held to the report of the majority, which is not signed by the members concurring.

Mr. President, if I stood here as the attorney of Mr. Pinchback I should demur to the pleadings in this case. I should demur to the declaration for the reason that the case is not presented so as fairly to represent the interest of the petitioner. If the pleading was upon a bill in chancery, I would demur because of multifariousness. We are trying here two issues—the question of the validity of the Kellogg government and the question of Pinchback's credentials. Pinchback is required not only to carry his own sins, if he has any, but he has also to take upon his shoulders the Kellogg government. There may be those here who will not vote to recognize by this body the Kellogg government, holding that that government has no authority in law; that it does not exist by the authority of the people of the State of Louisiana expressed under the forms of the constitution of that State; but who, nevertheless, if the Senate were to pass upon that question affirmatively, would then hold the case adjudicated, and would feel authorized to look only to the credentials of Pinchback emanating from a governor having recognition as such in this body. There may be those who may hold objections to Mr. Pinchback's election upon personal grounds, upon grounds that are entirely legitimate for the Senate to consider, each Senator for himself, and yet who hold that the Kellogg government should be recognized by the Senate of the United States. If there be such Senators here, they will be voting upon a false issue and passing judgment upon an improper issue as the case now stands.

I am one of those who hold to the report of the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections made in February, 1873, and yet, if the Senate should decide to overrule the report of that committee, which it has not yet done; if the Senate should decide that that committee was in error, and that it was the judgment of the Senate that the Kellogg government should be recognized, I should take the case as adjudicated for me, should recognize the judgment of the court, and would then, as now informed, vote cheerfully to admit Mr. Pinchback to a seat upon his prima facie case.

If the Senate recognize the government of Kellogg as the government of Louisiana, there can then be no objection to having Mr. Pinchback sworn into office upon the certificate which is on the Secretary's table; but as we have not passed upon the Kellogg government, as that question has not been up to this time decided adversely to the report of the committee, and the report of the committee is prima facie the voice of the Senate, I hold myself to that report, believing it to be based upon the facts and the law of the case until it is reversed. I shall be very unfortunate indeed if my vote should go to exclude Mr. Pinchback from his seat, and subsequently the Senate should declare that the Kellogg government was a legitimate government and entitled to recognition in this body.

Upon this statement, I say, I would demur to the pleadings if I was here the champion of Mr. Pinchback, and insist that the issue should be properly joined and that a vote should be had and the merits of this controversy passed upon by the Senate in the order in which they come, namely: first, upon the question of the legality of the Kellogg government, and next upon the question of the credentials presented by the petitioner.

If the doctrine that we hear to-night promulgated is true, if the new lights that we have on the question of the Kellogg government and the Louisiana controversy are true, we have been guilty of a most gross injustice not only to Mr. Pinchback, who has been kept out of his seat for two long years, but we have been guilty of an act of most gross injustice to Mr. Ray, who was elected two years ago and more to the Senate from the State of Louisiana, under the same letter of authority, who came here and appealed to this body for admission as a Senator from that State, and continued so to appeal until his term of service had expired. Mr. Ray returned home with the certificate of his election by the Kellogg legislature in his pocket. The term of his office had expired; and now to admit Mr. Pinchback upon the same letter of authority and in the face of the objections that were urged against Ray's admission is to confess that we have wronged Mr. Ray, and we are not able to plead any new lights on this question, any newly discovered testimony. The same objections exist to the admission of Pinchback as were urged against Ray, no more and no less. How shall we stand justified in pursuing a course so vacillating as this upon a subject of such grave importance?

Why, Mr. President, was this case referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? For very good reasons. On the 15th day of January, 1873, John McEnery certified under what purports to be the great seal of the State of Louisiana, he signing as governor of the State, "That on the 14th of January, 1873, William L. McMillen was by the Legislature of said State duly elected a Senator of the United States" for the term beginning in March, 1873, and expiring in March, 1879. It will be remembered that he brought with him the certificate of that person who purported to be the governor of the State of Louisiana, John McEnery. At the same time that he came with this certificate bearing the great seal of the State of Louisiana, certified in due form of law, there came also Mr. Pinchback with a certificate of election from Governor Kellogg, that certificate bearing also the great seal of the State of Louisiana, and certified to in due form of law.

Here were two persons elected to the same office, each bearing a certificate of election, the certificate in each case being in proper form and duly attested by the governor of the State, or a person who claimed to be the governor of the State, each bearing the great seal of the State. When these two certificates were presented here, the question was submitted to the Senate as to which of the two claimants was entitled to his seat. The Senate of the United States, being under the Constitution the sole judge of the elections and returns of its members, referred the credentials of these two claimants to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it was the duty of the committee to examine into the elections and returns of the claimants. To do this it was necessary that the committee should go back to the election by the people in 1872, and examine the returns and pass upon the question of the validity of the two governments. In doing that the committee were engaged for a month or six weeks of time. They took down testimony which covers more than a thousand pages of printed matter. Patiently that committee investigated the subject. With deliberation they considered their report, analyzed the evidence, and the majority of that committee declared that there was in truth no evidence sufficient for them to certify that either of these parties was entitled to be recognized, either the McEnery or the Kellogg government, and that neither Pinchback nor McMillen was entitled to be recognized.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me to make a correction?

Mr. ALCORN. I am going to make the correction that I presume the Senator is now about to call my attention to; that is, that the case of Pinchback was not involved in that investigation.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator will allow me to say that the credentials neither of Pinchback nor McMillen were ever referred to that committee. They were not parties to the examination in any shape or form. The only proposition referred to the committee was whether there was a legal government in Louisiana, and the committee were instructed to inquire into that before any credentials came here at all.

Mr. ALCORN. Well, Mr. President, if my memory serves me aright, both Pinchback's and McMillen's credentials were referred to that committee, and the credentials in both cases were before us while we were investigating the Louisiana question. But that is not material to the point I make. What I state is upon my recollection. I am very sure, however, of the truth of what I say, and if the honorable Senator will examine the record he will find that all the credentials to which I have referred were before the committee. The honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is ever ready with the "law of the case," refers me to the Journal of the Senate of 1872-73, page 191. There I find the following entry:

Mr. WEST presented the credentials of W. L. McMillen, elected a Senator by the Legislature of Louisiana to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of William Pitt Kellogg; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

This was on January 22, 1873, and the next paragraph shows that—

Mr. WEST presented the credentials of John Ray, elected Senator by the Legislature of Louisiana to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of William Pitt Kellogg; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

It will be seen that both references were made on the same day. The report of the committee was made on the 20th of February, 1873, one month after the presentation of the credentials. The report commences in these words:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred Senate resolution of January 16, 1873, as follows—

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether there is any existing State government in Louisiana, and how and by whom it is constituted"—and to which committee were also referred the credentials of John Ray and W. L. McMillen, both claiming the seat supposed to have been made vacant by the resignation of William Pitt Kellogg, a Senator of the United States from the State of Louisiana, respectfully submit the following report.

The record, then, does not corroborate the statement of my honorable friend from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. Do you say that Pinchback's credentials were referred?

Mr. ALCORN. No, sir.

Mr. MORTON. He was no party to that examination.

Mr. ALCORN. I was going to say that so far as Mr. Pinchback was concerned he was not a party to that examination, but while he was not a party, certainly a case involving his credentials was tried. McMillen was a party to it, not by virtue of his election for the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1873, but he was a party to it on his credentials certifying that he had been elected to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Kellogg. Ray was a party to it representing the Kellogg government for the short term.

Mr. MORTON. Precisely; for the short term.

Mr. ALCORN. For the short term ending March 4, 1873; but in the examination of this question every fact that appertained to the credentials of Pinchback, every fact that appertained to the credentials of McMillen who was elected by the McEnery legislature for the long term, was passed upon by that committee, thoroughly investigated, and I have not heard it intimated that there were any new facts in this case. I have not heard it argued by any friend of Mr. Pinchback or any friend of McMillen that any newly-discovered testimony has been found; that there was a single particle of evidence to be brought forward in behalf of either of these contestants for the long term that was not passed upon by the committee of the Senate in investigating the question of the right of the contestants for the short term.

I say, sir, that the committee were most patient in their investigation, and if any committee that I have ever served upon were entitled to the commendation of the Senate for patience, for industry, and I would go further and say for impartiality, I think that committee are entitled to that plaudit.

The honorable Senator from Wisconsin who has just taken his seat, [Mr. HOWE,] and who delivered to the Senate an elaborate, able, well studied argument on this question, has based all that he said upon false premises, upon a supposition of facts that have no existence in law. As to the recognition of the Kellogg government by the President of the United States, I hold that has nothing to do with the investigation of this case by the Senate. The action of the President in no way binds this body. At the time these two governors were arrayed against each other in Louisiana, an appeal was made to the President of the United States in the interests of peace. The President was called upon to decide which of these two contestants was governor. He was called upon to decide without any of the proofs before him. He chose to direct that the Government of the United States should give its support to the decrees of the United States district court. He thought that was the safest course for him to pursue. He took what was before him, just what he saw. He had no time to investigate. He was required to choose then and there without investigation, and he chose to place his judgment precisely where the law required he should hold it, to wit, that he should support the decision of the courts of the country, and he was not the person to decide whether those decisions were in accordance with the Constitution and the laws, or not. That was for another and a different tribunal. The enforcement acts require that the President shall give the assistance of the Government of the United States to the support of the decrees of the courts of the United States, and when these two contestants were arrayed against each other, and the people of the State of Louisiana were threatened with the carnage that would result from a conflict between these two claimants, the President had to choose. Would it be possible that he, without the facts before him, would have ignored the decree of the court and have selected that as the most probable governor who had no decision in his behalf? Would not any sensible man who chose to perform his duty have decided in that case that he would follow the adjudication of the courts and that it was safest for him to place himself just there? This is just what the President saw; it was all he saw; and all he could do was to take what he saw. Subsequently the President characterized the election for governor in the State of Louisiana as "an organized fraud." He appealed to Congress, the body which had the right to examine the returns, investigate and pass upon these questions, to come in and take the responsibility from his shoulders and assume it for themselves; but Congress did not see proper to do this. I repeat, the President was called upon to decide between these two contending governments; he was required to pass judgment without delay. The case would admit of no delay. Delay would have been fatal to the lives of the people in Louisiana. The President decided promptly. Within five minutes he decided a question that Congress have been two years debating and have not yet decided. The Executive had to decide between contending factions with no time for investigation and before investigation. Congress propose to decide, if ever, after full investigation.

The majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections proposed to assume the responsibility. They pointed the way that the Congress should go. But Congress saw proper to disregard their suggestion, as they had a right to do, and so the responsibility was left upon the President. I have not been able to see the wrong that the President did in the case. I have not been able to see how he could have done otherwise than he did. Here was the trouble: There were two governors elected, each claiming with seeming equal authority, each holding the great seal of the State, each with a secretary of state, and each sending here Senators with credentials alike authentic. The President decided in favor of the Kellogg government. It was impossible for him to have known of the enormity of Durell's decision. He only knew that a United States district judge had decided favorably to the Kellogg government, and he thought it safest, groping as he was his way in the dark, to follow the suggestions of the court, and here the sin committed by the President lies. I have not been able to see it. It has occurred to me that the President would have assumed a grave responsibility if he had disregarded the suggestions of a court where a legal question was involved as the essence of the right of contending factions to the government of the State. The court may be corrupt; its decisions may be in contempt of the law, but, other things being equal, in a contest depending upon the law it is perhaps safest to follow the suggestions of the courts. A court may decide corruptly, it may be grossly in error, but its decision is the law of the case decided until the decision is reversed. The trouble about this case was that the judge had no jurisdiction. He assumed an authority that did not belong to his court, but the President was not the judge of this. In this case there is a supervising authority, a supervising power. There is a court of appeal, and that court is the Congress of the United States, to which court the President appealed, declaring at the time his willingness to abide by and to perform the will of Congress. He went so far as to call the committee before him and urged upon the members his anxiety to have Congress take action and assume that responsibility which properly rested with the legislative department of the Government.

So much upon that point. Now to the position assumed by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] who has made an argument running from half past eight o'clock (spending the first hour of his address upon other points,) until half past ten to show that the adjudications of and the returns made by the Lynch board were legally had and properly made; and however false they may have been the secretary of state was bound by those returns and that we as Senators cannot go behind them. The Committee on Privileges and Elections elaborated the law creating that Lynch board, and I will take occasion now to call the attention of the honorable Senator to the points that were made by the committee upon this board, and I appeal to him as a lawyer to state here, upon his reputation as such, whether he believes that Lynch board had any legal existence at the time the adjudication of that board became a matter of history. What were the facts? In the first place, the law itself appointing that board was violative of the constitution of Louisiana, in direct conflict with the constitution of the State. Let us see how that is. The constitution of the State, article 4, provides as follows:

Returns of all elections for members of the General Assembly shall be made to the secretary of state.

There is a mandate in the constitution of the State of Louisiana imperative; but the Legislature of the State in the face of this peremptory declaration of the constitution undertook to declare by legislative enactment that the returns should be made to another and different tribunal. And yet the Senator from Wisconsin argues here, without ever noticing or referring to the constitution of Louisiana, that the Lynch board was the legal board and had a right to pass upon these returns. But the committee presented other objections to this returning board.

The constitution of Louisiana provides:

ART. 43. The supreme executive power of the State shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the State of Louisiana. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the lieutenant-governor chosen for the same term, be elected as follows: The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant-governor at the time and place for voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning-officer to the secretary of state—

Not to a returning board, but—to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the General Assembly then to be holden.

The act of the Legislature appointing the Lynch board provided that the returns should be delivered to them. Here is the constitution and there is the act of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana in direct contradiction and conflict with that instrument. Senators here appeal to the law of the Legislature of Louisiana, but overlook the constitution of that State:

The members of the General Assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes.

The Legislature was to count the votes.

The person having the greatest number of votes for governor shall be declared duly elected; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall immediately be chosen governor by joint vote of the members of the General Assembly. The person having the greatest number of votes polled for lieutenant-governor shall be lieutenant-governor; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant-governor by joint vote of the members of the General Assembly.

There is the provision of the constitution of Louisiana. How could you get a Lynch board or any other returning board in the face of that provision of the State constitution? Shall I insult the intelligence of Senators by arguing that a law passed in conflict with this provision of the constitution is without force, that it is a nullity, that it is entitled to the respect of no one?

Article 60 provides as follows:

ART. 60. He shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint all officers whose offices are established by the constitution, and whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for: Provided, however, That the General Assembly shall have a right to prescribe the mode of appointment to all other offices established by law.

In March, 1870, the Legislature passed an act which provides that a returning board shall be organized. The fifty-fourth section of that act is as follows:

SEC. 54. Be it further enacted, &c., That the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, and John Lynch and T. C. Anderson, or a majority of them, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, and have power to make the returns of all elections.

The constitution provided that the returns should be made one way; this act provides that they shall be made another way.

In case of any vacancy by death, resignation, or otherwise by either of the board, then the vacancy shall be filled by the residue of the board of returning officers. The returning officers shall, after each election, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe to the following oath before a judge of the supreme or any district court.

Within ten days after the closing of the election said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statements of votes made by the supervisors of registration, and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns have been completed. The governor shall at such meeting open, in the presence of the said returning officers, the statements of the supervisors of registration, and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate. One copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state.

This is the first time that the secretary of state under this act of the Legislature of Louisiana is to have a sight of the returns. The constitution providing that the returns shall be made to him, the act of the Legislature provides that they should be made to this returning board, and that this returning board should certify one copy to the secretary of state and another to a different tribunal. This returning board, I repeat, was appointed in direct conflict with the constitution of the State. The constitution provided that the governor should have the nomination of all officers not otherwise provided for in that instrument. The constitution provided, however:

That the General Assembly shall have the right to prescribe the mode of appointment to all other offices established by law.

How "prescribe the mode of appointment?" By passing an act of the Legislature of the State appointing officers themselves, appointing them by an act of the Legislature in perpetuity, and then giving them power to perpetuate forever that organization? I again ask shall I insult the intelligence of Senators by arguing that the act of the Legislature of Louisiana under which this returning board was appointed was passed in contempt of the constitution of the State?

Who will claim that the Lynch board was entitled to the returns which they pretended to pass upon, in the face of the fact that the constitution of the State of Louisiana pointed out the manner in which returns should be made, and that manner was one altogether different from that followed by the Legislature of the State? It is preposterous. But there is another difficulty, even admitting that the Legislature had the right to appoint this returning board, admitting that they had the right to override the constitution of the State and prescribe a different mode for canvassing the returns than that provided by the constitution. The fact is the law itself under which this returning board was appointed was absolutely repealed before the board made a canvass of the returns; and yet the Senator from Wisconsin will argue here for two hours of time the legality of this Lynch board, when in the first place, I repeat, it was violative of the constitution, and when, in the next place, if it had any authority of law, the law had already been repealed before the canvass was made by that board. Do Senators stultify themselves in arguing the legality of this Lynch board, or is it on account of an obtuseness in my own mind that I cannot see that there is a single point that can be made upon which to hinge even a supposition or a probability that this board had any existence or authority in law?

But, sir, the committee found another fatal fact. Even now, admitting that the Lynch board was a board having authority to pass upon returns, and admitting that no repeal had taken place, the committee found upon their oaths that the Lynch board had not a single return; not one single return was ever in their possession. I do not suppose that up to this good hour they have had in their possession a single return of any voter who cast his ballot in that election.

Then the committee found, first, that the Lynch board was in violation of the constitution of Louisiana; second, that the law appointing them had been repealed; and third, that they never had any returns before them, and had nothing to pass upon. When we found all this, we thought there was an end to the question of the legality of the Kellogg government. The committee had before them the returns of the Warmoth board. That board, equally illegal, equally without authority of law, had this in their favor: They had the returns, or what purported to be the returns, certified to by the returning officers; and the committee, having these returns before them, proceeded to examine them, and while there were many of them which were of doubtful authenticity, nevertheless, disregarding all of doubtful authenticity, and taking those which upon their face showed that they were properly authenticated, and which the testimony went to show were in truth and in fact legal and legitimate returns, they found that McEnery was elected governor of the State by a majority reaching to nearly 10,000, and that after having lopped off some 4,000 votes of doubtful authenticity, it left him still elected governor by about 6,000.

But the committee were of opinion, as I have said, that the Warmoth returning board was equally illegal with the Lynch board, and they were of opinion that the frauds were so evident, so unmistakable, so clearly established and proven, that they would report upon their oaths that there was in truth no election in that contest in Louisiana which was entitled to the respect of any set of gentlemen in all the world.

The Senator from Wisconsin attacks the testimony of Jaques who deposed before the committee to the fact that he had forged about thirteen hundred of the affidavits upon which the Kellogg government based its right to the offices in that State. Now, I could very readily see how any gentleman might suspect the testimony of a witness like this. That he was not entitled to credit upon his own statement appeared at the first presentation to be true; but a man may go into a court of justice and testify to a fact, and it may be shown that he is not entitled to be believed on oath; his testimony may be successfully assailed, successfully impeached, and yet if he is corroborated in his testimony the court will instruct the jury that they can take that testimony for what it is worth. This man Jaques, after having testified to the fact that he had made these false certificates which were sworn to, being interrogated further, pulled out of his pocket the certificate of the officer in due form of law corresponding exactly with the attestation to these affidavits; he produced a handful of these with the officer's name attached and the seal of the court, saying to the committee that he had more of the same kind left.

Here was a corroboration which showed that the fellow was intrusted by the judge who signed the certificates and that he yet held the evidences of that perjury on the part of the judge in his possession, that he was an accredited agent at the time, and he offered the indisputable testimony of his agency in this way.

Mr. President, it was not my purpose when I arose to elaborate an argument on this question. I rose simply to put myself right before the Senate, to give the reasons briefly why I should follow up and stand by the report made by the committee, believing as I do that it cannot be assailed, that it has not been touched, and that every argument which has been made in support of the Kellogg government has been made in evasion of the facts and upon a misapprehension of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. SCOTT, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON.]

Mr. HAGER, (at eleven o'clock and thirty-seven minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn. I will state that I should like to speak upon this question, and I am very reluctant to do it at this late hour after such a prolonged session, and I ask therefore that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HAGER. If the Senate do not adjourn, I will proceed now, but I would prefer an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 24.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there a quorum voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a quorum voting, and the Senate refuses to adjourn.

Mr. HAGER addressed the Senate. Having spoken till seven minutes past one o'clock a. m., (Thursday, February 18)—

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. If the Senator from California will yield the floor I will move an adjournment.

Mr. HAGER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SPENCER. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] Were he present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SARGENT, (when his name was called.) I am paired upon this question with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREERY] unless my vote shall be necessary to make a quorum of the Senate, in which case I am at liberty to vote. I will reserve it until I ascertain whether it is necessary under the circumstances.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Cooper, Fenton, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, Merrimon, Ransom, and Saulsbury—11.
NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Boggs, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Washburn—33.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. HAGER resumed and continued his speech until one o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from California yields to me to move that the Senate adjourn. I submit that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOPER in the chair) put the question on the motion.

Mr. WEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You are too soon; there was but one vote for it.

Mr. SPENCER. O, you cannot adjourn.

Mr. HAGER. Very well; I will go on with my remarks.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. We had better adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators who sustain the call for the yeas and nays will rise.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] If he were here, he would vote "yea," and I would vote "nay."

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. SARGENT, (at the conclusion of the roll-call.) I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. MCCREERY,] unless my vote shall be necessary to make a quorum. As the roll-call stands my vote is necessary to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] on the main question and on adjournment; but to make up a quorum I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cooper, Hager, Merrimon, and Ransom—4.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Boggs, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Washburn—36.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President—

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order, that the Senator from California having yielded the floor twice is now amenable to the fourth rule of the Senate; that he is not entitled to be heard any further on this subject. And I want to say that although I shall not be inclined to insist upon it on the present occasion, I wish those who are practicing these tactics of moving adjournment on the other side to understand that any attempt of this kind repeated to call for an adjournment twice while a Senator has the floor will be insisted upon by the Senators on this side of the Chamber as a violation of the fourth rule; so that during a speech delivered by any one Senator he or his friends will be privileged to call for an adjournment once and no oftener.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know what the rule is that the Senator has been raising a point about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana press his point of order?

Mr. WEST. I say I do not press the point of order, but I give notice that on the occasion of a repetition of this kind of tactics it will be pressed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. What kind of tactics does the honorable Senator from Louisiana allude to?

Mr. HAMLIN. Withdrawing from the Senate and leaving us without a quorum.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. The republicans on this floor have twelve or fifteen over a quorum. We have sat here the whole evening listening to speeches and discharging our public duties, and it is their duty to be here as well as ours. They are not here to vote; and why should we be required to vote, Mr. President?

Mr. RANSOM. And, Mr. President, when I made the motion to adjourn there was no quorum in the Senate; there was not half a quorum in the Senate; there was not a third, or a fourth, or a fifth of a quorum present.

[Mr. HAGER resumed the floor and concluded his speech. His speech in full will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, if the vote can be taken I will not be tempted even by this crowded and attentive audience and these thronged galleries and this cheerful and appropriate hour to go on; but if it is not the pleasure of the Senate to take the vote, I shall make a few remarks explanatory of the vote I am about to give.

Mr. DAVIS. A vote to adjourn.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I cannot give way to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. I asked if it was a vote to adjourn the Senator had reference to.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; a vote on the resolution. I will give way to that with great pleasure.

Mr. DAVIS. There is no danger of that yet.

Mr. ANTHONY. Inasmuch as I assented to the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, made two years ago, and which came to the conclusion that there was no legal State government in Louisiana, and recommending that an election be held under the authority of the United States, I deem it proper to state the ground on which I recognize the authority of William P. Kellogg as governor of Louisiana, and as a consequence therefrom the credentials of P. B. S. Pinchback as Senator from that State, entitled to his seat prima facie, and subject to future inquiry into his qualifications, election, and returns.

I shall not dwell upon the reluctance with which I assented to the interference of the Federal authority in the execution of the constitutional guarantee of a republican form of government to all the States. It is an authority not lightly to be invoked, nor carelessly to be exercised. Nothing but grave emergency can justify it; and then it should be employed with the utmost caution, with the least practicable interference in the affairs of the State, but with promptness and vigor, and with the irresistible might of the Federal Government. Once invoked and displayed, it should not cease till the purpose for which it was aroused has been fully accomplished, and the solemn guarantee of the Constitution has been fulfilled, and the power of the Federal Government as well as the republican rights of the State government have been vindicated.

It is natural that a Senator from one of the smaller States should feel especially sensitive upon this point. Yet the power which, if exercised capriciously or arbitrarily, would be fatal to the independence of the States is in its just and proper administration, their safeguard and protection, and is especially precious to the States which are weaker in population and consequently in military strength. It has been invoked by the State which I have the honor in part to represent. The response was not all that we thought we had a right to expect; and by our unaided strength, and surrounded by unfriendly public sentiment, we put down an insurrection which claimed to embody more than half the people within the military age, which pretended to stand upon authentic organic law, and which, in the name of the law, had resorted to an armed defiance of the Government. Yet the moral support of the Federal Government, the assurance which our plain construction of the Constitution gave us that the Federal Government must interpose, in the last necessity, gave us a confidence which was of great assistance. This power, this duty, this prescribed obligation of the Federal Government is one of the most important rights of the States. The abuse of almost every power is injurious in proportion as its proper exercise is beneficial.

It seems to me that Louisiana presented a case for the proper interposition of the constitutional guarantee. The election had recently been held; it was marked by fraud, corruption, and violence on both sides; and while I had a clear opinion that those who voted for Kellogg and those who desired to vote for him but were illegally prevented were the majority, it was impossible to say that the will of that majority had been expressed in the authentic mode provided by law. But equally without authentication and equally tainted with fraud and corruption were the votes for McEnery, and in addition to all this it is clear to my mind that he was in the minority, and that the attempt to seat him was a gigantic fraud. On this point the Committee on Privileges and Elections say:

The testimony shows that leading and sagacious politicians of the State, who were acting with Warmoth, entertained the opinion before the election that Warmoth's control of the election machinery was equivalent to twenty thousand votes; and we are satisfied, by the testimony, that this opinion was well founded. We believe that had registration been accessible to all, and polling-places been properly established, the result of the election would have been entirely different. And although we cannot approve of such a canvass as that made by the Lynch board, who seem to have acted upon the principle of "fighting the devil with fire," and circumventing fraud by fraud, and cannot say that Kellogg's government was elected, nevertheless we believe that Kellogg's government was defeated, and the popular voice reversed, by the fraudulent manipulation of the election.

If the Senate should be inclined not to go behind the official returns of the election, then the McEnery government and Legislature must be recognized as the lawful government of the State, and McMillen, if regularly elected by that Legislature, should be seated in the Senate in place of Kellogg. But your committee believe that this would be recognizing a government based upon fraud, in defiance of the wishes and intention of the voters of that State.

Anarchy was threatened. There seemed to be not only no republican form of government, but no government in Louisiana. In this emergency it seemed to me that a prompt interposition of the Federal Government was the least objectionable measure, when no satisfactory measure of any kind presented itself.

Yet when the report was made I declared my hesitancy in words that I may be permitted to repeat, as they are recorded in the Congressional Globe:

Mr. ANTHONY. I assented to the report of the majority of the committee, and I agree fully with the narration of facts stated and with the conclusions at which the committee arrive, that there is no government in Louisiana, and that neither of the gentlemen whose credentials have been presented was elected to the Senate; but I am so exceedingly reluctant to resort to the extreme measure of interposing the authority of Congress, under the guarantee of a republican form of government, that I shall reserve my judgment, if any better remedy can be proposed, to support it.

Two years have passed since then. The lapse of time, however it might disturb the expediency of a measure somewhat questionable at first, could not destroy the right or impair the obligation of Federal interposition if they existed. Nor am I prepared to say that the reasons which impelled my judgment to that course have lost their strength; nor that I would not now assent to that mode of relief and of extrication from this entangling question. But this appears to be impracticable. Two years before the Senate, it has not commended itself to the favor of the body; and I should have no expectation of its passage, should it be seriously pressed. I may say that, although there are Senators who still favor the measure, it has been practically abandoned.

In all this time Governor Kellogg has exercised the office of governor. The laws enacted by the Kellogg legislature have been executed by the proper officers and enforced by the courts; the President of the United States has continued to recognize him, and the House of Representatives has admitted to seats members who were elected under the same authority. While all this cannot conclude the judgment of the Senate, which is the sole judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members, it naturally enters into the reasons for making up that judgment; and all this has gained force by the lapse of time.

But I rest my judgment mainly on that of the highest legal tribunal of the State. The supreme court of Louisiana has decided that Kellogg is the legal and constitutional governor. That question properly belonged to the court, and was fully argued and an elaborate opinion was delivered. The case was not directly before the court, but the same principles were involved, and the decision leaves no doubt of the opinion of the court upon the validity of Governor Kellogg's election, of his right to the office.

This decision derives no strength to my mind, although I infer that it should with some others, because the judges of the supreme court of Louisiana are all of southern birth, and all but one of them were born in the State of Louisiana. These are not carpet-baggers, as was Henry Clay in Kentucky, as was Andrew Jackson in Tennessee, and Thomas H. Benton in Missouri, and Stephen A. Douglas in Illinois, and Tristram Burges in Rhode Island, and Daniel Webster in Massachusetts, and as are a majority of the members of this body; for I believe that more than half the Senators have committed the grave offense of leaving the State of their birth and of rising to their present positions in other States. Three of the four judges of the supreme court of Louisiana are guiltless of this crime, and as the other was born in Virginia it may be pardoned in him; although it cannot be denied that he was a Union man, and it must be confessed that he was one of the seven members of the convention who refused to sign the ordinance of secession. He was elected to the convention as a Union man, and remained a Union man.

These circumstances, as I have said, are not needed to make me give faith and credit to the judgment of the court. But they silence the objections of those who have invented the term "carpet-bagger," and have made it the synonym of everything that is discreditable and vile. It is not a carpet-bag judgment.

Accepting the judgment of the supreme court, agreeing that Governor Kellogg's title to the office has been confirmed on the highest authority, it follows in my view that his official signature attested by the seal of the State is entitled to credit, and that unless its authenticity be questioned or it be invalidated, we must accord to it the same respect that we do to the signatures of the other governors and to the seals of the other States. On what different authority did any of us take our seats in this Chamber? This signature and this seal certify to us that P. B. S. Pinchback was duly elected by the Legislature of Louisiana a Senator in Congress for six years from the 4th of March, 1873. I think that he is entitled to his seat prima facie, subject to future investigation as to his qualifications, election, and return; that on such investigation he may, by the vote of the body, be ultimately continued in his seat or removed from it, as others have been continued or removed. I shall give my vote accordingly; and in voting to recognize the authority of Governor Kellogg to certify to us the election of Mr. Pinchback, I do not in any way commit myself upon the question that may be raised of the validity of his election.

Mr. President, no one can lament more than I do the situation of that portion of the country which, after waging an unsuccessful war upon the Government, is now involved in domestic strife, the consequence of that war; and I would much rather discuss the remedy for this unfortunate condition than the cause of it. The remedy, I frankly state, I do not see. When, under representative institutions, large constituencies are hostile to the Government of which they form a part and in whose councils they are entitled to share, when they have the right to participate in making, in interpreting, and in executing the laws which they do not mean to obey, and which they will not permit to be enforced within the region under their control, a problem is presented beyond my wisdom to solve, and a remedy is demanded which my statesmanship does not reach.

For the cause we need not go beyond the refusal of some of the States lately in rebellion to accept the situation and to consent to reorganization and reconstruction on the principles that prevailed in the war. Civil strife, unexampled in the magnitude of the destructive forces employed, was closed with a magnanimity that has no parallel in history, and which is most creditable to the American character. Not an ax was stained, not a gibbet was erected by the civil tribunals. No conditions were exacted of the conquered States that were not equally submitted to by the victors. The same rights were conceded to both. The same obligations were exacted of both. No penalty was imposed on those who had revolted against the Government but the concession of equality, but that they should extend to the whole people of their States the right which had been enjoyed by a class.

For the Government to have permitted the restoration of slavery, real or nominal, which had been the original cause of the revolt, and the destruction of which had been found necessary to the prosecution of the war, would have been madness; to have abandoned the emancipated race which had been faithful to the Government and to have left it without the means of self-protection would have been a national crime hardly inferior to that of slavery itself. There was no protection for this class, nay, there was no security for the results of the war, except in the enfranchisement of the colored race. It was not of itself a desirable thing to interpose the Federal authority over the suffrage of States; it was not a desirable thing to elevate to the suffrage a class which, long held in degradation, had not enjoyed the opportunities of qualifying itself for this great privilege. I am not of those who hold that suffrage is a natural right; it is a right derived from society, and society is the judge of those on whom to confer it and of the conditions which should accompany it.

In the case presented in the reconstruction of the States that had rebelled against the Government and that had been compelled by arms to submission to the laws, the enfranchisement of the negroes was a necessity. Inferior in the intelligence, wanting in the education, quite destitute of the training which should accompany the exercise of the suffrage, they were superior in their attachment to the Government and firm in their loyalty to the Constitution. It would have been better if the suffrage could have been limited to those who, whether white or black, united intelligence with loyalty; and if the other classes could have been kept back till they were fitted to exercise the political rights of freemen. But unhappily this would have confined the elective franchise to numbers too few to conduct a government republican in form. They would have amounted to no more than a respectable aristocracy. We had launched the ship of state, and we were compelled to intrust it to men well skilled in navigation, but who proposed to run the vessel on the rocks; or to men little qualified to manage it, but who would do as well as they were able, and would learn as fast as they could. Neither was the crew which we would select; but between intelligent treason and ignorant loyalty who could hesitate?

It is not probable that in all the measures of reconstruction the wisest and the best were adopted. Such power of selection is not given to human judgment. Obligated to act when we required time for deliberation, compelled to decide at once, sometimes with imperfect information and with divided opinions among those whose united action was necessary to the success and even to the inauguration of measures, it is easy, in the light of subsequent experience, to criticise what was then done. It was not so easy to do it better at the time.

It was the judgment of some, conspicuous among them Charles Sumner and Thaddeus Stevens, that the Southern States should be governed as Territories until such time as they should manifest the conditions that qualified them for restoration to the privileges which they had spurned, and of which they had attempted to divest themselves by force of arms. But this plan, whether wise or not, was made impracticable by public opinion, which revolted at the dependent condition of States, and demanded their speedy rehabilitation, generously overlooking the cause which had brought them into their false position, and mistakingly confident that such magnanimity would be followed by a frank acceptance of the mild condition on which alone a reconstruction in conformity with the principles of the Union was possible. I think that history will justify the measures that were adopted in these difficult circumstances, and will applaud the men who adopted them; and if these measures have not accomplished all that was expected of them, the blame will be assigned, not to those who planned them, but to those who professed to accept them and refused to execute them.

Mr. President, I do not desire to contribute one harsh word to this debate. I would soften the acrimony of sectional strife. I have only love and affection for every section of this country, for every State of this Union. I would do anything in my power to reconcile to the flag which they abandoned, and to which they have been forcibly returned, the States that now stand restlessly and unwillingly beneath its folds. But I cannot shut my eyes to the events that go on before them. I cannot refuse my conviction of the logical results of those events.

I was a member of this body, and necessarily a close observer of public affairs, when the people of the South, after long preparation in the teachings of sophistical and unpatriotic men, threw off their allegiance to the Government and made war upon its authority, because a President not acceptable to them had been elected, although elected in strict conformity with the Constitution, and in the manner prescribed by law. He who does not see the same signs now is blind; he who does not hear the same sounds is deaf. The same wild, unpatriotic, boastful utterances in the press are applauded by the same reasonable populace to which they appeal. The same contempt for the northern section of the country is joined to the same reliance upon the northern democracy; and I will say in justice to the democratic party that I believe that reliance to be as mistaken now as it was then. And in a place where it is not proper for me to refer with more particularity to the proceedings, the same violent language is met with the same disapprobation by prudent men, and is encouraged by the same reckless and rebellious spirit by all classes, from the mob in the streets to the Legislatures of States, which hasten to pass resolutions of thanks for words that have called forth the censure of the body in which they were spoken.

This spirit and these more violent utterances do not, indeed, meet the approval of the majority of the southern people. They did not before. But the men who indulged in them controlled the majority and assumed the power. Not a State in the Union would have passed an ordinance of secession if the question could have been put to the people, fairly and without intimidation, not even South Carolina.

It has been said by a man who lived in a country much given to revolution and who had borne a conspicuous part in the overthrow of established authority, that not numbers, nor power, nor resources were the great element of success in civil commotions, but "audacity, audacity, always audacity." It was audacity that carried the Southern States into rebellion. It is audacity that is threatening them now. Had they showed half the courage, in the beginning, in resisting a wicked and irresponsible and self-constituted leadership at home, as they did afterward in contending against the lawful authority of the Government, what amount of blood and of treasure might have been saved! What disaster and humiliation might have been avoided! In Virginia a convention that had been elected with instructions to reject the ordinance of secession was frightened into it by men from South Carolina and Texas, sent there to excite a false opinion which should overawe the convention and force the delegates to the repudiation of their principles and their pledges. The history of rebellion, successful or unsuccessful, affords no stronger evidence of the power of audacity, no more humiliating exhibition of the weakness and cowardice of men intrusted with great responsibilities.

The same audacity now exalts its head, and since "history repeats itself," I cannot overcome the conviction that audacity will rule again; that the same bold, reckless, irresponsible minority will again get the control of prudent, conservative, and patriotic majorities. The wisdom, the prudence, the virtue, the patriotism, the wealth of the South in 1860, controlled even less than the numbers. It was the audacity of the worst and most dangerous elements of society that ruled. The man who was afterward vice-president of the rebel confederacy opposed the rebellion with arguments whose intrinsic force was backed by the influence of his powerful name. He said to the southern people you have known the Union only by its blessings, and then he yielded to the rebellion.

I have listened with respect to the assertions from Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who acted with the South and some of whom fought in the rebellion; and I have listened with full faith in the sincerity of their utterances when they declare their disposition for peace, and when they pledge their influence for the tranquillity of the South. They can pledge themselves, and I do not raise a doubt that they will keep their pledges. But they cannot pledge their constituents. If wise counsels and patriotic warning had prevailed in 1860, we should not have been called upon to reconstruct the Southern States.

The southern Senators were not in favor of the rebellion then. I can count on the fingers of this hand the genuine secessionists who sat in these chairs then, the men who really believed in the doctrine and who desired to see it carried into practice. Perhaps, if by any possibility these words should meet his eye, he would not thank me for saying it, but Jefferson Davis was not of the number. Impelled by a force which he lacked the magnanimity to oppose, and which he knew he could not successfully resist, he found himself in the front, and seemed to lead where he was driven, without being able to change the direction, much less to control the power which steadily urged him on. Tears were in his eyes when he left this Chamber and turned his back on the flag which he had followed in honor and in glory, and which his prophetic soul must have told him would wave in triumph over the treason and rebellion upon which he was rushing.

I make these remarks not willingly, but regretfully, and because I believe that they are true. The Senator from Georgia, in a speech to which I listened attentively, and in which, although I differed from him, I recognized much to admire in the moderation and patriotism of portions of it, closed by reverently repeating a passage from that great work which stands above all literature and all learning, which contains the whole body of divinity and the whole duty of man, the Sermon on the Mount, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." This great command is upon us all. No one can claim its benefits on the ground that he has fulfilled its obligations, and least of all can it be invoked in favor of those who have trampled on human rights, whose hands are red with the blood of the innocent and the defenseless.

Mr. DAVIS, (at two o'clock and fifty minutes a. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn, and ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, (when his name was called.) Being paired, I will not vote except to make a quorum. I will wait and see how that is.

The roll-call having been concluded,

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. To make a quorum I vote "yea," as the Senator from Missouri would vote were he here.

Mr. SARGENT. I have leave of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY,] with whom I am paired, to vote where it is needed to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Several Senators entered the Hall and voted.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. There being now more than a quorum, I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. My vote not being necessary to make a quorum, I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Gordon, Johnston, Merrimon, Stockton, and Thurman—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Eaton, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Tipton, and Washburn—31.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, in the remarks which I am about to submit I propose, in the first place, to address myself briefly to the merits of the resolution reported by the committee, and which involves the immediate subject under discussion, and then to submit some observations in reference to the military interference with the organization of the Legislature in Louisiana on the 4th of last month, and to reply also to the assaults made and aspersions cast upon the southern people generally before I take my seat.

The resolution and the report accompanying it, reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, is in these words. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which were referred the credentials of P. B. S. Pinchback for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

That the certificate of William Pitt Kellogg, then and now the governor of the State of Louisiana, which certificate is verified by the great seal of the State, shows that on the 17th day of January, 1873, Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback was elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th March, 1873, by the Legislature of Louisiana, in manner and form as prescribed by the act of Congress regulating the elections of Senators of the United States. Upon this certificate the committee are of opinion that Mr. Pinchback has a prima facie title to admission as a member of the Senate, and that whatever objections may exist, if any, as to the manner of his election or as to the legal character of the body by which he was elected, should be inquired into afterward.

The committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution: Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

Mr. MERRIMON. So that it appears that the proposition now is, without reference to the real controversy involved in the alleged election of Mr. Pinchback, to admit him as the sitting member upon what is commonly called a prima facie case. It may be well to inquire what is a prima facie case at the very outset. According to my understanding, a false conception has been embraced by Senators who have been willing, without much inquiry and reference to the credentials of Pinchback, to admit him as a member of this body.

What, then, is a prima facie case? It is where one claiming a legal right states facts which, if taken to be true, constitute that right in law. I believe, upon scrutiny, it will appear that that definition of what constitutes a prima facie right is correct. If it is correct, then let us see if the person claiming to be admitted as a member of this body does in fact present a prima facie claim. In order to do so these facts must concur:

First. He must have been elected by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana.

Secondly. That fact must be certified in due form by the governor of the State under the great seal of that State, and that certificate must be countersigned by the secretary of state.

A certificate purporting to be signed by a person claiming to be governor of the State and sealed with a seal purporting to be the great seal of the State of Louisiana and countersigned by a person purporting to be the secretary of that State has been presented to the Senate, and that certificate is to the effect that the Legislature of that State at a particular time did elect this person so claiming to be a Senator of the United States from the 4th of March, 1873, for six years next thereafter.

Now, sir, if the Senate shall take that to be true, then there is a prima facie case made; but it is only a prima facie case in the event that the Senate—and the whole Senate—shall take it to be true, for the very moment that a suggestion is made by a Senator that the facts embodied in the certificate are not true, that moment the prima facie case ceases to exist. It is not necessary that the whole Senate shall concur in saying this certificate is put in question. If any Senator shall suggest, by motion or otherwise, that the facts embodied in what purports to be the certificate are not true, or that any material fact contained in it is not true, that instant the prima facie case ceases to exist as a matter of law.

To make this idea a little plainer, suppose that I rise in my place as a Senator and suggest that what purports to be the seal of the State of Louisiana is not the seal? That moment the prima facie case ceases to exist. Suppose I suggest that the person purporting to be governor of the State was not the governor, or that the person purporting to be the secretary of state was not the secretary, or that the body which purported to have elected this party to be Senator was not the Legislature; that moment the prima facie case ceases.

Then, sir, was there any such suggestion here by anybody? It were folly to deny it. From the very moment that what purports to be the credentials of the person now claiming to be admitted as a Senator were presented, every fact contained in that certificate was questioned. It was denied that there was any such Legislature; it was denied that there was any such governor, that there was any such secretary of state; it was denied that what purported to be the seal was the seal; and at the same time, another person presented other credentials in which it was certified by another person, purporting to be the governor of the State, that another person was elected to be Senator for the same term and by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana. Those credentials were countersigned by a person purporting to be the secretary of state, and they purported to be under the great seal of the State. I hold those credentials in my hand now. If there is a prima facie case in the case of Pinchback, why, I ask, are not the credentials which I hold now, coming to the Senate in form, averring the facts necessary to show that Mr. McMillen was elected at the same time, a prima facie case in his behalf? But the answer to that is this: If the Senate will take these material facts as true, the prima facie case exists; but then the Senator from Indiana or some other Senator suggests that the seal is false, that the person purporting to be governor is not governor, that the person purporting to be secretary of state is not the secretary of state, and that in fact the body purporting to be the Legislature which elected McMillen was not the Legislature. Upon that suggestion I admit the prima facie case is gone; and so it appears that the prima facie case suggested in this report is no prima facie case, and that the report is false when it makes a suggestion that has no force or effect in law.

Now, sir, I maintain two propositions:

First. That it is within the legitimate power of the Senate to admit a person claiming to be admitted as a Senator upon what are commonly called his credentials; that is, the certificate of the governor, countersigned by the secretary of state under the great seal of the State, that a particular person was elected by the Legislature of a State at a certain time. I admit that the Senate has power upon the presentation of such credentials to admit a party to a seat without further question and to allow him to sit; but I insist that it is within the legitimate power of the Senate, and that it may be the duty of the Senate in many cases in the exercise of this power, not to allow a party so claiming to come into the Senate as a member of this body for any purpose until the validity of his election shall be questioned and thoroughly investigated and determined.

Secondly. I insist that in this case now before the Senate and under discussion, in the exercise of that power, the Senate ought not for grave reasons, to which I shall call attention presently, to admit this party to a seat one hour until the whole merit of his case shall be investigated and his right shall be fully and fairly determined.

I propose to make these two propositions good.

Under the Constitution every State in the Union is entitled to be represented in this body by two Senators, by virtue of the clause of the Constitution which I will now read. I read paragraph 1 of section 3 of article 1 of the Constitution, which is in these words:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

What is the plain meaning of the right of a State created by this clause of the Constitution? It is that the Legislature shall duly elect two Senators; that that election shall be made to appear to the Senate according to law; and the State is not entitled to representation until that fact shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Senate. When the person applying to represent the State comes to the Senate armed with the evidence of his election—when he presents himself to the Senate armed with this evidence, then manifestly, if there were no other provision in the Constitution, the Senate would have the right to hear and determine the case of the applicant as to his right to be admitted and to have reasonable and due time to make that inquiry before admitting him to his seat. Indeed, it would be the duty of the Senate to make such inquiry. But those who framed the Constitution were not content that the law should imply this right on the part of the Senate as a body to admit new members. It made express provision in these words. I read a part of paragraph 1 of section 5 of article 1:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business.

So that by the paragraph which I have just read the power is expressly conferred upon the Senate to ascertain whether the person applying as a Senator-elect has been properly elected; and by reasonable construction, if not by the plain words, the Senate is to have reasonable time to make that inquiry. Nay, I go further, and say that as matter of law and right and duty the Senate is bound to make that inquiry, if there shall be any suggestion that the party is not lawfully elected, before he is admitted as a member of the Senate for any purpose. When the Senate shall recklessly admit one here when his right is questioned by a single Senator without that investigation, and allow him to vote upon the most important interests that the people or the nation could have to be passed upon, I say that the Senate is false to itself, false to its duty, and false to the American people. I repeat, and I do it earnestly, that whenever it is suggested by a Senator that one applying for admission to a seat in this body has not been lawfully elected according to the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State which he purports to represent, the Senate is false to itself, it is false to right, it is false to the American people, if it shall allow him to sit and pass upon the rights of those people until they have tried his right and determined that he is so entitled.

Mr. President, let us examine for a moment and see what would be the consequences of such a practice. Take a distant State. Suppose that three or four or five men should get together and they resolve to perpetrate a fraud upon the Senate and upon the American people; one party claims that he is the governor, another claims that he is the secretary of state, and they forge a seal purporting to be the great seal of that State, and two of these men make the certificate required by law, to the effect that on a certain day the Legislature of that State did in fact elect A B, who is charged with these credentials, to be a Senator from that State; and suppose that that person, with that naked, absolute forgery, should come to the Senate and present these credentials: would not that person present as thoroughly a prima facie case as the credentials presented by Pinchback in this case? If the Senate, without inquiring into the character and validity of such credentials, were to admit that forger, that fraudulent person, to a seat in this body, would not any one conclude, would not the American people conclude that the Senate was a very silly and a very false body? Would it not be said at once that there was not proper inquiry; that the Senate was remiss in its duty—false in its duty? How much more censurable would it be if a Senator would rise up in his place and say, "This is a forgery; that party purporting to be the governor is not the governor; that seal purporting to be the seal is not the seal; that party purporting to be the secretary attesting is not the secretary; the credentials are false and a forgery out and out;" and yet that would be a prima facie case just as this prima facie is made out! It seems to me such a practice would shock the common sense of all sensible men.

This case which I put shows the strength of the suggestion I have made in the outset touching what constitutes a prima facie case. It is prima facie no longer than it remains unquestioned, and there ought to be no prima facie case in the Senate. No credentials ought ever to be acted upon in the Senate until they are referred and a committee are satisfied by proper and satisfactory evidence that all the necessary facts are true. Then they can report to the Senate and it can act intelligently and with confidence.

I will suppose another case stronger than that. Suppose that I go over into the State of Maryland backed by a thousand armed men; I proclaim myself the governor; I undertake to administer the constitution and laws of that State; I do it by pure, naked usurpation; I organize a Legislature, I appoint a secretary of state, I devise a seal for the State, and by force of the armed men who are around me I administer the State government—under such circumstances, suppose I should send two Senators to this body, the credentials all proper and in form, making what is here called by the committee a prima facie case; would anybody pretend in that case that the Senate would or ought to admit the men whom I should thus send here, without a reference of the credentials and a solemn inquiry whether the facts contained in the certificates were true? Moreover, would not every sensible man be astounded if he learned that the persons whom I thus sent came and presented their credentials and a Senator rose in his place and suggested that the whole was the offspring of a naked usurpation in the State of Maryland; that it was done by one who had no authority whatsoever except authority asserted by naked force? And what would be said of the Senate if it were to do such a thing as that? Would it not be regarded as reckless practice, unreasonable and absurd? Yet this would be done if the Senate only looked to the form of the credentials. This is the practice contended for in this case.

Such a practice, such a doctrine, is too absurd to talk about. What astonishes me profoundly is, that it has been insisted upon at all by any one. I am more astonished that it should be insisted upon by one who is so good a lawyer as the Senator from Indiana. I venture to say that he will laugh at himself when he looks back ten years hence on this record, and he will say, "How is it possible that I ever could have consented to make such a report as that?" That will be the effect of it.

Mr. EATON, (at three o'clock and thirty minutes a. m.) Will the Senator yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. MERRIMON. Not yet.

Mr. EATON. The Senate is getting very thin.

Mr. MERRIMON. Now let us take the case in hand to illustrate my meaning and elaborate it a little more. Suppose that Kellogg is and was a usurper as it is alleged, and I believe it and shall be able to show it before I take my seat to any disinterested person; suppose the person purporting to be the secretary of state is a usurper; suppose what purports to be the seal is false; suppose that the supposed Legislature was no Legislature, and suppose that we take this so-called prima facie case to be the case before the Senate and we admit this person claiming to come in by virtue of the credentials; what is presented by this action of the Senate to the world and especially to the American people? A party coming here by the appointment of a naked, absolute usurper sits in the Senate, and votes upon the civil-rights bill; he votes upon the bill which it is said will be introduced to invest the President with power to suspend the habeas corpus in times of profound peace; he votes away millions and millions of dollars which the people are bound to pay, and yet it turns out at last, when we come to examine into the validity of the election, that he had no election at all. What would be said of the Senate in such a case? What a spectacle would be presented! It would be a mockery and a laughing-stock for every intelligent American citizen. That will be or may be the effect of the proposition before the Senate.

There can be no doubt, Mr. President, it seems to me, about the reason of the thing. I might go on and enlarge the argument upon the principle that I have thus submitted. But it is said the uniform practice of the Senate from the earliest period of the Government has been that way. That I deny flatly. I say it is not true, and I believe I am ready to show it.

I refer in the first place to a very early case, one that happened in 1794, a case from Delaware. I read now from the Annals of Congress, 1793-'95, page 74:

Kensy Johns appeared and produced his credentials of an appointment by the governor of the State of Delaware as a Senator for the United States, which were read.

Whereupon, it was moved that they be referred to the consideration of the Committee of Elections before the said Kensy Johns could be permitted to qualify, who are directed to report thereon; and it passed in the affirmative—yeas 13, nays 12.

So that it will be noted that Kensy Johns came to the Senate just as the person now claiming did, with credentials all in form and according to law and presented what is now called a prima facie case. In that case, almost in the beginning of the Government, before Kensy Johns was allowed to take his seat, the first thing that was done, and it seems even without suggestion that there was anything unlawful about his election, it was referred to a committee to inquire whether or not he was in fact and law appointed to be a Senator. Now let us see what happened after that? That was on March 24. On March 26 the Senate took this further action:

Mr. Bradley, from the Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the credential of Kensy Johns, appointed by the executive of the State of Delaware a Senator of the United States in place of George Read, resigned.

Ordered, That the report lie for consideration.

On the 28th the Senate took further action—I will thank gentlemen to stop talking, and I will be obliged to them if they will quit talking or go to the cloak-room and go to sleep.

Mr. NORWOOD, (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes a. m., Thursday.) I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will give way for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. MERRIMON. Not at present; I will by and by. I will ask the Clerk to read what I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

FRIDAY, March 28.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the credentials of Kensy Johns, appointed by the executive of the State of Delaware to be a Senator of the United States; which report is as follows:

The Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of an appointment by the governor of the State of Delaware of Kensy Johns as a Senator of the United States, having had the same under consideration, report:

That George Read, a Senator for the State of Delaware, resigned his seat upon the 18th day of December, 1793, and during the recess of the Legislature of said State.

That the Legislature of the said State met in January and adjourned in February, 1794.

That upon the 19th day of March, and subsequent to the adjournment of the said Legislature, Kensy Johns was appointed by the governor of said State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation aforesaid.

Whereupon the committee submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Kensy Johns, appointed by the governor of the State of Delaware as a Senator of the United States for said State, is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States; a session of the Legislature of the said State having intervened between the resignation of the said George Read and the appointment of the said Kensy Johns.

On the question to agree to this report, it passed in the affirmative—yeas 20, nays 7; as follows.

Resolved, That an attested copy of the resolution of the Senate on the appointment of Kensy Johns to be a Senator of the United States be transmitted by the President of the Senate to the executive of the State of Delaware.

Mr. MERRIMON. In that case Kensy Johns came to the Senate with a certificate in form and when his credentials were presented it was moved to swear him in. That motion and his credentials were referred to a committee. That committee reported, having investigated the merits of his case, adversely; the Senate sustained that report, and he never took a seat in the Senate at all. There is a case directly in point, on all fours with the one now before the Senate.

It is said in this case by the Senator from Indiana that the credentials of Pinchback have been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Pray, I ask, what were they referred for? Was it to see that there was a certificate by one purporting to be the governor, countersigned by one purporting to be the secretary of state, and that it was sealed with what purported to be the great seal of the State and contained a certificate of facts necessary to constitute the right of the applicant? Sir, that is child's play; it is ridiculous nonsense; it is absurd; for if that was the inquiry it was as manifest to the Senate before it was reported as afterward. The Senate referred these credentials to the end that the committee should inquire whether the credentials were genuine, and if they went into that inquiry I ask why they did not go into the merits of this claimant's election? It was alleged that there was a usurpation in Louisiana. This committee has been negligent if they did not go into that inquiry. It is trifling with the Senate when they report back this resolution. However they intended it, it is not respectful to the intelligence of the Senate to make such a report as that. They have not discharged the duty with which they were charged. They were charged with the duty of inquiring whether these credentials were genuine, genuine not in one respect, but genuine in all respects; and if it was suggested, as it was suggested in committee as well as in the Senate, that the whole was a forgery and the offspring of usurpation, they came short of their duty in that they reported here that he ought to be admitted upon a so-called prima facie case. That is trifling with the Senate and it is trifling with the country. It deserves condemnation, and I do condemn it. The subject is too serious to pass over lightly.

That was an early case. I come down to a more modern case. I refer to a case from Connecticut, the case of Lanman. In that case Mr. Lanman also came to the Senate with his credentials all in form according to law, and so far as they showed upon their face he was duly appointed a Senator according to law from the State of Connecticut. When he came and presented his credentials to the Senate it was then moved that he be sworn in and allowed to sit as a member, but let us see what action the Senate took. On the 4th of March, 1825, the Senate took this action in that behalf:

The President laid before the Senate a letter from Hon. James Lanman, enclosing the credentials of his appointment by the governor of Connecticut, as a Senator of the United States, "to take effect immediately after the 3d day of March, 1825, and to continue until the next meeting of the Legislature," and expressing his readiness to receive the usual qualifications.

The letter and credentials were read.

Now see what followed and how courteously the Senate acted on that occasion:

On motion, by Mr. Holmes, of Maine,
That Mr. Lanman be admitted to take the oath required by the Constitution,
A debate ensued; and,
On motion,
Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow.

On March 5 the Senate took this further action, and I will ask the Clerk to read that portion of the Journal which I have marked. That case was in 1832.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of yesterday,
That Mr. Lanman be admitted to take the oath required by the Constitution;
and,

On motion, by Mr. Eaton,
Ordered, That the said motion, together with the credentials of Mr. Lanman, be referred to a select committee to consist of three members, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. Eaton, Mr. Edwards, and Mr. Tazewell were appointed the committee.

Mr. Van Buren submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That Hon. James Lanman have leave to be heard at the bar of the Senate on the question as to his right to a seat therein, under an appointment made by the executive of Connecticut.

MONDAY, March 7, 1825.

Mr. Eaton, from the select committee to whom was referred, on the 5th instant, the motion "that Mr. Lanman be admitted to take the oath required by the Constitution," together with the credentials of Mr. Lanman, submitted the following report:

That Mr. Lanman's term of service in the Senate expired on the 3d March. On the 4th he presented to the Senate a certificate, regularly and properly authenticated, from Oliver Wolcott, governor of the State of Connecticut, setting forth that the President of the United States had desired the Senate to convene on the 4th of March, and had caused official notice of that fact to be communicated to him.

The certificate of appointment is dated the 8th of February, 1825, subsequent to the time of notification to him by the President. The certificate further recites that at the time of its execution the Legislature of the State was not in session, and would not be until the month of May.

The committee have looked into the Journals of the Senate to discover if they could find any authority or decision by them on this question, and the following have been found recorded:

On the 27th day of April, 1797, William Cocke was appointed a Senator from that State by the governor of Tennessee, his term of service having expired on the 3d of the preceding March, and on the 15th of May took his seat and was qualified.

On the 3d of March, 1801, the seat of Uriah Tracy became vacant, the time for which he had been elected having expired. On the 20th of February preceding the governor of Connecticut reappointed him a Senator, and in pursuance thereof he was qualified and took his seat.

Joseph Anderson, a Senator from Tennessee, was appointed by the governor a member of the Senate on the 6th of February, 1809, and on the 4th of March after took his seat, the period for which he had been elected having on the preceding day expired.

John Williams, of Tennessee, on the 20th of January, 1817, was appointed a Senator in Congress, to take his seat on the 4th of March, when the term for which he had been elected would expire. Mr. Williams appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

In none of those cases does it appear that there was any objection made or question raised except in 1801 in the case of Mr. Tracy, when the vote was 13 for and 10 against the right of the member to take his seat. Those are the only analogous cases the committee has been able to find.

By reference to the statute laws of Connecticut the committee find that in that State there is a law upon this subject which is in the following words: "Whenever any vacancy shall happen in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States by the expiration of the term of service of a Senator, or by resignation, or otherwise, the General Assembly, if then in session, shall, by a concurrent vote of the senate and house of representatives, proceed to fill said vacancy by a new election; and in case such vacancy shall happen in the recess of the General Assembly, the governor shall appoint some person to fill the same until the next meeting of the General Assembly."

The report was read.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion of the 5th instant, that the Hon. James Lanman have leave to be heard at the bar of the Senate on the question as to his right to a seat therein, and agreed thereto.

Mr. Edwards submitted the following motion, which was read:

Resolved, That the Hon. James Lanman, appointed a Senator by the governor of the State of Connecticut, be now admitted to the oath required by the Constitution.

And on the question to agree thereto it was determined in the negative—yeas 18, nays 23.

Mr. MERRIMON. There is another case directly in point. Just as in this case, when Lanman presented his credentials, in proper form, it was suggested that he was not lawfully appointed, and the Senate did in that case, as I have shown it ought to do and is bound by law to do in every case, refer the credentials for a purpose—referred them to a committee charged to inquire whether the party was entitled to qualify and whether he should come into the Senate and sit at all. On looking into it they found he was not qualified and he never did take his seat. How does that case differ from this? Here the claimant comes and presents his credentials. It is true the credentials are referred. That reference was not a mere matter of form. They were referred in good faith. Why? Because in the first place all credentials ought to be referred, and referred in good faith, for the purpose of inquiry; in this case for solemn and scrutinizing inquiry. Why? Because it is seriously suggested—not capriciously, but seriously suggested—that the person who signs this certificate is not the governor of Louisiana, that the body which purported to elect him was not the Legislature of Louisiana, that the person who purported to countersign the certificate was not the secretary of state of Louisiana, and that what purported to be the great seal of that State was not the great seal. This objection was made in good faith, and when it was referred to the committee the members of the committee were charged upon their whole obligation to the American people to make solemn inquiry and report whether this party was in fact elected according to law in all respects, and not to come back with this false report of a prima facie case. This Senate, if it will do its duty to itself and the country, will rerefer this resolution—that is the proper motion to make—to rerefer it to this committee and charge the committee to do its duty before it can be discharged by the Senate.

Then, sir, there are two cases, one in the early life of the Government and another as late as 1825.

Now I refer to four other cases of more modern date. I refer first to the cases of Fishback and Baxter; and they occurred in 1864. I read now from Contested-Election Cases in Congress, from 1834 to 1865, at page 641:

IN THE SENATE, June 27, 1864.

Mr. Trumbull, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

That the credentials presented are in due form—

The Senate will remember how much stress the Senator from Indiana laid upon "due form"— purporting to be under the seal of the State of Arkansas, and to be signed by Isaac Murphy, governor thereof; and if the right to seats were to be determined by an inspection of the credentials—

These are important words, well considered by the committee—

Messrs. Fishback and Baxter would be entitled to be sworn as members of this body. It is, however, admitted by the persons claiming seats and known to the country—

These are important words again, written by one who well knew their weight and purport—that, in the spring of 1861, the State of Arkansas, through its constituted authorities, undertook to secede from the Union, set up a government in hostility to the United States, and maintain the same by force of arms.

There is another case on all fours with the one before the Senate. These two persons, claiming to be Senators duly accredited from the State of Arkansas, presented their credentials. If the doctrine now contended for by the Senator from Indiana is true, what more was to be done with these credentials than refer them to the committee, and if they found them in form report them back and recommend that these two Senators be admitted to their seats and allow their cases to be inquired into in the future? It would have been ridiculous and absurd in that case as it is in this case. It was suggested upon the floor of the Senate when they presented their credentials that the State of Arkansas had been in rebellion; it was seriously questioned in good faith whether or not that State was entitled to representation; and therefore the reference was made and the committee were charged with the inquiry, and they could not report and be discharged from the duty assigned them until they did report on the merits of the election. In that case Fishback and Baxter were not allowed to take seats here. Their right was passed upon by the committee and the Senate, and having been passed upon adversely, they never took their seats; they never came into the Senate at all.

Then I refer to two more cases. In 1865 Messrs. Cutler and Smith came to the Senate with credentials in "due form," seeking to represent the State of Louisiana. When their credentials were presented and they were offered to be sworn, it was suggested again solemnly that that State also had been in rebellion, and before they could be admitted to seats it was not only well but it was lawful and there was an obligation resting upon the Senate to inquire before they were admitted whether they were lawfully elected, and so the reference was made in that case not to see whether their credentials were formal—no such purpose—but for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of that election; and the committee say in that case:

Messrs. Cutler and Smith, the claimants for seats, were duly elected Senators by the Legislature which convened on the 3d day of October, 1864, and but for the fact that, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on the 13th day of July, 1861, the inhabitants of the State of Louisiana were declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States and all commercial intercourse between them and the citizens of other States declared to be unlawful, which condition of things had not ceased at the time of the reorganization of the State government and the election of Messrs. Cutler and Smith, your committee would recommend their immediate admission to seats.

The persons in possession of the local authorities of Louisiana having rebelled against the authority of the United States, and her inhabitants having been declared to be in a state of insurrection in pursuance of a law passed by the two Houses of Congress, your committee deem it improper for this body to admit to seats Senators from Louisiana, till by some joint action of both Houses there shall be some recognition of an existing State government acting in harmony with the Government of the United States and recognizing its authority.

All these cases are in support of the argument which I have submitted in this behalf. Now, I know there are cases the reverse of them. I am advertent to the case of Shields. He presented his credentials in due form as Senator-elect from the State of Illinois. He came here with a high reputation as a military man, and he was exceedingly popular. It was at a time of high party excitement. He had covered himself with glory in the Mexican war. His credentials were presented, and not at the time but afterward they were questioned. His credentials were offered and with railroad speed he was sworn in. The question was raised that he was not eligible to be elected to the Senate, because he had not resided in this country a sufficient length of time. He was admitted, however, to sit as a member of the Senate. The case was referred to the committee. The committee examined into his case, as it was proposed to do in this case, and Shields was turned out of the Senate because he was not eligible to a seat in it at the time he was elected. He never was lawfully a member of the Senate, and yet he sat here for months and months, passing upon the highest and most important rights of the American people. Does not that very case show that such a practice is a bad practice, that though it was done it was done wrongfully; and does it not show furthermore the propriety of pursuing the course I have insisted upon in all cases?

I am also aware of the case of Robbins from Rhode Island. Robbins presented what is called here now a prima facie case when he presented his credentials. I believe without a reference he was sworn in, and took his seat. After he was allowed to sit, his credentials were referred to a committee, and they inquired into his case. There was a long investigation. Finally the committee decided that he was duly elected, and reported in his favor. That case again shows the impropriety of such a course; for suppose the committee had determined that he was not elected—and there was much doubt about his right—then in that case he would have been sitting here for months, and voting upon the rights of the American people, and voting upon their obligations without number when he had no right to a vote. Suppose we admit Mr. Pinchback now to sit upon this resolution; he is to come into the Senate and vote upon important measures involving the salvation of this country; he votes upon measures that may precipitate civil war, and a civil war that may result in the disruption of the Government and its final destruction. After he has been sitting here six months the committee charged with the further investigation of his case may report that he was not duly elected, that he is not entitled to sit here, and he is turned out of the Senate; and yet in the mean time he might by his single vote have destroyed the Government. Sir, such a practice is too absurd, it is too unjust to be law.

Then, sir, I insist that I have maintained the first proposition that the Senate has power, nay, that it is its duty not to admit a person claiming a seat in the Senate simply upon its appearing to the Senate that his credentials are in form; that it has the power to examine into his right in the first instance and determine his right before he shall be admitted.

Now let us see if I can maintain the second proposition. I insist in this case that the Senate, by the highest and most solemn considerations, ought not to admit the person claiming to be admitted now as a Senator from the State of Louisiana. Why do I so insist? In 1872 an election was held in the State of Louisiana for a Legislature, for a governor, and for other State officers. The election was held according to law in that State. The commissioners who held the election, the supervisors who compiled the vote in the several parishes, and the only lawful returning boards that examined into the returns as compiled by the supervisors ascertained that John McEnery was elected governor and that the majority of persons who were candidates for the Legislature upon the McEnery ticket were elected. They ascertained that they were so elected by a majority of about 10,000 votes.

Mr. NORWOOD, (at four o'clock a. m.) I see the Senator from Indiana is coming in, and I suppose he is willing to agree to an adjournment. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield for an adjournment.

Mr. MERRIMON. I yield for that purpose and that purpose only.

Mr. NORWOOD. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAVIS in the chair.) The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DENNIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. SARGENT, (after having voted in the negative.) I desire to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ,] except where my vote is necessary to make a quorum. The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Dennis, Johnston, Merrimon, Norwood, and Thurman—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Scott, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—32.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Cooper, Eaton, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Stevenson, Stockton, Tipton, and Washburn—35.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON. It not only thus appears by the returns and the returns passed upon by the lawful authorities of the State of Louisiana—I wish I had time to give some of the details to verify the statement I am now making—but on account of a usurpation to which I shall have occasion to advert by and by, the matter of the result of that election came to be mooted in the Senate, and the Senate solemnly referred it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in December, 1872, to inquire whether there was any government in the State of Louisiana. That committee at that time, as it is now also, was a very able committee. It consisted of the present chairman, the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN,] the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] and the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Trumbull.] A more able, competent, truthful, and reliable committee, I undertake to say, could not be selected in the Senate at this time or at any period in the history of the Government. They took the matter with which they were thus charged into solemn consideration. They examined it for weeks. They took evidence which fills a volume containing one thousand and ninety-eight pages. They considered that evidence; they carefully found the facts, then found their force and effect, which they embodied in a report to the Senate. In that report a majority of the committee, indeed all the committee but one, say they had the returns of that election before them, that they examined those returns, and their examination sustained the report made by the lawful returning boards in the State of Louisiana. They say furthermore that the McEnery ticket and those composing the "McEnery legislature" were elected by a majority of about 10,000 votes. They report furthermore that the election was held according to law. All of them so report except one member. If that is true, then John McEnery was the Governor of Louisiana, elected on the 4th of November, 1872, according to the constitution and laws of that State, and the McEnery legislature was the true and lawful Legislature, so ascertained to be according to the constitution and laws of that State. If that is so, then no other body in the State had any right to elect any one to represent that State in this Senate, and no other person purporting to be governor of that State had any right to certify the election of any one by that Legislature to the Senate of the United States, or to grant any credentials or evidence of election.

But, sir, it so happened that another person claimed to be the governor of that State, one Kellogg. He was the opponent of McEnery at the election in 1872, and he insisted that he was governor, and that the men who ran upon the ticket with him for the Legislature constituted the Legislature of that State; and although no authority whatsoever—I repeat those words, and I understand the measure of what I am saying—no authority whatsoever ascertained that Kellogg was elected to be governor or that the Legislature commonly called the Kellogg legislature was elected. I repeat it, sir, no authority ascertained that Kellogg was elected or that the "Kellogg legislature," so called, was ever elected; and the authorities of the State of Louisiana, all the proper authorities that examined into the question there, and this able committee here which I have named, charged by the Senate to inquire and ascertain here that Kellogg and the Kellogg legislature were not elected, and the most that any of them said was that he ought to have been elected, and that fraud was practiced in the election else he would have been elected. They said the negro vote of that State ought to have been cast for the Kellogg ticket and that that result was defeated by fraud.

I insist that that is not true, and that this report and the evidence taken by that committee show it. But suppose I admit for argument's sake that it was true; the election was not questioned by any lawful authority in the State of Louisiana. No lawful contest was ever inaugurated there. The election was not contested in any known to the law. It was never ascertained by any competent authority in the State of Louisiana that there was any fraud in connection with that election. No action was taken according to law in that respect. No action was taken here in Congress, if Congress had had jurisdiction of the matter, to ascertain that the election was consummated through fraud. So that it never was ascertained that Kellogg and the Kellogg legislature were elected by any authority.

Mr. MORTON. The Lynch board.

Mr. MERRIMON. That was no authority. The committee did not pretend that it had any legal existence; on the contrary, they said it was not lawful and had no authority. Then, sir, I can reply to the long speech of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] in a half dozen words. He says there were enormous frauds in the election. He belabors himself for two hours and a half to abuse the people of Louisiana, and especially the white people and the democratic party and the fusion party there, and he says the election was carried by fraud. I reply to his speech by saying I deny what you allege. But suppose I admit it; you fail to show, you cannot show, that Kellogg was elected by any lawful ascertainment. There was no inquiry according to law instituted to ascertain that he was deprived of the election through fraud, and therefore he was no more elected than if he had not been a candidate at all. If the Senator from Indiana and myself were candidates in the State of Indiana for the office of governor and I beat him through fraudulent means (which I am sure I never would do) and it were ascertained by the lawful authorities that I was elected governor, though in fact he ought to have received a majority of the votes or although in fact he may have received a majority of the votes—if it is ascertained by lawful authority that I received a majority, unless he should take steps to reverse it, on that ascertainment I would be governor to all intents and purposes, as every lawyer knows. So it was in Louisiana. McEnery having been ascertained to be elected according to the constitution and laws of Louisiana, he was to all intents and purposes the governor of Louisiana, and he remained so until the term of his office expired or he resigned, and Kellogg had no right whatever, nor could he have unless he took steps according to law to contest the election.

Then, the inquiry arises, how did Kellogg happen to become the governor? He went on the idea which is gone on here to-night and which some Senators have been proceeding upon from the beginning of this controversy, that he ought to have been elected because he ought to have received all the negro votes. He called upon the President of the United States to sustain him with the Army of the United States and the President did sustain him. He sustained him in opposition to the lawful governor of the State, and the President also sustained the Kellogg legislature, and sustains Kellogg to this day without any lawful sanction on the face of the earth, but in direct subversion of the Constitution and laws of the United States; and that is the single sanction for the credentials which are presented here and which this committee say constitute a prima facie case.

Six of the committee said in terms that Kellogg was not elected. The other member of the committee, the Senator from Indiana, did not say he was elected; he never said it, but he said he was in office; he was the de facto governor; he was exercising authority; the President had recognized him; and inasmuch as there was disorder there, the best thing Congress can do was to recognize him and sustain him, disregarding, however, the circumstances under which he came into power as the so-called governor.

So, then, we have virtually the judgment, the solemn finding and judgment of that able committee, that Kellogg is not and never was the lawful governor of the State of Louisiana.

Now the Senator from Indiana and others have said that he is the de facto governor. I deny it. He is not the de facto governor; he is a mere naked usurper, and every act he does and every act passed by the Kellogg legislature is absolutely null and void, as much so as if I had done what they have done.

Now what is a de facto officer? I am astonished to hear lawyers here of age, large experience, and learning talk so loosely about matters that they ought to be familiar with and with which they would be familiar if they would revert to principles. A de facto officer is one who comes in irregularly under a color of authority, and his acts as such are good for third parties and good for the public but never for himself and never as between himself and another. But that is not the case here. If what this committee says is true, if what the Senator from Indiana himself reported is the truth, he came into power not by color of authority at all. I challenge any Senator to point to the color of authority under which he came into power, and I shall be glad to hear it suggested no more until he does cite the authority. It is very easy to engage in empty declamation and to state things as facts which are not facts. When we debate principle let us debate principle, and here in this high place it seems to me we ought to debate principle and talk about nothing but principle. I am utterly disgusted with a clap-trap way of debating questions. Kellogg did not pass into that place by any color of authority at all, nor did the Kellogg legislature have any shadow of authority. There was no color of law which placed them in power, because others had been ascertained according to the constitution and laws of Louisiana to have been elected to fill the various offices I have mentioned. No lawful authority by any color of authority conducted Kellogg and his associates into office.

What is a usurper? Is a usurper a de facto officer? Any one who understands principle will not contend that he is. To put again in illustration of the case I put awhile ago, suppose that I were to muster in the city of Washington to-morrow a thousand men and arm them and I should go into the State of Maryland and proclaim myself governor, and I should appoint the necessary officers to administer the State government, and I should send a number of men to the capitol of the State and assemble them there as a Legislature, and by means of this armed force I should administer that government for a month or two months; would anybody who knows anything about principle pretend that in that case I would be the de facto governor of Maryland? It would, it seems to me, be absurd to say so. Why? Because I did not go in by even the shadow of color of authority; I should be a usurper, a naked usurper, and the lawful authority would have a right to resist me and resist me to the extent of taking life if need be, although I might be backed by the President and the whole Army of the United States.

I say, sir, as a matter of law that McEnery had the right, he had the constitutional and lawful right to use force to subvert that usurpation.

I maintain that Kellogg and his army there are guilty of murder. We have heard a great deal of declamation about murders in the South. I am talking in no declamatory manner, but in earnest now about murder. I repeat, sir, that Kellogg and the men who have backed him there have been guilty of murder in the case of every man whose life has been taken in that affair in the streets of New Orleans that we have heard so much declamation about. Every man who was there asserting the right of McEnery and who was killed by Kellogg and his forces was murdered in the technical sense, and Kellogg and his forces were guilty of murder; and because they were guilty of murder no man who killed one of them has been tried for crime, for when a court came to pass upon it, the court would have been bound to hold that there was no murder but that they had a right to assert the lawful authority.

Now, I want to show further what attitude some Senators stand in here. Several Senators have declared that they are going to support this proposition. I am astonished at their inadvertence. I am sure they would not do it if they would give this matter the consideration that it deserves. Will the Senate believe, will the country believe, that a majority of the Senators who have expressed their purpose to support this resolution to admit Pinchback as a Senator here have declared by their solemn vote that there was no government in Louisiana? If there be no government in Louisiana, if Kellogg was a mere usurper, if the Kellogg legislature was no Legislature, then it had no right to send Pinchback here. Now, let us see what these Senators have said and done. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] felt anxious upon this subject. He said along with three others that there was no government in Louisiana, because he said that McEnery and the McEnery legislature were elected through fraud. They said so; but it seems to me in the judgment of any disinterested person their declaration had nothing to support it. They said it was so, and they assign this reason, that the negro vote, if it had been cast fairly, would have gone for the republican ticket and that would have elected Kellogg. Non sequitur. Why do I say so? In the election that took place there the democrats, the conservatives, and the liberal republicans fused and they had what they called a "fusion ticket," and that "fusion ticket" had the benefit of the influence of Governor Warmoth, and the committee itself says that the witnesses examined swore that his influence was equal to twenty thousand votes. Governor Warmoth had a perfect right to give his influence to any ticket that he pleased, and because he gave his influence to the fusion ticket he was not therefore fraudulent. If the negroes of that State confided in him, or any considerable number of them, or if he had influences which he could employ that were not unlawful in their character to bring them to the support of that ticket, he had a perfect right to do it. He had a right according to practice to use his official patronage for the purpose of carrying that ticket. There had been terrible misrule in that State before that time. Taking his influence and the misrule that had prevailed in that State before, and it was perfectly natural to anticipate the result that happened in that case. The people of all classes needed and wanted a change. This view is confirmed by the election that came off there last November. These republican Senators and republican politicians throughout the country have said that the last election was fraudulent because the democratic ticket carried the election, and yet that State was under the domination of this usurpation of Kellogg. The officers of this usurpation were all over the State; the Army of the United States was there all over the State; and the officers of the United States were there supervising the election. And yet the State at the late election went again overwhelmingly for the conservative party. The American people will not stand by and consent to admit that because the democratic ticket carried the election under such adverse circumstances, in the face of such influences and appliances as were used there by the Kellogg usurpation, therefore it is necessarily void. I do not believe the American people are so unwise as that; nor do I think that anybody believes any such thing.

But, sir, to get back—for this is a little digression—I want to show how certain Senators here voted, in view of what they declare now they are going to do under their obligation as Senators. Senator CARPENTER having in view the fact, as he suggested, that there was no lawful election in Louisiana in 1872 and that there was no State government there, introduced a bill into the Senate providing for a new election in the State of Louisiana under the auspices of the Federal Government. In that bill he uses this language in the first section of it:

That the election held in the State of Louisiana on the 4th day of November, 1872, for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, attorney-general, auditor of public accounts, and superintendent of education, and for senators and representatives for the General Assembly of said State, is hereby declared to be null and void; and it is further ordered and declared that the persons who were entitled to hold the said State offices on the said 4th day of November shall continue in office and be recognized as the legal officers of said State by the Government of the United States until their successors are chosen and qualified in accordance with the provisions of this act.

By that section of that bill it was declared that there was no State government in the State of Louisiana. That bill came on to be voted upon finally on the 28th of February, 1873. Upon the final vote the vote resulted as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative—

That is, in favor of passing that bill and declaring in the most solemn manner by their votes that the section which has just been read was true, were these Senators—

Messrs. Anthony—

We had the pleasure of hearing that Senator make a speech awhile ago, in which he takes back this vote, goes back upon his record, and—I say it in no offensive sense, stultifies himself—

Messrs. Anthony, Carpenter, Corbett, Cragin, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuyzen, Gilbert, Hamlin, Howe—

We had the misfortune to hear that gentleman go back upon his record this evening—

Logan, Machen, Osborne, Ramsey, Sawyer, Sherman—

That Senator also went back upon his record the other day—

Sprague, Stewart, and Wilson.

Now, notwithstanding the report of that committee that Kellogg was a usurper, that the Kellogg legislature was a usurpation; notwithstanding the committee so ascertained and reported; notwithstanding this bill that I have just read a section of declares that there was no State government there; notwithstanding the solemn vote thus sanctioning these declarations, these Senators have stood up in the face of the country and declared to the American people that they are going to vote to admit a man sent here to be a Senator who purports to have been elected by that Kellogg legislature—that Kellogg usurpation. I ask the American people what they think of Senators who will thus stultify themselves?

But, sir, they did not do it once only. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] was so impressed with his duty in that respect, was so impressed with the obligation of this Government to do something for the relief of Louisiana, that at the last session of the present Congress he introduced another bill which underwent discussion here for many days. In the preamble to that bill he uses these words:

Whereas there is no governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, attorney-general, auditor of public accounts, or superintendent of education in the State of Louisiana, holding said offices, respectively, under an election by the legal voters of the State of Louisiana, in pursuance of the constitution and laws of said State; and whereas there is not in said State any Legislature elected by the legal voters of said State, according to the constitution and laws thereof.

That bill came on to be considered at sundry times up to April 28, 1874. It was ably discussed at great length. Many of the Senators who now declare that they are going to vote for the admission of Mr. Pinchback as Senator then declared their purpose to support this bill, and did support it. It never came to a final vote, but there was a vote which indicated the feeling of Senators in the Senate on this subject. On one occasion the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] moved to postpone the bill the preamble of which I have just read; and upon the vote to displace the bill and take up another for consideration those who voted in the negative were—

Messrs. Anthony—

That Senator has suddenly and strangely changed his judgment—

Bayard, Boggy, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Howe, Jones, Kelly, McCreery, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, and Thurman.

Now, Mr. President, I ask the American people in all seriousness what they think of Senators acting upon the fact which was ascertained that McEnery and the McEnery legislature were duly elected; acting upon the fact that it was so ascertained by the authorities of that State; acting upon the report made by the Senate committee, to which I have adverted at much length; acting upon the solemn vote they gave declared that there was no government in the State of Louisiana, and therefore that this Kellogg government was no government? I put it to them to say what judgment they will pass upon these Senators who now stand up and say that they are willing to admit into this body upon a so-called prima facie case a person who purports to have been elected by that Kellogg usurpation. I cannot imagine any judgment that they will pass upon these Senators except one of condemnation.

But, Mr. President, I contend that these Senators now are not only going in the face of their past record; they are not only going in the face of their solemn judgment thus expressed; but they are doing, if possible, worse than that. They are acting in utter defiance of public sentiment in the United States. Why do I say so? This is not mere empty declamation on my part; I am asserting a solemn fact, one striking in its character, one that cannot be escaped or evaded. The present Congress is overwhelmingly republican in the other end of this Capitol. The republican majority in the present Congress, elected two and a half years ago, is, I believe, more than two-thirds and about the same relative proportion in this. Why, sir, at the election before the last the republican party swept the country.

Now, what were the issues before the country at the last election? The most prominent issue before the country, if one can be called more prominent than another, was this very Louisiana usurpation, the action of the President there in the unlawful use of the Army, the action of the Administration generally toward Louisiana and the Southern States, and the civil-rights bill, so called. These were of the leading measures that entered into the last election and upon which it turned. Whereas the republican party had before the immense majority to which I have called attention, yet at the last election the democratic party swept the country, and in the next Congress they will have an overwhelming majority, a majority of from seventy to eighty in the House of Representatives. What does that mean? That is the judgment of the American people passed upon this transaction, the severe judgment of the people expressed at the ballot-box, starting with the great State of Massachusetts. There, where a democrat was scarcely ever elected before in the history of that State, a democratic governor was elected. Go to Connecticut and it was the same way. In the great State of New York the democrats swept the State by an overwhelming majority. It was so in Pennsylvania. It was so in Ohio. It was so in Indiana. It was so in Illinois. It was so in New Jersey. It was so in Delaware. It was so almost everywhere.

But the condemnation of this policy of the Administration did not stop in the election of members of the House. Although they have a republican Legislature in the State of Michigan, the administration candidate for Senator was repudiated and a man elected who, although I believe republican in name, is fully committed against these measures of outrage and usurpation. Although the republicans had a majority in the Legislature, they could not bring or drive that majority to the administration candidate, but he was beaten and repudiated. All the influence of the Administration was brought to bear, all the influence of the candidate was brought to bear; and yet the people of Michigan rose up in that republican Legislature and condemned these practices. Go to Wisconsin; there another administration candidate, the distinguished Senator from that State not now in his seat, [Mr. CARPENTER,] was before the Legislature. He, too, was beaten before a republican Legislature. In the State of Florida, where the republicans it might be supposed would have elected a Senator, there a democratic Senator has been elected. The senatorial election is pending now in the State of Minnesota. The candidate there with the best prospect of success is a democrat, though the Legislature is republican.

I ask what the American people mean in all this if they did not thus pass judgment of condemnation on this Administration, this usurpation, this persecution of the people of the South, what did they mean by this verdict? I put it to the people to say whether the Senate is not now defying the American people in attempting to pass this resolution recognizing the Kellogg usurpation and other measures of like character? Sir, if I wanted to see their condemnation sealed forever; if I wanted above all other things to see this party swept from the face of the earth, I would say, go on, pass your acts suspending the habeas corpus, pass your civil-rights bill, and all other acts of usurpation that you can imagine or propose, and then I would await calmly and quietly the hour when this party would be swept from the face of the earth, to afflict this country no more forever.

I say, then, Mr. President, I have made true my propositions; I have shown first that the Senate has decided and that it is its duty not to admit a Senator upon claiming to be a Senator-elect upon a so-called prima facie case. In the next place, I think I have assigned the most cogent reasons why the person applying now to be admitted as a Senator from Louisiana ought not be admitted until his case is thoroughly examined, and if it is determined at all he is to come in on the solemn judgment of the Senate based upon the whole merits of his case—

Mr. GORDON, (at four o'clock and fifty-eight minutes a. m.) With the consent of the Senator from North Carolina, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. INGALLS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the call of the roll having been concluded,

Mr. GORDON. Is there a quorum voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WEST in the chair.) There is not.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the motion now.

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the announcement of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read the list.

The list of yeas and nays was read, and the result announced—yeas 2, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ferry of Michigan, and Thurman—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Wade, West, Windom, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, Tipton, and Washburn—38.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe it is in order to move to adjourn now, is it not? I make that motion.

Mr. SPENCER. I rise to a point of order. There is certainly a quorum here. Some Senators have not voted who are present.

Mr. DAVIS. I moved an adjournment, and that is not subject to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that that motion is out of order because this is a motion to adjourn and is not yet decided.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the Chair to announce that there was not a quorum. Then when there is not a quorum the only business in order, I believe, is to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote now being taken is on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the Chair to announce the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced that there was no quorum voting.

Mr. SPENCER. I rise to a point of order that there is a quorum here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the rule be read in regard to Senators voting.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I believe I am entitled to the floor. I desire to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The name of the Senator from Rhode Island will be called.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is too late to vote after the result is announced.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the rule be read in regard to Senators present voting.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has called for the reading of the rule, which will be read.

Mr. DAVIS. I had moved an adjournment previous to that, Mr. President, and I ask whether it is in order to read a rule after a motion to adjourn has been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the motion, but the Senator must be aware that it will be followed by a call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course; but can you read a rule after a motion to adjourn has been made?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the reading of the rule.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the vote to be announced, and by that announcement it appeared that there was not a quorum. Now I understand that the only business in order is to adjourn. When there is not a quorum present, that is the only business that can be transacted. Am I right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is mistaken, because there is other business, as a call of the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. A call of the Senate is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced that no quorum had voted and consequently no action could be taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the absentees be called.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I ask if anything is in order except to adjourn when a quorum is not present and a motion to adjourn has been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has already decided on the proposition of the Senator, the pending question being a motion to adjourn, the repetition of the motion is not in order. There has been no decision on the question of adjournment yet by the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood that the vote was announced. That is certain. Something has occurred since the last motion, and, as I understand the rule, the only business that can be transacted when there is less than a quorum here is to adjourn.

Mr. THURMAN. Has the vote on the motion to adjourn been announced by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced the result of the vote and at the same time stated that there was no quorum, and consequently no action.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the only motion in order is to move a call of the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. I move a call of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. Then there are only two motions that are in order; one is for a call of the Senate, the other is to adjourn. The question is which has precedence. There can be only one of these two motions at a time, for a call of the Senate or to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. A motion to adjourn is not in order after another motion to adjourn unless other business has intervened.

Mr. THURMAN. That is very true where there is a quorum present; but where there is no quorum present, only two motions can be made, one for a call of the Senate and the other is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I asked for a call of the Senate and stated that there were Senators present who had not voted and who would make a quorum.

Mr. THURMAN. That is true; but it was not until after the Senator from West Virginia had moved to adjourn. I understood the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to be made first. If that is so, that motion is certainly in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that the motion to adjourn was lost; but there was no quorum on the vote. I suppose it is competent for the Chair to ascertain if there be a quorum present now.

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly it is.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Chair is satisfied by count that there is a quorum present, we can proceed with business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the reading of the rule to which I referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read Rule 16.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

16. When the yeas and nays shall be called for by one-fifth of the Senators present, each Senator called upon shall, unless for special reasons he be excused by the Senate, declare openly and without debate his assent or dissent to the question. In taking the yeas and nays, and upon a call of the Senate, the names of the Senators shall be called alphabetically.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now demand that the names of those present who have not voted be called and that they give their reasons for being excused according to the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan demands compliance with the sixteenth rule, just read by the Clerk, on the part of those Senators who are present and have not voted on the call of the yeas and nays. The Secretary will call on the roll the names of such Senators who are recognized as present and who have not voted.

Several SENATORS. O, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Chief Clerk that it is not in order to supplement the vote as announced by calling the names of any other Senators at present. The only motion now, the Chair is informed, is a motion for a call of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move a call of the Senate then.

Mr. SPENCER. I made that motion some time ago.

Mr. MERRIMON. That motion is certainly after the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to notify the absent members to attend.

Mr. THURMAN. That raises the question, which has precedence. A motion to adjourn is made. It is voted down. If there be a quorum voting, it is certainly true, as was said by my colleague, that no other motion to adjourn can be made until business has intervened. But if no quorum be present, no business can intervene, because less than a quorum can transact no business; and therefore a motion to adjourn after a motion to adjourn has been voted down by less than a quorum must necessarily be in order, and the only question is—

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the Senator to order. No debate is in order at this stage of proceedings. I call the Senator to order.

Mr. THURMAN. It will require a good deal more distinct statement of the point of order than that, to enable me to comprehend it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Chair to decide. I call the Senator to order and ask the Chair to decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Michigan's point is not properly taken.

Mr. THURMAN. When there is less than a quorum present, the only motions that are in order are for a call of the Senate and to adjourn. Those are the only motions I am aware of that are in order—either a motion to adjourn, or a motion for a call of the Senate. I do not know that this is settled by any rule of the Senate; but I suppose a motion to adjourn or the motion first made is to be first put, and the motion first made was that of the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the presence of absentees.

Mr. STOCKTON. I raise the point of order that the question is not on the motion of the Senator from Michigan. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] moved that the Senate adjourn. A motion had been made before, that the Senate adjourn; and the result was that the Chair announced that there was no quorum. The consequence is that the Senate must adjourn or do no business. There being no quorum, no business can be done except that less than a quorum is authorized to do. The next motion made was made by the Senator from West Virginia that the Senate adjourn. They were capable of doing that and of doing nothing else. The Chair did not hear that motion, but heard the motion of the Senator from Michigan or the Senator from Alabama. I insist upon it that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to adjourn was a motion that the Chair had a right to hear, and no other motion had he a right to hear but that motion which was a motion to adjourn and which has never yet been put.

Now, Mr. President, recollect and Senators recollect that when there was no quorum there was no vote; there was no action on the motion to adjourn because the decision of the Chair was that there was no quorum voting. It is said there is a quorum here. Republican Senators have been out taking their ease through the hours of this night and they come in here now and make a quorum. They have been luxuriating in their cloak-rooms while we have been sitting here working, and they have come in and now make probably a quorum. I admit that probably there is a quorum now, and I am very glad there is. I always want a quorum. When the motion is made by the Senator from West Virginia, the only motion that can be entertained, that the Senate adjourn, we have a right to have that question put. I do not wish to embarrass business for a moment; but I do insist that that motion to adjourn made by the Senator from West Virginia should be put to the Senate and it will be a very singular precedent if any other motion should be put under the circumstances.

The prior motion failed for want of a quorum. Now, Mr. President, what will you do for want of a quorum? What does that mean? It means that the Senate is not here. That is what it means. The want of a quorum shows that the Senate is not here. Will you do business in its absence? Is that business legal? Suppose you tried to pass a bill under such circumstances, would that be a legal bill, when it is announced by your own vote that there is no quorum here? Certainly not, and the only motion that could be made was a motion to adjourn. It is perfectly plain now that there is a quorum of the Senate present, and it is perfectly plain that a motion to adjourn will not prevail; but although the skies fall, let us keep order. Let the motion of the Senator from West Virginia be put, which is the first motion in order, that we adjourn. I presume that motion will not prevail; but no matter what time of the night or of the morning it may be, it certainly is right that we should preserve the rules of the Senate; and certainly no man can doubt that that motion was the only motion which could be made under the circumstances. A motion for a call of the House might have been made possibly even at that time, but that motion was subsequent to it; it followed it. The first motion was, as the Chair must know, as every gentleman on this side of the House knows, was made by the Senator from West Virginia; it was a motion to adjourn, following a motion to adjourn which was declared by the Chair not to be decided upon at all because there was no quorum present. The motion to adjourn, the first motion made, has had no action upon it at all. Let us vote first on the proposition to adjourn. That being voted upon, I have no doubt the gentlemen on the other side will vote it down, and then the next motion may be to call the absentees if you find you have not a quorum. But do let us preserve order, Mr. President. If gentlemen on the other side will keep us up all night, if they will go off and go to their quiet beds and take their delicate sleep, and send their guards here simply to keep us awake all night, the least they can do is, when motions are made and they come rushing in from their delicious couches, not to object to our having the rules of order preserved in this body. We simply ask that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia that the Senate adjourn be put. They can vote it down as soon as they please, but let us have the rules obeyed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state his understanding of the case, and he will also set the Senator from New Jersey right with respect to his entertainment of the motion of the Senator from West Virginia. The Chair did hear the motion of the Senator from West Virginia and overruled it upon the ground of the uniform practice of the Senate that a motion to adjourn cannot be repeated until some business has intervened. On that ground the Chair decided the motion of the Senator from West Virginia out of order, and entertained the motion of the Senator from Michigan, which was for a call of the Senate. That has been the uniform practice, and the Chair will so rule until otherwise directed by the Senate.

Mr. STOCKTON. I wish to make my point as gently as I can; but my point is that when a motion to adjourn is made, and the Chair decides that there is no quorum voting, there is no decision on that motion; the Senate does not decide it, there is no quorum voting upon it, and the motion can be repeated instantly, and there is no rule of any parliamentary body that can prevent it. When, sir, you find that there is no quorum in this body, you have no Senate to preside over, you can make no decision. You made no decision in this case; you can make no decision. Your only decision was that there was no Senate here. We had then one of two things to do: to declare the Senate dissolved, to declare the Senate adjourned, or to call for the absentees, or to adopt another motion, and have the same vote put over again. You have no other power in your hands. The first motion made was by the Senator from West Virginia, which was to adjourn, but the absentees were coming in, and you saw the House was full and we had a quorum—

Mr. STEWART. I rise to a point of order. It is that the point of order is not debatable. The Senator from New Jersey is out of order in debating a point of order. There is no appeal from the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is no motion before the body except the motion for a call of the Senate, and the Chair is informed that that is debatable.

Mr. THURMAN. I confess my surprise at the announcement of the Chair that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia was ruled by the Chair to be out of order. I never heard of such a ruling, and I venture to say that no Senator on this floor ever heard of such a ruling. If it had been ruled, I should have appealed, if nobody else had appealed, from a ruling so extraordinary.

Mr. President, if you now decide that motion of the Senator from West Virginia was out of order, then I ask to appeal from that ruling. No Senator has heard any such ruling—not one. No Senator has heard a ruling that when there is less than a quorum in this Senate it is necessary for business (which cannot be transacted without a quorum) to intervene before there is another motion to adjourn. No Senator ever heard such a ruling in this Chamber.

Mr. President, if you ruled that, I ask you to rule it now, and I ask you to entertain my appeal from that ruling.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I was taken off the floor by the Senator from Nevada saying that he rose to a point of order. He made no point of order. He sat right down, and the Senator from Ohio got up, and I am very much indebted to him, for he made my little point of order much better, as he always can, than I did myself. I ask the Senator from Nevada to make his point of order.

Mr. STEWART. I will do it most distinctly. It is that the Senator from New Jersey is out of order, debating a question of order decided by the Chair when there has been no appeal.

Mr. STOCKTON. I ask the Senator from Nevada to reduce his point of order to writing. I wish to have that point on record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the Senator to order.

Mr. STOCKTON. Which Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And will entertain the appeal of the Senator from Ohio, which will be a great relief to the Chair. The Chair finds himself in a somewhat novel position, and he will state the case as he understands it.

A motion was made to adjourn, and pending a decision on that question, in consequence of no quorum being present, the Chair felt incompetent to entertain another motion to adjourn; and from that decision the Senator from Ohio appeals.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, Mr. President, I crave that this question may be fairly put. I have not wasted one minute this night by any remarks or by any dilatory motion. I have been ready to meet the question that is before the Senate at any time. I have been ready to vote upon it at any moment that I have been in the Senate to-night. I am not responsible myself for any delay.

But now what is the question before the Senate? It is a matter that concerns us all. A motion to adjourn was made. The vote was taken by yeas and nays. The Chair announced the result. There were but two for adjournment; I was one of them, and there was a majority against adjournment, but taking them together there was no quorum present. Thereupon the first business that occurred, the first motion that was made, was the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to adjourn. After that motion had been made the Senator from Michigan asked for the reading of a rule, that rule which requires Senators present to vote. Then the Senator from Alabama asked for a call of the Senate.

Now the question is, and the sole question before the Senate is, whether the motion of the Senator from West Virginia was in order. It would not be in order if a quorum of the Senate was present, because business must intervene between one motion to adjourn and another motion to adjourn when there is a quorum present.

But when there is no quorum present, all the Senate can do is either to adjourn or to require the attendance of absentees, and the question now before the Senate is, which of those motions has precedence? I do not know which has precedence. I appeal to the elder members of the Senate to say which has precedence. That is the sole question. The question is simply, when there is no quorum here and when no business can intervene between one motion to adjourn and another, whether a motion to adjourn or a motion to require the attendance of absentees has precedence. Upon that question I defer to the elder members of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. As I understand it, I think the ruling of the Chair has been perfectly correct. A motion was made to adjourn, and it is competent for less than a quorum to adjourn or to refuse to adjourn. Before any business had intervened, another motion was made to adjourn. I do not think that one motion to adjourn after another, no business intervening, is in order. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] moved that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators. While that motion was pending, if the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] had moved to adjourn, he would doubtless have been in order, but the Senator from West Virginia moved to adjourn before the motion of the Senator from Michigan to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators was before the Senate. Therefore the motion of the Senator from Michigan was in order and the motion of the Senator from West Virginia was not, although it would be in order now.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg to correct the Senator from Rhode Island. The Senator from Michigan made no such motion. He simply asked for the reading of a rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He made it later than that.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPENCER] made the motion several times.

Mr. GORDON. I only want to say one word, for I confess my ignorance of the rules of the Senate; but it occurs to me that upon the ruling by the Chair and the position taken by the Senator from Rhode Island we might be detained in the Senate forever. Suppose no Senator had proposed the reading of any rule, we could not transact any business legal to the body where a quorum is present. Suppose no Senator had asked for the reading of the rule or had made a call, were we to sit here forever and not be allowed to renew a motion to adjourn? I think that this suggestion clearly shows that the position of the Senator from Rhode Island is not in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERIMON] is weary, and I suppose he does not want to speak just now, and perhaps this point has been raised for the purpose of giving him a little rest. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a remark made a moment ago by the Chair in response to the Clerk, that a member being present and not voting could not be arraigned for it without a quorum. I think that is technically true; but I call the attention of the Senate in a very friendly way to this, that Senators being present and refusing to vote, if their conduct thus prevents a quorum, it is a very high violation of the rules of the Senate and a very unreasonable one. I have never seen it done where a Senator has been pointed out—

Mr. THURMAN. We do not hear the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say I wish to call the attention of the Senate, without any feeling about it, that where Senators remain in their seats and refuse to vote when their names are called, it is specifically in violation of one of the rules of the Senate. Although no doubt the Clerk is right in stating that we cannot proceed in the absence of a quorum to pass the judgment of the Senate upon that act, yet it is an act that I never have seen done before and I hope it will not be repeated. The rule is imperative on a Senator when his name is called if he is in the Chamber. He can step out of the Chamber if he chooses and nobody will disturb him except the Sergeant-at-Arms be sent to request him to come in; but if he is present in his seat, he must vote. The violation of that rule is a serious matter, especially if the violation of the rule thus prevents a quorum. I do not make my remarks to the present case, because I do not know that any such Senator was present. I was absent myself at the roll-call. But the sixteenth rule of the Senate requires a Senator to vote when present, unless he is excused. He can, if he chooses to go out of the Chamber, stand among other absentees, but when present in his seat he must respond to his name and the Senate has the power to enforce its rules. The rule itself requires that, and as a matter of course it can be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. Even less than a quorum.

Mr. SHERMAN. Even less than a quorum. Less than a quorum,

I suppose, cannot call upon a Senator to give his reasons for not voting, but undoubtedly that fact would be shown upon the record. Any Senator might be called to account to show that he was not absent at such a time when his name was called, and he might be arraigned for even this violation of the rule.

In regard to the other point made by my colleague in regard to the order of business, I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that where the Senate appears without a quorum, by common consent usually a motion to adjourn follows a motion to adjourn, but if the point is made the parliamentary rule undoubtedly prevails and the same motion cannot be repeated. Otherwise there would be an end to all business. That applies as well to a body with a quorum as without a quorum. When the Senate is without a quorum, while it cannot pass a bill or resolution, while it can do nothing of a legislative character, it has power given to it by the Constitution of the United States to compel the attendance of absentees. Therefore it has the power to do business, but no other business except to compel the attendance of absentees. The uniform rule is when the Senate appears without a quorum, either to adjourn by common consent or to move, in the language of the rule, to send for absentees. The Constitution itself gives the power. It is doubtless familiar to all Senators, but I will read the rule of the Senate which authorizes the Senate to compel the attendance of absentees:

8. No Senator shall absent himself from the service of the Senate, without leave of the Senate first obtained. And in case a less number than a quorum of the Senate shall convene, they are hereby authorized to send the Sergeant-at-Arms, or any other person or persons by them authorized, for any or all absent Senators, as the majority of such Senators present shall agree, at the expense of such absent Senators, respectively, unless such excuse for non-attendance shall be made as the Senate, when a quorum is convened, shall judge sufficient, and in that case the expense shall be paid out of the contingent fund. And this rule shall apply as well to the first convention of the Senate, at the legal time of meeting, as to each day of the session, after the hour has arrived to which the Senate stood adjourned.

The only business we can do in the condition we are in now, is to proceed, under this rule, to send for the absentees; but if there are Senators present who were here when their names were called and did not answer, I respectfully appeal to them that we are bound to observe the rules of the Senate. We must do it. We cannot avoid it without violating our duty as Senators. I hope if there has been any such case, that every Senator will respond to his name. The motion to adjourn is now in order, and perhaps it will be the better way to make it.

Mr. CHANDLER. We can have the yeas and nays on this motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Make a motion to call the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. To avoid controversy, new business having intervened, I will move to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is an appeal pending. To find out whether there is a quorum here or not, let us take a vote on that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care how it is. I am opposed to adjourning, and therefore I will not vote for the motion, but it seems to me when a motion is made Senators ought to respond to their names if present, because otherwise it might disturb the harmony of the Senate. One of the most fatal examples might occur if a Senator can stay in his seat and refuse to vote and violate a rule and that should be passed over without objection or complaint. There is then an end of the power of the Senate to compel a vote, because at almost any hour of the day, at any moment of the day, especially if the Senate should be evenly or nearly evenly divided, the minority might prevent a vote. Therefore this rule is imperative and important, and it ought not to be violated.

Mr. ANTHONY. In order to stop this debate and to test the presence of a quorum, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn, and upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will, if the Senator will renew it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This motion is just as debatable as the other.

Mr. THURMAN. I will renew the motion if the Senator will withdraw it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, my colleague is quite right in saying that the rule requires every Senator to vote; and yet there are certain considerations that might justify a Senator in not voting. No Senator can vote upon any question in which he is personally interested, and it may be that a Senator may fairly be unable to decide at the moment whether he ought to vote or not in view of that rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On a question of adjournment?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir; on a question of adjournment, because a question of adjournment may determine the fate of a measure.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me? I would like to ask him if he were interested in any question and therefore should be required to vote, if he would not be violating strictly the rule which says he shall not vote in that case?

Mr. THURMAN. He may decline to vote.

Mr. SARGENT. But if asked to vote he would have to give that as a reason.

Mr. THURMAN. If he is interested in a question he may decline to vote, and he may be uncertain whether he is interested or not. That may be a matter for reflection. Upon every question that comes before the Senate every member of the Senate is interested in one sense. The distinction is between that general interest which all the people of the Republic have and the special interest which a Senator or a member of the House of Representatives may have in a pending question, and it is a very delicate question indeed. Therefore a Senator or a member of the House may well hesitate whether he shall vote or not, either upon the direct question upon the bill or upon any dilatory motion that may affect its passage.

But, Mr. President, there are other considerations besides the personal interest of a Senator. I beg leave here to recall what happened once in this Senate. When I entered the Senate there were but eight members of the democratic party here and there were sixty-odd supporters of the administration. Night after night those eight members attending in their places made the necessary quorum to transact business; and without the attendance of the whole eight there would have been no quorum. It so happened that on one night when they were here and when twenty-odd republican Senators were absent from their seats the late Senator from California [Mr. Casserly] and myself refused to vote. We were tired of making a quorum while the majority of the republican Senators were in their beds, and we refused to vote. The Senator from New York nearest me [Mr. CONKLING] called attention to the fact—naming us by our names—and the Senate refused to make us vote. Now, with twenty democrats on this floor and three or four independent members of the Senate, and with the whole body of the Senate besides these twenty-three or twenty-four, we are here agitating the question what shall be done for want of a quorum? Whose fault is it that there is no quorum to-night? The peace of the country, the peace of a sovereign State, are concerned in what we shall do to-night; and with fifty republican Senators in this body we are agitating the question what we shall do for want of a quorum? Ah! Mr. President, this is an odd spectacle for the American people to behold. If what has been said in this Chamber within the last two months be true, if Louisiana is a Golgotha, if the southern country is nothing but a scene of murder and assassination, why is it that the republican Senators are out of their seats to-night? Why is it that when the great question what is the regular and legal government in the State of Louisiana—for that is the question involved in the resolution now before the Senate—is before the Senate fifty republican Senators in this Chamber find themselves without a quorum? I want to know how that is; I want the American people to know why that is.

Mr. President, this is a very remarkable question that is now before us. It is a question whether or not we shall proceed to-night in this business. I appeal to the Senate to bear me witness that I have wasted no time. I am ready now, and have been ever since we met, to vote on this question. I have no speech to make upon it. I have already said what I want to say, and although I have heard special pleading here, that, if it had been made before me when I was the chief justice of my State, would have met with a merited rebuke, I am willing to pass it by in silence and take the vote. Now, Mr. President, in accordance with my promise to the Senator from Rhode Island, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for a moment. I wish to make a remark.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.

Mr. SARGENT. On the roll-call which we have just had there was but one democratic Senator present, and that was the Senator from Ohio. I ask him why it is, if, as has been asserted upon this floor hour after hour and day after day during the past weary weeks, Louisiana was being stabbed at the heart, if democrats believe the assertions which they have made on this floor that a man is to be illegally foisted in here, why is it that the democrats are not here to resist an act of that kind? I want the country to understand that.

Mr. BAYARD. They are here.

Mr. SARGENT. The roll-call says they are not here. That says there is no quorum here present; that here with great public business being transacted there is no quorum present, and Senators rise in their seats and call the attention of the country to the fact that there is no quorum present and that republicans are not here when this important business is being transacted. Now, appealing to the roll-call and to the country, I call attention to the fact that the democrats do not believe their assertions, they do not believe a great wrong is to be committed by the admission of this man or they would be here answering the roll-call.

Only one democrat voted on the last roll-call; only one democrat is present in this Chamber by the official roll-call; but I ask what the appeal of the Senator from Ohio is worth or what the reply is worth? Simply nothing. The roll-call showed the presence of thirty-six Senators on this floor. All but one of these were republicans. Almost immediately other democratic Senators rose up in their seats who had not voted at all, who claimed that there was no quorum present. The vote of a single one of them would have shown the presence of a quorum. A Senator rose and insisted because there was no quorum present that another motion to adjourn was in order, and he made that motion when he himself by simply voting, as he had refused to do, would by that very fact have developed the presence of a quorum.

Now, Mr. President, in the same spirit I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. EATON. I should like to say a word.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. EATON. Although, Mr. President, a new member of this body, and not disposed to take any participation in the discussion of this question, it is as important to me that the rulings of the Chair should be right as it is to any other member of the Senate. With some little experience in other deliberative bodies, I beg to state what, from the slight examination I have made, I think is the rule of the Senate, and what, in my judgment, the rule ought to be, and how I shall govern myself both now and hereafter.

By general parliamentary law everywhere, in England and America, where there is no quorum the body is adjourned until its next hour of meeting. By your rule here, in my judgment if the yeas and nays are called and there is not a quorum, the first motion to be made after that fact appears is not another motion to adjourn. I agree with gentlemen who have spoken upon the other side that that motion would be improper, but the proper motion would be for a call of the Senate. If a majority refuse to order a call of the Senate, then the Senate ought to stand adjourned, notwithstanding there is a rule that the Senate shall be called. It is important to us all, not this morning, but every other morning, that we should agree with regard to the proper administration of the parliamentary law and the rules, and I shall not be found to disagree with gentlemen on the other side I presume upon such administration.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the fact that the Presiding Officer ruled the motion of the Senator from West Virginia out of order.

Mr. THURMAN. No; he did not. I deny it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is certainly mistaken. The Chair called the Senator from West Virginia to order, and overruled his motion to adjourn.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I think, then, notwithstanding the remark of the Senator from Ohio, that my assertion is vindicated by the Chair, that the Chair ruled the motion of the Senator from West Virginia out of order on the basis of its being a repetition without intervening business. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] asked that the rule be read, and followed that by moving that the Sergeant-at-Arms be dispatched for absentees.

Mr. THURMAN. No; he did not.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I will ask whether I am correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such was the Chair's understanding of the motion of the Senator from Michigan. He first called for the rule to be read and then demanded a call of the Senate.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. The second time I am vindicated by the Chair, notwithstanding the remark of the Senator from Ohio that that is not the fact. I might recur to another fact, that the Senator from Alabama moved at an early stage of these proceedings that the Sergeant-at-Arms be dispatched for absentees and while he was attempting to secure that the Senator from West Virginia moved that the Senate adjourn. The Chair, as I said before, stated that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia was out of order. The motion of the Senator from Michigan was clearly in order in my judgment. When that was made, business had intervened, and a motion to adjourn was then in order. I refer to this only to remind the Senator from Connecticut of the fact that that motion was made and to fortify what he has said, for it concurs with my view of the question, that then it was in order to move an adjournment, for there can be but two motions made when by any process the fact is revealed that there is not a quorum in the Senate, and those two motions are to adjourn and to send for the absentees. But the fact appeared that the prior motion was to adjourn, and therefore upon the principle of repetition without intervening business, the Chair could not entertain the motion to adjourn, and the only remaining motion was to send for the absentees. When that was done, intervening business having taken place, the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, had he repeated it, would have been in order; but as I understand it there has been no motion to adjourn since the intervening business suggested by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I have been here the whole night long and up to this time voting whenever I heard there was a vote going on, and I think the majority of the democrats have been with me in that. As I said before, when the Senate was absolutely empty and we thought nothing was going on we were not actually present in this body but within reach always ready to vote. I have been certainly so myself. I answer that to the gentleman on the other side who made a remark which rather reflected on us. So far as I have been concerned, I have been here always ready to vote whenever I was called upon.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow me, I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the Chair has decided. There being if I am correct 36 votes cast lacking one of a quorum, the Chair decided there was no quorum. Am I correct in that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes sir.

Mr. SPENCER. Subsequent proceedings show that there is a quorum present. Several gentlemen have addressed the Chair, been recognized, and have spoken, who were not present at the time of the roll-call.

Mr. BAYARD. But others may have gone out who were in then.

Mr. SPENCER. Clearly there must be a quorum present.

Mr. STOCKTON. I think the Senator from Alabama does not understand the purpose of my remarks or he would not interrupt me.

Mr. SPENCER. I only rose to a point of order to suggest that there was a quorum present, and that the Chair was wrong in stating there was not.

Mr. STOCKTON. I think if the Senator will listen to me for a minute he will not make the point of order.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from New Jersey had voted instead of talking, there would be a quorum. Is he here or not?

Mr. STOCKTON. I am here.

Mr. SPENCER. Then I insist there is a quorum.

Mr. STOCKTON. I knew a half-witted fellow once who lived in my town who went into an ale shop and began drinking ale out of a barrel. He was taking it up when the keeper of the shop came in and said, "Why Joe, what are you doing drawing my ale?" Said he, "You lie, I ain't here; it ain't me." [Laughter.] If the Senator expected me to say that, he is mistaken. I am here. It is I.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will address the Chair.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator is here I insist that there is a quorum present.

Mr. STOCKTON. The Senator from Alabama certainly did not understand the object for which I rose, or he would not, I think, have interrupted me. I rose simply to state this point. The question now before the Senate, as I understand it, is simply whether we can now take this vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is mistaken. The Chair will state the business now before the Senate. It is on the appeal of the Senator from Ohio from the decision of the Chair ruling the motion of the Senator from West Virginia out of order; and consequently debate is in order on that appeal. If it were a motion to adjourn no debate would be in order.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I desire to put a question to the Chair. Is this question debatable? The question is upon adjournment, which is an undebatable question, and an appeal upon that question cannot be debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of the Senator from Michigan is correctly taken. The question of adjournment being an undebatable one, the appeal must be decided without debate. The Chair will again put the question to the Senate. The Chair having decided that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia was out of order in consequence of its being a repetition of a motion to adjourn without an intervening motion and the only one that could be made for a call of the Senate, the question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not want to debate it. I move that the Senate do now adjourn, (at six o'clock a. m.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is now in order. It is moved that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SARGENT, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY], who if present would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, (after having first voted in the affirmative.) There being a quorum, I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] If present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on the question of adjournment; but to secure a quorum I would vote, as he would, as I have done during the evening.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Hager, Johnston, Merriam, Norwood, Saulsbury, Stockton, and Thurman—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Craig, Dorsey, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bogy, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Dennis, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Sprague, Stevenson, Tipton, and Washburn—30.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. The pending question is the appeal of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw the appeal?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; I want to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable, the Chair will inform the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent. Statements have been made here that I wish to reply to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I object.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I withdraw the appeal and ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield me a moment.

Mr. MERRIMON. I yield, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] made certain statements and claimed that he was sustained by the Chair in his narration of those statements, in contradiction to statements that I had made. Now, Mr. President, I wish to state precisely the facts as I understood them to occur, and which I believe every member of this Senate knows did occur. A motion to adjourn was made. The vote was taken by yeas and nays. There was no quorum voting. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] then moved to adjourn. The Chair did not then rule that that motion was out of order. Before that motion was decided the Senator from Michigan farthest from me [Mr. CHANDLER] asked that the rule be read which requires Senators to vote; and before any ruling had been made by the Chair the Chair said that the rule should be read. There was no—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator allow the Chair to remind him of one thing: that the Senator from West Virginia repeated on three several occasions his motion to adjourn and the Senator from Ohio did not notice that on the first occasion the Chair had ruled the motion out of order. His attention was called to the subsequent motions, which the Chair refused to entertain.

Mr. THURMAN. I must say, sir, that I never heard such a ruling. Then, further, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] said that his colleague moved for a call of the Senate and that the Sergeant-at-Arms be sent for the absentees. No such motion was made by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER.] The Senator from Michigan simply called for the reading of the rule which required Senators to vote; that was all. Then afterward, when the Chair announced that in its opinion the motion of the Senator from West Virginia was out of order, and after debate as to whether it was out of order, there being no quorum present, for the reason that no business had intervened, then I asked the Chair to make that ruling again. Then I appealed from it. I am certain, sir, as I am of my existence that no one here heard any ruling by the Chair when the motion was first made that that motion was out of order.

Mr. EATON. Will my friend from Ohio permit me a word?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. My friend from Ohio did not hear it. The Senator from West Virginia made his motion to adjourn and the Chair ruled it out of order.

Mr. THURMAN. When it was first made?

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir. I heard it and the Senator from West Virginia heard it. The Senator from Ohio did not hear it.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I am corrected about that. I certainly heard no such thing. If I had, I should have appealed from it at the moment it was made, for I never should have submitted to a ruling that business must intervene by less than a quorum, before another motion could be made to adjourn. But certainly in respect to what was said by the senior Senator from Michigan, all he asked was that the rule might be read. He moved for no call of the Senate, he moved for no sending of the Sergeant-at-Arms for absentees.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Inasmuch as the Senator from Connecticut has very kindly sustained me in the view that I presented as regards the Senator from West Virginia, my colleague has just entered the Chamber and I now appeal to him to know whether or not when he asked to have the rule read he followed it by asking that the Sergeant-at-Arms be dispatched for the absentees.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. That vindicates the Chair, myself, and the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I think the Senate will agree that the Senator from Michigan farthest from me [Mr. CHANDLER] did ask for the reading of the rule, and some minutes afterward, after some words had taken place, he then followed it by a motion to send for the absentees, but not at the time. I think all will agree to that.

Mr. SPENCER. I asked for a call of the Senate several times.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I do not wish to prolong the matter but only to place it right. The Senator from Ohio and I desire nothing between us on this matter but what is correct. The Senator from West Virginia is right in what he has just stated, but the Senator from Michigan, my colleague, held the floor. I think I am correct in that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think so.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I think there is no doubt on this question.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I was a very cool observer—

Mr. SPENCER. I am sorry—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think I have been a very cool observer of the debate which has transpired touching these questions of order, and I remember very distinctly what the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] said and did. At first, he called for the reading of the rule; afterward, he did not move to send for absentees, but he insisted that those who were present and did not answer, should be called and give their excuses; and he insisted that those present who had not answered should be called, but he did not move to send for absentees.

Mr. President, before I proceed with my remarks, which were suspended by reason of the interruption of the motion to adjourn, I will remark, that something has been said about the readiness and anxiety of many Senators to take the vote on the resolution now before the Senate; and in rather a complaining tone, it has been suggested that some Senators were protracting the debate unnecessarily. I beg to say that I think that is uncharitable toward myself and other Senators, particularly from the South. But one democratic Senator from the South has been heard in this debate. I said some days ago that I thought all the Senators from the South who desired to speak ought to be heard. They come from that section most seriously affected by the suggested offensive legislation. They are more familiar with the facts, they are more familiar with those circumstances with which the country ought to be acquainted than anybody else, and for the reason that they live among those people. It is but just to the Senate and it is but just to the country and particularly to the people whom they represent that their representatives here should be heard; and so far as I am concerned, if I am entitled to be heard under the rules of the Senate and the Constitution and laws of this country, I insist that I shall be heard.

Mr. President, to-day the American people behold a strange and an alarming spectacle. In a time of profound peace a State of the Union is literally stricken down by the hand of treachery and violence. Anarchy prevails throughout all her borders, and the condition of the people is intolerable and deplorable to the last degree. This state of disorder has lasted for a long while, and yet no step has been taken to redress the wrong or restore the right. Poor Louisiana is prostrate, lingering, bleeding, dying, and none go to her relief!

A scene scarcely less striking and significant is presented in the Senate. Here are the majority, a great and controlling majority, who represent a political party whose boast to the world is that it saved the life of the Union, and which claims the ability to remedy all the political ills that afflict the country. This debate has lasted a month; the leaders and great men of this party have joined largely in it; its ablest defenders have made the best apology in their power for the many grave charges brought against it; they admit the evils which are patent to everybody; and yet, no one of them has brought forward any measure of relief; indeed, no one has even suggested a remedy. A stronger illustration of lack of statesmanship and power to remedy acknowledged evils of the most serious moment, can hardly be found. Well may the patriotic citizen say, "False and faithless party, thou has been weighed in the balance and found wanting; be thou cast down and cast out, and let another take thy place!" The essential good of the Republic demands, nay, requires a salutary change of administration. This is the chief public want at this time. So I think and believe, and I trust the people of the Union will so decide, when they shall again have opportunity to pass judgment on the conduct of those who serve them in public capacities.

Mr. President, it may be stated as a general truth, that the masses of the people never complain of misrule without a reasonable cause for such complaint. They are interested in having stable, wholesome, just government, honestly and faithfully administered; and when they have this, they are quiet, prosperous, and happy. The people are never agitators without a cause. Both reason and experience attest the truth of these declarations.

That the people of the South of every class and condition have complained for years past of misrule; that the grounds of their complaints have been of the most grievous character—too grievous to be borne in patience—cannot be denied by any candid person acquainted with the facts and the history of that section of the Union for the last ten years. That their wrongs for the most part and in most material respects, have gone and still continue to go unredressed is painfully true. They have repeatedly and constantly appealed in vain to the Federal and local authorities for relief. Their appeals have been slighted and rejected, and insult and outrage have been added to injury. Their importunities have been laughed at and their calamities mocked at, until in many sections they are hopeless and desperate, and court any fate other than that to which they are abandoned.

Those whose duty it has been by every obligation of the Constitution and laws, by every consideration of right, justice, patriotism, and sound policy, to grant relief and re-establish the Union in law, and as well in the hearts of that people, have made their calamities and wrongs the foot-ball of political parties, and have used the same to subserve the base ends of party and faction. That people have not only been thus injured, but men in high official station and the leaders of a great political party, in abuse of the freedom of speech, have falsely and cruelly denounced them as semi-barbarous, given to crime, and not fit to enjoy the blessings of free government. These puissant gentlemen, forgetful of their high duties, instead of consulting true statesmanship, have turned loose the violent passions of their natures and poured out their wrath upon their downtrodden and helpless countrymen. Even they cannot long enjoy pleasure in so empty a triumph. Humanity turns from them in disgust!

Under such circumstances, how natural that the people of the South should be indignant and restive, however helpless! How unnatural that they should love and respect the hand and the party that thus smites, insults, and injures them! They no longer hope for redress of their wrongs from those in official place and power. The republican party has failed, miserably failed, to bring peace, prosperity, and a restored Union to the American people; but, on the contrary, it has sown the seeds of discord, and brought untold woes and sufferings to the people of the South. Though it has borne absolute sway continuously for fourteen years, its statesmanship has proven a failure. It has ignored and subverted the Constitution, and substituted for that sacred instrument, as the basis of its revolutionary action, "the higher law." With this limitless chart, it has gone wherever interest or ambition led it. The only limit to its action, when determined upon, is the measure of its physical power. Its essential power has been and is armed force; it has accomplished all its ends by revolutionary means and war; it knows no policy of peace, and hence, now that the war is over and peace has indeed dawned upon the country, its policy has not changed. It takes no note of this important fact; it still relies everywhere mainly on the Army to execute its will.

The southern people no longer confide in the republican party; they do not hope for relief from it; on the contrary, judging the future by the past, they have fearful anticipations of increased injuries and wrongs at its hands. That people now appeal with confidence to the candid judgment and sympathy of the American people for that reasonable measure of relief, that redress of flagrant, intolerable wrong, which they have heretofore failed to realize. They ask for peace, prosperity, and a restored and perpetual Union under the Constitution of a common country. They cannot, they will not appeal in vain to this grand tribunal. The thirty millions of freemen of the North surely will never consent to see twelve millions of their southern fellow-countrymen doomed to protracted outrage and anarchy, simply to swell the triumphs of a political party. They cannot afford in view of their own interests to see the South ruled by a military despotism and a standing army of many thousands, kept there to enforce the lawless will of a political party, and thus exchange our system of government for one of absolute powers. They cannot allow this. But let them remember that usurpation in the South to-day and for a long while in the past, becomes a precedent and a strong foothold, and may, nay will one day, if not arrested, establish organized tyranny in all America.

At the close of the late war the republican party had complete control and charge of the Government. It was therefore charged by the Constitution and the American people to restore the Union, to establish it upon enduring foundations, to reclaim the southern people, and enable them again to share freely in the benefits and blessings of national and local government under that system framed by the founders of the Republic. These were its high duties, and a noble field of patriotic labors lay spread out before it.

But this party has proven faithless to this imposing trust. Through a period of ten years a train of unparalleled crimes and abuses have marked its career. It has utterly failed in the grand work of restoring the Union upon that basis of peace and good-will contemplated by the Constitution and so essential to it. On the contrary, reconstruction has been based upon force and the sword, and the policy invoked has been one of absolute power. It has not given the southern people peaceful and wholesome government, nor has it pursued such a course as has been calculated to reclaim the affections of the people. So far from this, it would seem that it has exhausted its ability in devising ways and means to injure, insult, and provoke to wrath and violence that people, and in some localities it has brought about a state of anarchy and public despair. It has not only thus failed in the reconstruction of the Union, but its practices of fraud, peculation, and unparalleled extravagance are without a precedent in the history of this or any country. For the truth of these declarations, I appeal to the observations of disinterested men for the last fourteen years and the history of this party.

The groundwork of all this public evil is this: The republican party, especially for the last ten years, has looked to and worked for its continued ascendancy and the aggrandizement of many of its leaders more than the public weal. An analysis of its workings will show the justice of this remark. Especially will this appear from an examination of its policy and practices in the Southern States.

And now the legitimate result is about to transpire. Notwithstanding the stronghold this party had on the popular confidence in connection with the late war, the people of the whole country have at length taken cognizance of its abuses and dangerous tendencies, and have rebuked it in a most significant manner. Many of its ablest leaders have abandoned it, and others indicate a purpose to do so. Its condition is one that alarms its friends profoundly. This proud and arrogant party see that the scepter of power is about to depart from it, and hence it must devise means of relief or all will be lost.

In the past, and especially since the year 1868, one of the chief sources of strength and success of this party has been the false impression assiduously made by it upon the minds of the great body of the northern people, that the white people of the South have ever since the close of the late war been hostile to the Union, desired and intended its overthrow; that they are the enemies of the negro race, and intend its extermination in this country, and never intend that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution shall be operative. Its misrule in that section of the Union, as the whole country knows, has been intolerable; it has long been the shameful scandal, not only there, but of the whole nation. This, and its revolutionary policy have stimulated and produced disorders there that have in some instances, and in several localities, resulted in disgraceful and atrocious crimes, partaking more or less of a political character. In some cases it has been the direct cause of such disturbances and crimes—generally, it has been the indirect but the moving cause of them. Colored people have been taught to believe that the white people are their deadly enemies, and by false teachings and trainings they have, in too many and lamentable instances, been led to attack the white people in their persons or property under circumstances of great provocation, and the white people so attacked have taken redress by violent means, and thus perpetrated crimes shocking to humanity. I undertake to say that in 90 per cent. of all cases like those just mentioned the colored people have been the first aggressors, moved by the causes and incitements suggested. That percentage of all the cases referred to in this debate began in that way. I challenge successful contradiction. Let the facts in the cases cited be fairly ascertained, and the truth of what I say will be made manifest. Unhappily, generally the infamous and fiendish authors of these crimes and disorders manage to escape unhurt. This condition of things has for years past been made the basis for the false republican cry of a "conflict of races," continued hostility to the Union, and a "new rebellion" in the South.

Too long a majority of the people of the North have heard and believed this false and scandalous party clamor; too long they have allowed themselves to believe that the republican party is and has been the only Union party in the country, and that especially the people of the South who would not indorse its policy and practices there, were and are unfriendly to the Union and the negro race. So believing, they have sustained that party long after it had accomplished its mission and ought to have been dissolved as a political organization. I have the strongest conviction that but for the crimes and disorders in the Southern States produced by republican misrule in the way indicated, that party would have ceased in 1870 to control the country. It ceased to be a party of principle before that time. Since that time, its life-blood has been official patronage and false clamor spread by it throughout the country as to the character and purposes of the southern people in reference to the Federal Government and the negro race. By its policy and practices this party falsely taught the freed people to believe that the white people in the South were their enemies, and thus were able to organize them solidly against them in everything political. This teaching was unqualifiedly false, and as pernicious as false. The white people there were not in fact hostile to the negroes. On the contrary, naturally the two races were friends. They had a common interest; the negro needed the protection and help and encouragement which the white people there alone could extend, and on the other hand the white people needed the labor of the negroes. Their interests were common, and there was no good reason why the great masses of both races should not entertain like political views. There was indeed no reason, and there would have been no difficulty but for the interested efforts of political demagogues and adventurers to use the negro vote for the purpose of promoting their own fortunes and placing them in office, often for dishonest purposes, and for the further purpose of giving the republican party of the nation the benefit of a million of negro votes. But for the desire to give this party ascendancy in the Southern States and the party of the nation, the negro vote, years ago the troubles in the South had been settled. The peace, prosperity, and hopes of the South, the best interests of the Union have been sacrificed, cruelly sacrificed, to prolong the ascendancy of a political party. This party have persistently taught the northern people to believe that the southern people as a mass have been and are hostile to the Union. This is likewise false. The southern people are not hostile to the Union. They have no motive impelling them to be hostile to it. On the contrary, they have high and controlling considerations leading them to love, support, and maintain it. They never were hostile to the Union as a form of government. The causes which led to the late war were not such as affected the system of government.

I repeat, the policy and practices of this party have not looked mainly to the restoration of the Union and the southern people to its blessings and stable, wholesome, just, local State government; it has looked mainly to its own continued ascendancy in the Government of the Union and the several States. To this end it has ignored and perverted the Constitution whenever it stood in its way, and it has not hesitated to usurp any power or overthrow State governments in the South, to accomplish its purposes. Its revolutionary course of action has justly alarmed the public mind. Its misrule in the South and the misrepresentations of the southern people have at length arrested public attention everywhere throughout the Union. As a consequence, the late elections indicate the complete overthrow of this party, the most revolutionary this country has ever seen. The commonest observer sees it tottering to its fall and extinction. Its legitimate work was done several years ago. Now it has lost its hold on public confidence—it is dying, dying in disgrace! If it saved the life of the Union during the late civil war, since its close it has well-nigh stifled its existence by a misrule and extravagance without a parallel. If it had its day of merited glory, that glory has been dimmed and blackened by the multitude and enormity of its crimes. If it made free five millions of slaves as a result of the war, it has sought practically to enslave eight millions of white people by subjecting them to humiliation without a precedent in history, despoiling them of their property and establishing over them a practical military despotism.

and a political surveillance which contravenes every principle of free government.

But its votaries have resolved to make one more struggle to prop up and stay its sinking fortunes. As in the past, so now they seek to make disorders in the Southern States serve their purpose. They have made the disorders there; they are responsible for them; they are the legitimate fruits of their misrule and party practices. They have overturned State governments and established military despotisms in their stead; they have provoked and goaded the people to desperation and despair. As a result, in some instances shocking and atrocious crimes have been perpetrated. Public complaint is loud and imploring for relief. Again this party seeks to mislead and deceive the northern people into its support; again it endeavors to produce the impression that there is a "war of races" imminent in the South; that the people there are hostile to the Union and intend its overthrow; that there is a "new rebellion," and particularly that the southern white people never intend to allow the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution to operate. This is its plain purpose, its only hope of again bringing the northern people to its support. It has gone about its work in earnest. Its great men and little men join actively and anxiously in this patriotic work!

Can it again succeed? I hope not; I trust not. I trust that the American people now understand the condition of the southern people too well to be again deceived by such cruel and unpatriotic political practices. The peace and prosperity of the South, the complete restoration of the Union and harmony among the American people, is worth more than this expiring party. Let it die; let it disappear; let its deeds of glory, if it had any, and its deeds of blood and crime pass into history.

But its friends are not willing to see it thus pass away. I regret and deplore, more than I have language to express, a manifestly concerted effort in and out of Congress to revive and reopen malignant controversies of the past, which have resulted so disastrously to the Southern States of the Republic and the unhappy and persecuted people who inhabit them. Daily we hear the people of the South misrepresented and denounced in unmeasured and often insulting terms. Anarchy prevails in Louisiana and elsewhere and shocking crimes of a semi-political character have been perpetrated, all the essential fruits of republican misrule and unlawful efforts to retain political power in the hands of that party there. These evils are held up to the country and the world as indubitable evidence of a lawless, warlike, and rebellious spirit on the part of the white people of the South. The crimes so perpetrated are exaggerated in number, and often in kind and degree, and all painted in the darkest colors, and garbled and ex parte accounts are given of them, without even the slightest reference to the facts of their origin or any circumstances of provocation or excuse connected with them. These denunciations and misrepresentations are reiterated by most of the republican press throughout the country. Thus it is, and by such means, again proposed to rouse the northern mind against the South in the support of this party.

Is it not plain that such a course of political conduct is unfair and unjust to the people so assailed and the whole country? Is it not as plain that it is done for some sinister purpose? Is it not manifest that it is done to save the sinking fortunes of a political party? Is it not as manifest that military despotism and anarchy are to be prolonged indefinitely in the Southern States so that this party may continue its arbitrary sway? Is it not plain to be seen by anybody that the purpose is, that this party shall live though the country die?

A disinterested examination of the reconstruction acts, and particularly the manner of their execution, will show the striking truth of all I have said. The reconstruction history of every State in the South shows a studied, fixed effort of the republican party to maintain its own ascendancy there at whatever cost or hazard.

But this occasion will not afford sufficient opportunity to bring even a considerable number of its revolutionary and despotic deeds and practices to bear upon this debate. I shall confine myself mainly and particularly to its concerted and persistent acts of despotism and fraud in the State of Louisiana for the last three years.

The reconstruction acts were passed by a Congress overwhelmingly republican. They contained grossly proscriptive features, as I shall have occasion to show. They were executed in Louisiana, as elsewhere, under the supervision of a military officer, and it may be truly said that the elections held in pursuance of them were held under and by direction of the sword. The effect was to give the republican party the control of every convention to frame a constitution in every State in the South under these acts. This was so in Louisiana; there that party had absolute control of the convention. The constitution provided by it, and the laws enacted under that constitution show, clearly a studied purpose to continue that party in power in that State indefinitely. One leading feature of them was the concentration of power in the hands of the executive of the State and those whom he might choose to appoint to office and place. He had virtual control of the elections of the State, if he chose to exercise the power. And the most abundant means were provided for the successful perpetration of frauds in the elections. All this, as will be seen, was done in the interests of that political party. The first State officers and Legislature under this constitution were republican. Their misrule has scarcely a parallel in the history of civilized government, except in other Southern States. The office-holders quarreled about the offices, spoils, and the opportunity to rob and plunder the people and the State. And what happened as a consequence at the election there in the year 1872 I will have occasion to refer to in another part of my remarks.

In view of what I am about to say, it is material here to cite certain provisions of the constitution of Louisiana:

ART. 15. The legislative power of the State shall be vested in two distinct branches; the one to be styled the house of representatives, the other the senate, and both the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana.

ART. 16. The members of the house of representatives shall continue in office for two years from the day of the closing of the general elections.

ART. 17. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in November every two years, and the election shall be completed in one day. The General Assembly shall meet annually on the first Monday in January, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of government.

ART. 33. Not less than a majority of the members of each house of the General Assembly shall form a quorum to transact business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall have full power to compel the attendance of absent members.

ART. 34. Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members; but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Accordingly, on the first Monday in November, 1874, an election was held in that State for members of the house of representatives and one-half of the senators. The house consisted of one hundred and eleven members and the senate of thirty-six senators. At that election, the commissioners to hold the election at the several voting-places received the votes and counted them. Then, after they so counted them, supervisors of the parish in which they were so cast compiled the vote and ascertained the result in the parish. The vote thus taken showed a majority in the house of representatives of twenty-nine democrats. About this there can be no question; these officers so ascertained, and the fact was so proclaimed at the time through the newspapers of that State and the country generally. Besides, a sub-committee of Congress recently examined into the fact, so ascertained and reported. They say:

The returns by the commissioners of election, compiled and forwarded by the supervisors of registration, gave the conservatives a majority of twenty-nine members out of a total of one hundred and eleven members. In only a few instances were there any protests accompanying the returns.

Under the election law, the returns were sent to the returning board which assembled at the capitol of the State. This board consisted of five persons, and the law directed that they should be selected "from all political parties," but in fact the board in question was composed entirely of republicans, until one resigned, when a conservative took his place. The statute prescribed the duty of this board. They were required to compile the vote of the State for all officers. Their simple duty was to compile the vote of the State, except in one other case and that was this: If a commissioner or supervisor of elections should send to them with the returns a full statement sworn by him, and this statement sustained by that of three respectable citizens, electors of the parish, also sworn, that any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, disturbance, or corrupt influence had materially affected the result of the elections, then and in that case only, if such board should be satisfied of such statement, they might refuse to count the votes of the place of voting so questioned and exclude it from the returns. They, by the statute, could only in such cases reject returns, but they had no power to decide upon the right of anybody; they had no right to say that one claiming a majority was not elected, nor on the other hand to decide that one appearing to have a minority was elected. They had no power to try the right in a contested case and decide the same for one party or another. This is so, in the first place, because the statute creating the board did not undertake to confer any such power; it is not conferred by terms or implication—indeed, the statute makes reference, in terms, to cases of "contest according to law." In the second place, if the Legislature had undertaken to confer such power, it could not do so, because the constitution provides in these words:

ART. 34. Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members; but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Now this plainly means that the Legislature may provide by statute for contested cases before its branches respectively, else the main provision of this article that "each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and return of its members" would be nugatory and inoperative.

Charged with such powers and none others, this returning board began its labors and continued them for nearly two months. Notwithstanding the returns as made up by the commissioners who held the elections and counted the votes, and the returns from the parishes as compiled and counted by the supervisors, and these showed in the State a majority in the lower branch of the Legislature of twenty-nine for the democrats, this board decided, without any sanction of law, in many cases when democrats were elected, as the returns showed, that republicans were elected. This they had no authority in any case to do, for the reasons stated. They did this in several cases where there was not any suggestion of riot or disturbance as required by law. For example, in Rapides Parish the returns showed that three conservatives were elected. There was no exception to the election at all, much less such as the law required in case of riot or other disturbing cause, to authorize the rejection of the returns. On the contrary, the United States supervisors swore that the election was in all respects full, fair, and free. Nevertheless, in this case, the board returned three republicans as elected!

The law further required this board to file one copy of the returns as made up by them in the office of the secretary of state. When they had completed their work the returns so filed showed that only fifty-two democrats and fifty-four republicans were elected. In the cases of five members of the house of representatives, they made no returns at all, but referred this matter to the Legislature. In these five cases the returns of the commissioners and supervisors of election showed that conservatives were elected in each, and there was no suggestion, as the statute allowed, of fraud or other thing which impaired the election. In short, there was no cause that in any way vitiated the election, nor was any suggested—at all events, any of which the board could take cognizance. There was nothing that could authorize them to reject these five members. These, with the count they had made, gave the democrats in the house fifty-eight members and the republicans fifty-three members. Seeing this inevitably gave the democrats a majority of five, they resorted to the subterfuge of "referring" these five cases to the Legislature. It is reasonable to infer that there was a motive for this action and this will soon be seen.

These facts must satisfy any reasonable person that this board, or a majority of them, were dishonest and corrupt. The conservative who became a member of it, resigned in disgust. But the corrupt character of this board appears in another and a strong light. A subcommittee of the House of Representatives, consisting of three gentlemen of high character for truth and honor—two republicans and one democrat—went recently to Louisiana charged to inquire, among other things, about the doings of this board. They made a searching examination, and they say of it, in summing up their conclusions, as follows:

Without now referring to other instances, we are constrained to declare that the action of the returning board, on the whole, was arbitrary, unjust, and in our opinion illegal; and that this arbitrary, unjust, and illegal action alone prevented the return by the board of a majority of conservative members of the lower house.

Its conduct was so flagrantly illegal and dishonest, that I believe no one has yet ventured to offer a word of apology for it.

Now, are the five conservatives thus elected and so ascertained to be elected, members of the lower branch of the Legislature, notwithstanding the returning board refused to return them? They are, and for three plain reasons: First, the essence of the election is that according to law some person received a majority of the votes cast in the parish and that this fact be ascertained by some lawful authority. This is the material and substantial feature of the election, the balance is matter of form and evidence. Then in these five cases, each person claiming, did receive a majority of the votes cast in the parish where he was a candidate, and this fact was ascertained by the commissioners who held the election and were charged to count the votes, and also by the supervisor who was charged by the law to compile and count the vote in the parish. Thus they received a majority of the votes, and this fact was ascertained by lawful and competent authorities. They were therefore, to all intents and purposes, members-elect of the Legislature.

But it is said the returning board did not return them as so elected, as the statute requires. This I admit. But this is not essential. They have only the duty to recompile the vote in the third degree after the vote was polled. This is not material; it is only an evidence, or additional evidence, that the person did receive a majority of the votes cast. This is not the only evidence, much less is it exclusive evidence. There was no statement under the statute in any one of these cases that authorized the board to reject the returns showing these five, or any one of them, to have been elected. I say so because the fact is so; and besides, if there had been such statement, then they must have rejected the return as the law directs in such cases. But they did not reject the returns; they "referred" them to the Legislature. This they had no power to do; the statute gave them no power to "refer" cases to the Legislature.

Secondly. There was an election and return in each of the five cases referred to, and there was no statement under oath, as required by the law, to raise the jurisdiction of the board which would enable them to reject the returns to them. Will any one pretend that the board could arbitrarily reject returns showing an election? Surely not. That is too absurd; and it is as unreasonable to say that one was not elected because the board refused to do their office!

But, thirdly, this returning board cannot in any case have power to reject returns because of violence or other cause assigned in the statute creating the board, as impairing the election. This is so, because this provision of the statute contravenes the constitution and makes the returning board judges of the election of members of the Legislature. If they only exercise the power which the statute confers, they can decide that there was no election, and reject the returns. This the constitution forbids. It provides—

ART. 34. Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members; but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Then it follows that these five members whose election the returning board would not return, but undertook to refer to the Legislature, were duly elected and in all respects members of the lower branch of that body. And so there were fifty-eight democrats and fifty-three republican members of the house of representatives.

These members-elect, any one of them, had the right, nay, it was their duty, to go to the capitol of the State on the 4th day of January last for the purpose of organizing the Legislature and proceeding with the discharge of the duties of that body. To the end they might do this, and without molestation, they were highly privileged. Article 40 of the constitution of that State provides:

ART. 40. The members of the General Assembly, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective houses, and going to or returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house shall not be questioned in any other place.

According to law, one hundred and seven of the members did assemble in the capitol on the day mentioned; of these, one hundred and two had been returned as elected by the returning board, the other five were those whose cases this board "referred" to the Legislature. Under the provisions of a statute which I will now read, it was the duty of the clerk of the last house of representatives to furnish the members-elect and so assembled with a list of the names of members returned as elected by the returning board. That statute is in these words:

SEC. 44. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as according to the returns shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly; and it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary, respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate. Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State.

That list was furnished. The clerk of the last house appeared at twelve o'clock in the hall of the house of representatives with the list, and called all whose names were on it. One hundred and two of those called answered, and the five members whose names were not on the list were also present—they were known to be present and as members-elect, and were entitled to join in the organization of the house.

It has been said that the clerk of the last house, who called the roll, had the right and it was his duty to preside at the organization of the house. This is not true. He had no power save only such as was conferred by some law. The statute just read is the only one that bears on his duty. It does not undertake by terms or reasonable implication to confer upon him such power. The language of the statute is:

And it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect, so furnished, upon the roll of the house and of the senate respectively.

No other power is conferred, no other duty is prescribed for him. Even had the statute provided in terms that he should organize the house or preside at the organization, it might well be questioned whether such an act were valid, because by the constitution the house is master of its own organization. This power is absolute, and no former Legislature can abridge it. Besides this, on former similar occasions the clerk did not exercise such functions. So that it is plain there is no legal sanction or precedent for the power and right so claimed.

Then there were present at the time and place prescribed by law one hundred and seven members-elect of the house—largely more than a quorum. Of them fifty-five were democrats, including the five whose names were not on the roll as it came from the secretary of state, and fifty-two republicans. There was no statute prescribing how these members-elect should organize themselves into the house of representatives. By what rule, then, could they organize? There can be but one reasonable answer to this question. They were bound to organize according to the common law applying to deliberative bodies. By this law it was competent for any member-elect—the oldest man present or the one who had been longest in such service—to move that any member present be called to the chair to preside temporarily until the house could organize; the mover had the right to put the question and to decide that it was carried or otherwise. Then the member so elected had the right to preside pending the organization, to entertain motions, to put and decide questions, and authoritatively. This is so according to reason and practice, too, so far as my observation extends.

Now, according to the practice of political parties and legislative bodies in this country, the democrats had the right to organize that house and elect its officers. They had a majority of the members, as has been shown. They proceeded to avail themselves of their right and to organize the house. I now read from a sworn account of this organization, and it corresponds substantially with all the accounts I have seen. That portion of the statement material just now is in these words:

After the completion of the roll-call by William Vigers, clerk of the former house, as provided by section 44, above recited, L. A. Wiltz was nominated as temporary chairman by a member, and was upon a via voce vote declared elected temporary speaker, whereupon he took the chair, and announced himself temporary speaker of the house of representatives, and as such took his oath of office before Judge Houston, and also had said oath administered to him by a member. He thereupon administered the oaths to the members of the House. He then declared the functions of the former clerk, Vigers, at an end. A clerk was then, on motion, nominated and elected. A sergeant-at-arms and assistants were also elected.

During this temporary organization, upon motion put and adopted, the five members whose elections the returning board had not promulgated and had referred to the house were admitted as members and sworn in. Thereafter L. A. Wiltz was nominated as permanent speaker. The roll was called, and Wiltz and Hahn being in nomination, Wiltz received 55 votes, Hahn 2, and 1 blank. Fifty-six being a majority and legal quorum of the whole number, one hundred and eleven, to which the house was entitled, he was thereupon declared duly elected permanent speaker, and was sworn in and then administered the oath to the members, (by fours,) including Michael Hahn, Thomas Baker, Murrell, and Drury, republicans. A committee on credentials was then appointed, of which Hahn and Thomas were appointed members and accepted, and withdrew with the committee. Upon the return to the house of said committee, Hahn made known that he would make a minority report.

This organization was boisterous and disorderly. The republicans insisted violently that they had a majority and the right to organize the house. They said that the five members whose names were not on the roll were not entitled to participate in the organization, because the statute provided that those members whose names were on the list reported by the returning board and "none other shall be competent to organize."

Here the corrupt motive of the returning board becomes manifest. The facts—the whole history of their conduct and that of the organization of the house—go to show conclusively that their purpose was, from the beginning, to disappoint the will of the people as expressed at the ballot-box and give the control of the Legislature to the republican party. The returns made by the commissioners who held the elections and counted the votes, and the returns as made by the supervisors in the parishes, showed that the democrats had a majority of twenty-nine. This board cut this majority down without sanction of law, as we have seen, until they returned that fifty-two democrats and fifty-four republicans were elected; and as to the other five members-elect—all democrats—their cases were "referred" to the Legislature. Can any fair person doubt that the purpose of the returning board and the republican party was what I have suggested? It was manifestly to get control of the Legislature—"peaceably if they could, forcibly if they must." I do not hesitate to declare that the democrats had the right, and it was their high duty by every lawful means in their power, to disappoint this shamelessly corrupt purpose. In view of the sufferings and disorders, and the sources of them, of the people of Louisiana, they could not be impelled by higher, purer, and nobler motives to do their utmost to preserve and retain the political power intrusted to them by the people at the polls. They must have the sympathy of every friend of good government and the oppressed everywhere. Here let me say that dishonest practices like this carried on by men destitute of integrity, who care for no party that does not serve their dishonest aims, is the groundwork, the life of the woes of Louisiana. The republican party of the nation has not only connived at, but it has openly sustained these vile robbers of the peace, good order, and substance of society, and now its own handiwork returns to plague it.

It is plain to be seen that the purpose had in view in inserting in the statute the words "and none other shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate" was to give a dishonest returning board the power to control the organization of the Legislature. This provision is one of a great variety in the constitution and statutes of Louisiana, intended to give republican officials power to disappoint the will of the people expressed at the ballot-box.

But the provision is void, because it contravenes the letter and spirit of the Constitution. I have shown that the returning board could not try a contested-election case, and could not decide that there was no election. "Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members." How can this be, if the returning board decides? But further, the constitution provides that the several parishes shall have representation in the Legislature. Can the Legislature empower anybody to deprive them of such representation? This statute is void because it undertakes to abridge a power conferred on the Legislature. It is monstrous to say that by such partisan legislation the people may be robbed of their rights in the organization of their Legislature!

The organization of the house was completed as I have described. Now we turn to a transaction which shocks every friend of free government, no matter what his party affiliations may be. It has profoundly alarmed the fears of the American people, and well it may if it shall lead them to set the seal of condemnation upon it and its authors and all those who indorse it.

On the day the Legislature of Louisiana met, perfect peace prevailed in that State and particularly in the city of New Orleans where that body met. There was no disturbance and no reasonable ground to apprehend any, much less was there any insurrection. A republican account of the house of representatives says:

NEW ORLEANS, January 4—noon.

The members have assembled in the hall of the house, and are the most orderly body of legislators so far that has assembled in Louisiana for many years.

All the evidence shows that there had been no disturbance, political or otherwise, in that State since September last. Nevertheless this quiet state of the people, this peaceful prospect, was disturbed by the assembling of the metropolitan police of New Orleans—an armed soldiery—and many hundreds of United States troops about the capitol on the morning of the day the Legislature met. This was a high day there—a free day, the people's day; the popular branch of the State government was about to assemble. Then, why this warlike movement? What was the occasion for it? Where was there any lawful authority for it? It was plainly, flagrantly in violation of the genius of our system of free government. But this military movement had a motive; it was intended for a purpose. It was done by preconcert. As the whole transaction shows, it was done to help if need be the republican party organize that house of representatives. Disguise it as interested persons may, it is plain to him who will see the truth, that the Army was prostituted to the ignoble purpose of helping the republican party into power after the people had defeated it by a large majority at the polls. That is the plain truth. Let us see how this was done. The Army and the armed police were there ready; they were not suddenly called from their barracks to suppress a riot or outbreak. On the contrary, they came into place for action in the quiet morning. Here is an account of its appointment which I take from the National Republican newspaper of this city of the day after what it describes took place. It says:

NEW ORLEANS, January 4.

At this hour (eight o'clock a. m.) the United States troops are taking their positions covering the State-house. A regiment of infantry in two columns, at parade rest, extends from Chartres street on Saint Louis street to the hall. The Metropolitan are being placed in position to prevent the near approach of the public to the State-house. A squad of them at Chartres street and on Saint Louis street refused to allow persons to pass out Saint Louis street, stating that only members of the Legislature or State officers would be allowed to go by. This squad was under the command of a captain. A similar squad will probably be placed at all approaches to the State-house. Eighteen hundred United States troops will be in position to sustain the State government.

It is not pretended that any state of war was there. There was no insurrection nor threatened insurrection; there was no violence there, nor threatened violence. Wherefore, then, this military investiture of the capitol? Why was it done? But above this, more important than this, by what lawful authority was this done? The facts show that the capitol was surrounded by these armed forces; only those persons went in and out of the State-house whom the troops permitted by order. There was no sanction of law for this movement. There was no warrant for it, nor could there be. It was done, as we learn, by the governor of Louisiana. What right had he in any way to direct or, in any the least degree, interfere with the assembling of the Legislature? It was a co-ordinate branch of the government, absolutely independent of him, but he exercised absolute power toward it; the right he had to muster these troops, as I have shown he did, he had to employ them as he would. As much sanction can be shown for the one as the other. He had no warrant or process of any kind against any man or body of men. Can he arrest at will without warrant? Especially, can he do this in a time of peace?

When the house assembled and organized, as I have described, and were proceeding with their business, by order of the governor, and while the troops were so investing the capitol, an officer of the Army, with a squad of soldiers, marched into the house of representatives and selected and seized the five members of the Legislature whom the returning board had refused to return as elected, and forcibly took them from the house. Thus the governor undertook to decide that these members were not members, and to enforce his decision by and through the Army of the United States. I have shown that these five men were duly elected members. But suppose for argument's sake that each of them only had a claim to a seat in the house; did this warrant their seizure by anybody, an officer of the State, much less by United States soldiers? Had the governor any right to seize any one of these men? Had any officer of the law any right to seize them? If the governor or anybody else had gone before a judge to sue out a State's warrant against them, what offense would or could he have suggested? They had done no crime; they were simply where the law commanded them to be; they were there at the command of the people, about the business of the people. No officer of the State had any right to arrest these men but by virtue of a warrant duly issued by a proper magistrate, because none was issued or prayed for.

Article 9 of the constitution of Louisiana provides in these words:

ART. 9. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched or the person or things to be seized.

The governor and all who acted under his orders not only violated this clause of the constitution, but they did more, if possible—they violated the high privileges of the house of representatives, one branch of a co-ordinate branch of the government. For this high offense he may be impeached, and besides he and all his aiders and abettors may be indicted in the courts of Louisiana. There was not the shadow of authority for his action. No one of the apologists for this high crime against the State has undertaken to show any lawful sanction for it, nor can they do so.

So this interference was illegal on the part of the governor of Louisiana, treating him as the lawful governor.

If such interference was unlawful on the part of the governor, it follows that it was unlawful on the part of the United States troops and everybody connected with it.

That the person exercising authority as governor of Louisiana should commit such a high-handed crime against the State and people in view of his past history of murder and crime, is not to be wondered at, when he could command the power to do so. But the most alarming feature of this transaction is that his conduct should not only be tolerated, but sanctioned and sustained, by the Administration—the President and at least part of his Cabinet and an apparent majority of the republicans in Congress. This gives cause for serious apprehension, and the people of all parties and sections may well feel alarmed at such an arbitrary exercise of power.

It is said the President did not order the interference by the troops with the Legislature. The point in this case perhaps is not that he ordered the troops to do what they did, but that he tolerated it. Where did he find authority to allow the governor of Louisiana to command the United States troops for any purpose? I undertake to say there is no constitutional or legal sanction for any such use of the troops of the United States. It is said the troops might have been used as a part of the posse comitatus. This I deny; they cannot, as troops, be so used; they are trained and organized under the sanction of law, for purposes specified by law, and are under the command of officers appointed for the purpose. Could the sheriff or the marshal take control of and command them as part of the force and thus displace the lawful officers? There is no authority for such use of the Army. If they were at home, off duty, in their capacity as citizens, then they might be so used; but in this case they were used as United States troops in the regular service, and this is a beggarly shift and subterfuge. But even if they could have been used as part of the posse comitatus, even then the use of them was unlawful. There was no violence there; there was no riot; there was no warrant issued by any officer commanding another officer to arrest the five men taken out of the Legislature; there was not only no warrant, but they had done no offense. Can any one tell me what crime they had done? Shame on such puerile pleas!

Let us look briefly at the powers of the President to use the United States troops in the States in aid of the State authorities. The Constitution provides in these words:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.

This clause of the Constitution alone confers on the President no power. But Congress has conferred on him by statute power to execute its provisions. The statute provides as follows:

In case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President, on application of the Legislature of said State or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States, which may be applied for, as he deems sufficient to suppress such insurrection; or, on the like application, to employ for the same purposes such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as he deems necessary.

This statute is the sole authority which the President has to interfere with the Army in behalf of a State. Under its provisions two things must happen to warrant his interference. First, there must be insurrection in the State against the government thereof. Secondly, there being such insurrection, then there must be the application of the Legislature of that State; and if it cannot be convened, then the application of its governor to the President, notifying him of such insurrection and calling upon him to use the military power of the United States to suppress it. Then, and not till then, may he interfere. When such application is made, then it is discretionary with him whether he will do so or not. If he concludes to do so, then he must issue his proclamation commanding the insurgents to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within a limited time. The President has no authority to aid the authorities of a State in the execution of its laws. Neither the Constitution nor any statute confers on him any such power. He can only interfere in a case where there is insurrection, domestic violence, leveled against the State itself. The term insurrection means a general uprising of a great number of people against the government. Vattel well defines it in these words:

A popular commotion is a concourse of people who assemble in a tumultuous manner, and refuse to listen to the voice of their superiors, whether the design of the assembled multitude be leveled against the superiors themselves or only against some private individuals. Violent commotions of this kind take place when the people think themselves aggrieved; and there is no order of men who so frequently give rise to them as the tax-gatherers. If the rage of the malcontents be particularly leveled at the magistrates or others vested with the public authority, and they proceed to a formal disobedience or acts of open violence, this is called a sedition. When the evil spreads—when it infects the majority of the inhabitants of a city or province, and gains such strength that even the sovereign himself is no longer obeyed—it is usual more particularly to distinguish such a disorder by the name of insurrection.

Worcester defines it thus:

An insurrection is the rising up against the authority of the government; rebellion is resistance against the authority of the government, with an intent to overthrow it; sedition is a less extensive resistance against lawful authority; revolt is the act of renouncing allegiance to a government; mutiny is an insurrection of seamen or soldiers against their commanders.

Now this fact is to be noted: At the time the troops seized the members of the Legislature there was no insurrection in Louisiana; it is not pretended by the President or any one else that there was any, nor that there had been since September last. But if there had been, neither the Legislature nor the governor of the State had notified the President of it, as the law directs. No one pretends that he had any such application; and if the interference of the troops in investing the capitol of the State and seizing the five members of the Legislature was done by his order, or by any one having authority to so use the troops, then his act was in plain violation of the Constitution and laws.

Now, by what authority did the troops so interfere? It was done by the immediate order of the person acting as governor. This is his order:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, January 4.

General DE TROBRIAND, Commanding:

An illegal assembly of men having taken possession of the hall of the house of representatives, and the police not being able to dislodge them, I respectfully request that you will immediately clear the hall and State-house of all persons not returned as legal members of the house of representatives by the returning board of the State.

WM. P. KELLOGG,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, January 4.

General DE TROBRIAND:

The clerk of the house, who has in his possession the roll issued by the secretary of state of legal members of the house of representatives, will point out to you those persons now in the hall of the house of representatives returned by the legal returning board of the State.

WM. P. KELLOGG,
Governor of the State.

But where did Mr. Kellogg get authority to command and issue orders to the United States troops? This does not satisfactorily appear. It is much to be regretted that the President has not seen proper to lay before the Senate all the orders issued by the War Department to the general officers in command at New Orleans. The request made to him was general and embraced them, and they are material here. They are material for his justification, and they are material for the Senate and the country. We must take the best information we have. In his message in reply to the resolution of inquiry, the President says:

Troops had been sent to the State under this requisition of the governor, and as other disturbances seemed imminent they were allowed to remain there to render the executive such aid as might become necessary to enforce the laws of the State and repress the continued violence which seemed inevitable the moment Federal support should be withdrawn.

In giving his account of the military interferences, he says:

Respecting the alleged interference by the military with the organization of the Legislature of Louisiana on the 4th instant, I have no knowledge or information which has not been received by me since that time and published. My first information was from the papers of the morning of the 5th of January. I did not know that any such thing was anticipated, and no orders nor suggestions were ever given to any military officer in that State upon that subject prior to the occurrence. I am well aware that any military interference by the officers or troops of the United States with the organization of the State Legislature or any of its proceedings, or with any civil department of the government, is repugnant to our ideas of government. I can conceive of no case, not involving rebellion or insurrection, where such interference by authority of the General Government ought to be permitted or can be justified. But there are circumstances connected with the late legislative imbroglio in Louisiana which seem to exempt the military from any intentional wrong in that matter. Knowing that they had been placed in Louisiana to prevent domestic violence and aid in the enforcement of the State laws, the officers and troops of the United States may well have supposed that it was their duty to act when called upon by the governor for that purpose.

It appears from the message, then, that the troops were placed in Louisiana by order of the President to aid Mr. Kellogg in enforcing the laws, and under this authority he ordered the troops to do what they did. This the President had no authority to do; he could not authorize Mr. Kellogg to use the troops for any purpose, and he could not himself use them to enforce the laws of Louisiana; he could only use them to suppress insurrection against that State on proper application. There was no application, and there was no insurrection. One Senator has said:

Speaking of it, I say first, that no responsibility for the affair in New Orleans on the 4th of January touches the President of the United States.

wish he were correct. By the President's own showing, he placed the troops there for a purpose not authorized by law, and he gave Kellogg authority to direct them in the execution of that purpose. This was all unlawful.

I did most sincerely hope that the President would disavow the action of the troops, and say that it was inadvertently done. But he did not disavow it; on the contrary, his message is a labored effort to defend his general conduct in Louisiana and to excuse the troops. And more than this, he did not intimate any purpose to order the troops to cease such unlawful interference. While they had the capitol invested and were interfering with the Legislature, General Sheridan, by an order of the President, assumed command of the troops at New Orleans. He so informed the Secretary of War, by telegram, in these words:

[Telegram.]

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE MISSOURI,
New Orleans, January 4, 1875. (Received 4—11.45 p. m.)

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

It is with deep regret that I have to announce to you the existence in this State of a spirit of defiance to all lawful authority and an insecurity of life which is hardly realized by the General Government or the country at large. The lives of citizens have become so jeopardized, that unless something is done to give protection to the people, all security usually afforded by law will be overridden. Defiance to the laws and the murder of individuals seems to be looked upon by the community here from a stand-point which gives impunity to all who choose to indulge in either, and the civil government appears powerless to punish or even arrest. I have to-night assumed control over the Department of the Gulf.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

Now, in this telegram General Sheridan expresses a purpose to execute the laws of Louisiana. This is plainly unlawful. He had no right, nor could he have, to execute the laws of that State. His telegram was received and its receipt acknowledged in these words:

[Telegram.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 5, 1875.

Lieutenant-General SHERIDAN,
United States Army, New Orleans, Louisiana:

Your telegram dated the 4th, describing state of things, and reporting you have assumed control over the Department of the Gulf, was received by the Secretary of War, and is approved.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

So his conduct was approved, and the President in terms thus assumes responsibility for what the general did and said. General Sheridan further advised the President of his action and purposes in two telegrams, of which the following are copies:

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Please say to the President that he need give himself no uneasiness about the condition of affairs here. I will preserve the peace, which it is not hard to do with the naval and military forces in and about the city, and if Congress will declare the White Leagues and other similar organizations, white or black, banditti, I will relieve it from the necessity of any special legislation for the preservation of peace and equality of rights in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, and the Executive from much of the trouble heretofore had in this section of the country.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

I think that the terrorism now existing in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas could be entirely removed and confidence and fair dealing established by the arrest and trial of the ringleaders of the armed White Leagues. If Congress would pass a bill declaring them banditti, they could be tried by a military commission. The ringleaders of this banditti, who murdered men here on the 14th of last September, and also more recently at Vicksburg, Mississippi, should, in justice to law and order and the peace and prosperity of this southern part of the country, be punished. It is possible that if the President would issue a proclamation declaring them banditti, no further action need be taken except that which would devolve upon me.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

Now, no one acquainted with the law will seriously pretend that General Sheridan had any shadow of authority to do what he proposed to do. Still the President approved this conduct of that officer. The following are copies of the telegrams sent to him by the Secretary of War:

[Telegram.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 6, 1875.

General P. H. SHERIDAN,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

Your telegrams all received. The President and all of us have full confidence and thoroughly approve your course.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

[Telegram.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 6, 1875.

General P. H. SHERIDAN,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

I telegraphed you hastily to-day, answering your dispatch. You seem to fear that we had been misled by biased or partial statements of your acts. Be assured that the President and Cabinet confide in your wisdom and rest in the belief that all acts of yours have been and will be judicious. This I intended to say in my brief telegram.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

This approval cannot be said to be an inadvertence. The President and his advisers knew what he was about, and what he did, and must be responsible for his deliberate acts and deeds. That the acts complained of were not authorized by law, no lawyer can pretend. No Senator has yet ventured to defend them as having the sanction of the Constitution, so far as I know.

So that it does inevitably appear that the whole transaction was a plain, palpable, and fearful violation of the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana, and of the Constitution and laws of the United States. And it further appears that while others are guilty of grave offenses against the State of Louisiana, the President is not only technically but substantially responsible for all that was done at the capital of that State on the 4th of last month. If the United States troops had been about their lawful business, then the Legislature of Louisiana had not been molested. I think any one must see this. I see no escape in the eye of truth and the law from these conclusions.

But, Mr. President, this is not all nor the worst of this transaction. When we consider that Kellogg was not the governor of Louisiana; that he is and has always been a usurper; that his whole government is a usurpation, sustained by the military arm of the United States, and the means by which his usurpation was established and has been continued to this day, and the circumstances of fraud, outrage, and crime attending it, we will have some tolerable knowledge of the magnitude, turpitude, and fearful character of the crime perpetrated against the State and people of Louisiana and the dangerous inroads made upon our system of government both State and Federal.

I have not time to advert to more than the leading and more striking parts of the matter. These develop a huge conspiracy of desperate and irresponsible political adventurers sailing under colors of the republican party, to keep unlawful control of the State of Louisiana in utter defiance of the popular will. It will appear unmistakably that while the people were struggling manfully to free themselves from a swarm of political cormorants and a misrule without a precedent, their oppressors were strangely able to command the confidence, aid, and support of the Administration, and that in all they have done they have been sustained by the free and unlawful use of the Army of the United States. It is to be deeply deplored that the President has in this connection, as it has appeared and will yet more clearly appear, allowed himself to be governed by incompetent advisers, and often—generally—by interested, wicked, and corrupt informers. I am sure that every disinterested person will see in this usurpation the sole cause of the terrible disorder and shocking crimes perpetrated in that State since 1872.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Forty-second Congress, were instructed by resolution of the Senate to inquire and report whether there was any State government in Louisiana. This committee was a very able one, and composed of seven republicans. They made a very thorough examination and an exhaustive report; three of the committee, each, made a minority report. The facts which I am now about to state I take from that report, and in the course of what I have to say I shall state all that are necessary to show fairly the true history of the usurpation I propose to expose.

I have said that in the year 1872, the republican politicians in Louisiana differed and quarreled. The result was the formation of two republican factions—one headed by the then governor, Warmoth, and styled the "liberal republicans;" the other called the republicans. The liberal republicans and democrats or conservatives fused, and put before the people a "fusion ticket" for governor and other State officers and members of the Legislature, to be voted for at the election which took place on the 4th day of November of that year. This ticket was headed by John McEnery for governor. The republicans put forward a like ticket, headed by William Pitt Kellogg. The contest before the people which immediately preceded the election was active and zealous on both sides. The "fusion ticket" had the advantage of having almost the united support of the white vote of the State and the large personal and political influence of Governor Warmoth among the republicans, besides the immense official patronage which he controlled as governor. It was therefore reasonable to infer that the "fusion ticket" would succeed.

The election took place on the day designated by law. The vote was twenty thousand votes larger than ever before polled in the State, and the election was generally conducted in quiet and was unusually free from disturbance or riot. Against more than four-fifths of the vote no complaint of unfairness is even alleged. According to the official returns, the fusion State ticket, headed by McEnery, received an average majority of about ten thousand votes, and a large majority of the persons elected to the Legislature were of the fusion party. About this there seems to have been no controversy. On the 13th of the same month the returning board met to compile the vote of the State. Governor Warmoth was chairman of it, and he and other members of it differed. The board adjourned to the next day, and in the mean time, judicial proceedings were instituted and injunctions were granted restraining Warmoth and his faction of the board from compiling the vote. Thereupon Governor Warmoth took from its file a bill passed by the Legislature at its session next before that time, regulating elections—the present election law—and approved it. This he might do, according to the laws of that State. This act operated to abolish the then existing returning board and put an end to the injunction and the litigation in that behalf, and it became necessary to appoint a new returning board. The Legislature was not in session, and under the constitution the governor might appoint the board in the absence of the senate. The governor did at once appoint what is called in the report the "De Feriet board." The committee say of this board:

In the opinion of your committee there can be no doubt—conceding the validity of the act of November 20—that it transferred the duty of canvassing the returns of the last election to the board to be elected under the provisions of the act. The act provided for such election by the senate, and, taking effect in the vacation of the Legislature, created offices to be filled thereafter by the Senate. This is what is styled in that State an original vacancy, which, happening in the vacation of the Legislature, the governor is authorized to fill by appointment; and it is said that the State courts of that State have repeatedly recognized the right of the governor to make such appointments.

Then this board was lawful.

This board compiled the vote of the State and ascertained that the McEnery ticket was elected, including the members to the Legislature, and it appeared by their returns that the fusionists had a majority in that body. The returns showed that the State ticket had an average majority of about 10,000 votes. It is not denied that their returns were according to the returns from the parishes. Besides this, the returns from the parishes were before the committee, and the committee say their returns were substantially correct.

On the day the "De Feriet board" was appointed, the governor, by his proclamation, as he might lawfully do, called the Legislature to meet in extra session on the 9th day of December, 1872.

There was another returning board, called by the committee, the "Lynch board." This board was in the interest of Kellogg and his ticket. It was not a board in law; it had no legal existence or authority whatever; no more than five Senators would have to-day to do the same duty. Nevertheless, they pretended to act and to ascertain that Kellogg and the whole republican ticket were elected, including the Legislature. They had no returns, and what they did was based upon vague reports, estimates of what they said ought to have been the result, newspaper reports, forged affidavits, and such things.

In order to give effect to the action of the "Lynch board" and put Kellogg and his ticket in office, Judge Durell, a judge of the district court of the United States, without having any case before him, without any jurisdiction whatever for such purpose, out of court, in his own house, at a late hour of the night, and without application, on the 5th of December made an order commanding the marshal of the United States to seize and hold the State-house of Louisiana, and hold the same subject to his further order, and not to allow any assemblage in the capitol by virtue of any returns of the "De Feriet board." This order was plainly a nullity. The marshal, however, executed this pretended order. He applied to the United States officer in command of troops there, and the officer says that with the troops, he took possession of the State-house on the morning of the 6th of December, about two o'clock in the morning, and held it for six weeks. The excuse for using the troops then was, that they were aiding the marshal to execute an order of a United States court.

It cannot be disguised that the republicans had resolved at any cost and hazard to disappoint the popular will and retain possession of the State government by sheer usurpation. And I am pained to be forced to the conclusion, that the Administration at Washington had cognizance of and aided such a purpose. I will advert to some of the evidence of this fact—Judge Durell made his unlawful order on the night of the 5th of December. On the 3d of that month the Attorney-General of the United States sent to the United States marshal this strange and significant order:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
December 3, 1872.

S. B. PACKARD, Esq.,
United States Marshal, New Orleans, Louisiana:

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with all necessary troops for that purpose.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Now why was this order sent? It does not appear to be in response to inquiries made, and no explanation of it has ever been made, although the propriety of it has been repeatedly questioned in the Senate and elsewhere. The inference is unavoidable that it was given and the troops sent in anticipation of the unlawful and void order of Judge Durell, and for the purpose of inaugurating the Kellogg usurpations. On evidence of this is the fact that after the Attorney-General knew of the void character of the order of the judge, he still allowed the marshal to hold the State-house for six weeks. This cast light on his purpose. Other telegrams to the President and the Attorney-General go to show that the authorities at Washington were fully advised of what was going on at New Orleans in anticipation of the meeting of the Legislature. The President received this telegram:

NEW ORLEANS, December 6, 1872.

President GRANT:

Marshal Packard took possession of State-house this morning at an early hour with military posse, in obedience to a mandate of circuit court, to prevent illegal assemblage of persons under guise of authority of Warmoth's returning board, in violation of injunction of circuit court. Decree of court just rendered declares Warmoth's returning board illegal, and orders the returns of the election to be forthwith placed before the legal board. This board will probably soon declare the result of the election of officers of State and Legislature, which will meet in State-house with protection of court. The decree was sweeping in its provisions, and if enforced will save the republican majority and give Louisiana a republican Legislature and State government, and check Warmoth in his usurpations. Warmoth's democratic supporters are becoming disgusted with him, and charging that his usurpations are ruining their cause.

JAMES F. CASEY.

Casey was the collector of the port at New Orleans and brother-in-law of the President. How did it happen that he was interested about the vote of Louisiana? Who charged him to take part in that controversy, and for what purpose?

On the same day the marshal reported to the Attorney-General as follows:

Hon. GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General:

Governor Warmoth has been impeached by vote of 58 to 6. Warmoth's Legislature returned by his board has made no pretense of a session.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

The board referred to by him is the "Lynch board." It had no legal existence, and all it did was absolutely void. No one pretends to the contrary. Nevertheless, on the 9th of that month the persons whom this illegal board reported as elected, assembled in the State-house under the protection of the United States troops and organized what they called the Legislature. It was not a Legislature in any sense, for, first, the returns showed that other persons than themselves were elected members; and, secondly, no one having even color of authority, ascertained they were elected. But under the protection of the troops, this body, on the day of its first assembling, in violation of law, if it had been a Legislature, impeached Governor Warmoth and suspended his official functions, and at once inaugurated P. B. S. Pinchback, then lieutenant-governor, as governor.

On that day Marshal Packard telegraphed the Attorney-General as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, December 9, 1872.

Hon. GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General:

Senate, by vote of 17 to 5, have resolved into high court of impeachment. Senator Harris elected president of the senate, Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback being now governor.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

On the same day he sent this further telegram:

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1872.

Hon. GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.:

Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback qualified and took possession of the governor's office to-night. Senate organized as high court of impeachment, Chief-Justice Ludeling presiding, and adjourned to meet Monday next. It is believed that all the democrats, members of General Assembly, will qualify and take seats to-morrow.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

Now, this whole proceeding was without any sanction of law, and any one acquainted at all with the Constitution and laws knew it. It was plainly and palpably unlawful, and the Attorney-General could not help knowing the fact. And it is plain, moreover, that the United States did it by the unlawful use of the Army. There was no constitutional provision or provision of any statute that authorized such use of the Army.

On the same day that pretended Legislature passed the resolutions contained in the following telegram to the President:

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1872.

We have the honor to transmit to your excellency the following concurrent resolution of both houses of the General Assembly, and to request an early reply:

"Whereas the General Assembly is now convened, in compliance with the call of the governor, and certain evil-disposed persons are reported to be forming combinations to disturb the public peace, defy the lawful authority, and the State is threatened with violence; Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the President of the United States be requested to afford the protection guaranteed each State by the Constitution of the United States when threatened with domestic violence, and that the presiding officers of the General Assembly transmit this resolution immediately, by telegraph or otherwise, to the President of the United States.

"Adopted in General Assembly convened this 9th day of December, A. D. 1872.

"P. B. S. PINCHBACK,
Lieutenant-Governor, and President of the Senate.
"CHAS. W. LOWELL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives."

This, it seems, was intended to be a legislative call on the President to interfere to protect the State against insurrection. But even if this body had been a Legislature, it was not; it does not even suggest a state of insurrection, much less declare that there was. The same day Governor Pinchback, so called, also urged the President to furnish troops in compliance with the resolutions; and as a manifestation of his gratitude and a good consideration for services rendered immediately he rewarded each of the "Lynch returning board," except Lynch, with a lucrative office, and gave the latter's son an appointment.

The President then received these telegrams:

NEW ORLEANS, December 11, 1872.

President GRANT:

Parties interested in the success of the democratic party, particularly the New Orleans Times, are making desperate efforts to array the people against us. Old citizens are dragged into an opposition they do not feel, and pressure is hourly growing; our members are poor and adversaries are rich, and offers are made that are difficult for them to withstand. There is danger that they will break our quorum. The delay in placing troops at disposal of Governor Pinchback, in accordance with joint resolution of Monday, is disheartening our friends and cheering our enemies. If requisition of Legislature is complied with all difficulty will be dissipated, the party saved, and everything go on smoothly. If this is done, the tide will be turned at once in our favor. The real underlying sentiment is with us, if it can but be encouraged. Governor Pinchback acting with great discretion, as is the Legislature, and they will so continue.

JAMES F. CASEY,
Collector.

Hon. GEORGE H. WILLIAMS:

If President in some way indicate recognition, Governor Pinchback and Legislature would settle everything. Our friends here acting discreetly.

W. P. KELLOGG.

President GRANT:

Democratic members of Legislature taking their seats. Most, if not all, will do so in next few days. Important that you immediately recognize Governor Pinchback's legislature in some manner, either by instructing General Emory to comply with any requisition by Governor Pinchback under joint resolution of Legislature of Monday, or otherwise. This would quiet matters much. I earnestly urge this and ask a reply.

JAMES F. CASEY.

NEW ORLEANS, December 12, 1872.

President GRANT:

The condition of affairs is this: The United States circuit court has decided which is the legal board of canvassers. Upon the basis of that decision a Legislature has been organized with strict conformity with the laws of the State, Warmoth impeached, and thus Pinchback, as provided by the constitution, became acting governor. The chief justice of the supreme court organized the senate into a court of impeachment, and Associate Justice Tallifero administered oath to Governor Pinchback. The Legislature, fully organized, has proceeded in regular routine of business since Monday. Notwithstanding this, Warmoth has organized a pretended Legislature, and it is proceeding with pretended legislation. A conflict between these two organizations may at any time occur. A conflict may occur at any hour, and in my opinion there is no safety for the legal government without the Federal troops are given in compliance with the requisition of the Legislature. The supreme court is known to be in sympathy with the republican State government. If a decided recognition of Governor Pinchback and the legal Legislature were made, in my judgment it would settle the whole matter. General Longstreet has been appointed by Governor Pinchback as adjutant-general of State militia.

JAMES F. CASEY.

Let me here again impress on the Senate the important fact that this body was not a Legislature; the returns showed that it was not; and, besides, those who pretended to ascertain that its members were elected had not even color of authority to do so.

But it had been resolved to set up and maintain this usurping body. Hence the following telegram was sent by the Attorney-General:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 12, 1872.

Acting Governor PINCHBACK,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President as the lawful executive of Louisiana, and the body assembled at Mechanics' Institute as the lawful Legislature of the State and it is suggested that you make proclamation to that effect, and also that all necessary assistance will be given to you and the Legislature herein recognized to protect the State from disorder and violence.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

And accordingly the following order was sent to General Emory from the War Department:

WASHINGTON, December 14, 1872.

General W. H. EMORY, U. S. A.,
Commanding, New Orleans, Louisiana:

You may use all necessary force to preserve the peace, and will recognize the authority of Governor Pinchback.
By order of the President.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

It must be supposed that this important action was taken upon consideration, and that the President and Attorney-General well knew the facts upon which they were basing their action. Would they proceed lightly in a matter of such high moment? If so, they were not fit for their high stations. If they examined the facts, then they must have known that the whole movement was grossly unlawful and a naked usurpation, because it did not have even color of authority.

But if even it could be said they were at first imposed upon by treacherous and bad men, they had ample opportunity to correct their inadvertent errors; for on the 9th of December a quorum of the Legislature which was really elected, as the returns showed, and was so returned by the "De Feriet returning board," met. The President was acquainted with this fact and of the results of the elections. He received these telegrams:

NEW ORLEANS, December 11, 1872.

The President of the United States:

Under an order from the judge of the United States district court, investing James Longstreet, Jacob Hawkins, and others with the powers and duties of returning officers under State election law, and charging them with the duty of completing the legal returns and declaring the result in accordance therewith, those persons have promulgated results based upon no returns whatever and no evidence except ex parte statements. They have constructed a pretended General Assembly, composed mainly of candidates defeated at the election, and those candidates, protected by United States military forces, have taken possession of the State-house and have organized a pretended Legislature, which to-day has passed pretended articles of impeachment against the governor; in pursuance of which, the person claiming to be a lieutenant-governor, but whose term had expired, proclaimed himself acting governor, broke into the executive office under the protection of United States soldiers, and took possession of the archives. In the mean time the General Assembly has met at the city-hall, and organized for business with sixty members in the house and twenty-one in the senate, being more than a quorum of both bodies. I ask and believe that no violent action be taken and no force used by the Government, at least until the supreme court shall have passed final judgment on the case. A full statement of the facts will be laid before you and the Congress in a few days.

H. C. WARMOTH,
Governor of Louisiana.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, 12, 1872.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT,
President United States:

Claiming to be governor-elect of this State, I beg you, in the name of all justice, to suspend recognition of either of the dual governments now in operation here until there can be laid before you all facts, and both sides, touching legitimacy of either government. The people denying legitimacy of Pinchback government and its legislature simply ask to be heard, through committee of many of our best citizens on eve of departure for Washington, before you recognize the one or the other of said governments. I do not believe we will be condemned before we are fully heard.

JNO. MCENERY.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 12, 1872.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT,
President of the United States:

Sir: As chairman of a committee of citizens appointed under authority of a mass meeting recently held in this city, I am instructed to inform you that said committee is about leaving here for Washington to lay before you and the Congress of the United States the facts of the political difficulties at present existing in this State, and further earnestly to request you to delay executive action in the premises until after the arrival and hearing of said committee, which is composed of business and professional men without regard to past political affiliations.

THOMAS A. ADAMS,
Chairman.

These persons were not only entitled as a matter of official courtesy to be heard, but they had the constitutional right to be heard. The President was about to decide upon their rights as individuals and as representing a State of the Union. This high and sacred right was denied them and a whole people. Hear the cold, willful, and wicked reply to them. It is couched in the very language of despotism and is utterly unworthy of a high officer of state in a free republic. It is a striking manifestation of that spirit of usurpation and disregard of constitutional right and obligation which has for years past been stopping the vitality of free government in this country and which ought to alarm the whole people. Who will dare to say it was right in any view? Here it is; let me read it:

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
December 13, 1872.

Hon. JOHN MCENERY,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

Your visit with a hundred citizens will be unavailing so far as the President is concerned. His decision is made and will not be changed, and the sooner it is acquiesced in the sooner good order and peace will be restored.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

In view of these facts, can any fair mind doubt that the Administration had deliberately resolved from the beginning to establish this usurpation, and without regard to the right, uphold it by force? In the language of Judge Trumbull, of the committee who made the report—

The history of the world does not furnish a more palpable instance of usurpation than that by which Pinchback was made governor, and the persons returned by the Lynch board the Legislature of Louisiana; nor can a parallel be found for the unfeeling and despotic answers sent by order of the President to the respectful appeals of the people of Louisiana.

Without evidence, without hearing, and against the protest of those entitled, the President decided this grave question, and, in favor of one who had not the shadow of a right, established a bald usurpation and overthrew a State government.

When a citizen of this country attains to the exalted station of President, he ought not to consent to be a political partisan. He has no right to be a partisan. By his station and obligation, he is bound to know only the Constitution and laws of his country, and to exert himself to execute, preserve, protect, and defend them. These are his chief duties, and parties and all else ought to be subordinated to them. His ears, his heart, and his judgment should be forever closed against the suggestions, importunities, and wiles of designing and corrupt men. They should never for one moment be intrusted with the high powers of government which the people have confided to his sacred keeping and exercise. Sir, the sad and distressing history of Louisiana for the last two years makes manifest the fact, that the President has lent ear to evil and incompetent counsels and yielded to the false suggestions and unceasing importunities of little, contemptible politicians.

Now, sir, what was the plain duty of the President in the case presented by the troubles growing out of the Louisiana election in 1872? It seems to me very palpable that if the Administration had not encouraged Kellogg and his faction, there would have been no trouble; but suppose there had been in good faith such a controversy as that presented, the difficulty was comparatively easy of solution. By the Constitution and laws, the President is bound, upon proper application, to protect the State against insurrection, and to keep continued official relations with the State governments. In this case, McEnery and his associates insisted that they were respectively the true State officers and Legislature, and had been duly ascertained so to be according to the constitution and laws of Louisiana; and they insisted further that Kellogg and his associates were making insurrection. On the other hand, Kellogg and his associates insisted that they were respectively the true State officers and Legislature, and that McEnery and his associates were making insurrection. Each party applied to the President to afford the aid guaranteed by the Constitution to the States. Thus an issue was presented of the highest and most solemn moment, and one not to be treated lightly. It involved the integrity of the State and the peace, quiet, and prosperity of a whole people, and in great measure it involved the integrity of our system of government.

This is the case in which the Federal Government passes upon the State government. The President's decision in the case is subject to be reversed only by Congress. In such a case, how important that the President shall decide correctly; and to this end how essential that he shall have all the information bearing on the issue he can avail himself of. It was not in that case his duty to decide who was elected—that is not a question for him—but who were ascertained, according to the constitution and laws of Louisiana, to be elected governor and the other State officers and members of the Legislature. As soon as he learned that fact his decision was easy to be made. In making such a decision no party considerations or personal predilections ought to have been allowed to influence his judgment in the slightest degree. The integrity of the Government is worth more than parties, or the interests of public or private individuals. I venture to say, with perfect confidence, that this was the proper way and the only legitimate way to solve the question presented. Then, the President ought to have heard both sides of the controversy; he ought to have heard McEnery and his associates and Kellogg and his associates. But he peremptorily refused to hear McEnery and his friends; he did not hear the merits of the other side; he acted upon the loose, interested suggestions, false statements, and heated political clamor and importunities of Casey, Packard, Kellogg, Pinchback, and such folks, none of them, as the evidence shows, entitled to credit or respect.
